KITZMILLER.

Recent heavy and continuous rains have raised the Potomac—have raised the hopes of the farmers, and will result in raising better crops.

The Rosenbloom branch store is to be removed in a few weeks to Piedmont. Mr. Max Bennett, the manager, has made many warm personal friends here during the year he has been with us. It is understood that he will devote his future to chemistry, of which he has been a close student for some time. Success, Max, old boy.

Contractor Laugener has been handicapped somewhat by recent downpours of rain, but is pushing work on the new concrete sidewalk, extending from the First National Bank to the mill race, on Main street. Other street improvements are contemplated before unfavorable weather sets in.

A number of weddings are slated for the near future; and one charming young lady candidate for matrimony says there would be many more if the "boys were not so awfully backward about proposing."

The commodious new store building of Messrs Charles M. Wilson and Bro., on Bridge street, is being pushed to rapid completion, and will be ready for occupancy on or about October 1st. The building is two stories high, fifty by sixty feet in dimensions, and a portion of the upper story will be occupied by officers of the Potomac Valley Coal Company. Mr. Charles M. Wilson has been merchandising here for the past seven years—but avers that he has had forty years experience in that short space of time.

Candidates for the House of Delegates and the Shrievalty at the primary, have been coming thick and fast for some time. Bill Blobbs says "most on 'em be derfeeted ef they hain't sorty keerful."

Mr. Harry Gustkey, who has held down a clerkship in the mercantile establishment of Messrs. Charles M. Wilson & Bros. for the past year, is off for a month's vacation at Independence—that is, if he can possibly remain away from "her" that long.

Rev. Doctor Elmer Hoenshel, author of "My Three Days in Gilead," and of "By the Overflowing Nile," is billed for a lecture at the M. E. church, September 2d—"Where the Shamrock Grows;" and at the Union church, September 4th, where he will deliver "The Cruise of the Neptune." The Doctor has been accused of graphic word painting; and accessory, both before and after the fact, to perpetrating poetry, pathos and humor; and it is a foregone conclusion that the jury before whom he will be tried here on the above dates, will promptly render a verdict of "Guilty—as charged."

The Knights of the Holy Grail, a recent semi-religious organization here, was "outing" last week. The rain brought about their "inning." Sophie Jewett, of Wellesly College, has edited an exquisite little volume of Lord Tennison's "The Holy Grail," together with other exponents of the mystic subject. In James Russell Lowell's plot, the theme of the poem is expressed in part second—where the Leper, whom Sir Launfal feeds—is transfigured, and appears like the glorified Son of Man. It runs thus—as it appears in "Masterpieces of the World's Best Literature:"

'And a voice that was calmer than silence said,
"Lo! it is I, be not afraid!"
In many climes, without avail,
Thou hast spent thy life for the Holy Grail;
Behold it is here—this cup which thou
Didst fill at the streamlet for me but now;
* * * * * * * * *
Himself, his hungering neighbor and me."

"Sir Launfal awoke as from a swound:
'The Grail in my castle here is found!
Hang my idle armor up on the wall,
Let it be the spiders' banquet hall.
He must be fenced with stronger mail
Who would seek and find the Holy Grail.'"

A neschenche social event was "pulled off" a few evenings since at our neighboring town of Westernport. Among the delighted participants, your correspondent noticed, Miss Tora Offner, of Keyser; Miss Nan Kight, of Frostburg; Miss Beryl Abernathy, Miss Mae Abernathy, Dr. J. H. Shircliff, Mr. George Coffman, Mr. John Thrasher and Mr. H. W. Gustkey, all of Kitzmiller.

A little bird whispered to your correspondent this morning that there will be a wedding in the very near future that will deprive Kitzmiller of one of her most popular and highly esteemed young ladies. It is said that one of the many little towns on Georges Creek will be the gainer. ARJUNA.

HOYES.

We have had some of the heaviest rains of the season in this month, but fortunately the oats and hay crops were all gathered in good shape.

Mr. Robert Hutchinson and son Horace, of Johnstown, Pa., were visitors of William Callis and family for a week and returned to their home last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Willie Mattingly are happy over the arrival of a new daughter in their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Erbie Lantz, of Morgantown, spent a few days in Hoyes last week as guests of W. A. Smith and family.

Mrs. Sarah Friend returned to her home last Friday after making an extended visit to relatives at Mt. Lake Park and Oakland.

Quite a number of persons from Hoyes are attending Chautauqua at Mt. Lake Park this week. Among them are Mr. and Mrs. Will Frazee, Mrs. Joe Keller, Mrs. Thomas Bishoff, Mrs. Ella Loudermilk, Mrs. Anna Dewitt and family and Cecil Smith.

Wednesday of last week was the day of one of the old fashioned fishing parties at Sang Run by both old and young of the citizens of Hoyes, about fifty in all, dinner and supper were both served before the return trip was made. The dinner we think was good enough for a king and consisted of coffee, bread, butter, fried chicken, roast corn, tomatoes, plums, jellies, cakes, and too many delicacies to name. We feel assured all enjoyed themselves and are sorry to think this may be the last one of the season.

Some of our younger set who are fond of curios, went on an exploring expedition to Sang Run Cave one evening last week. We are sure they were well repaid for the trip as they gave quite a glowing account of it. Those of the party were Misses Oscie Casteel, Olia Enlow, Auburn Smith; Messrs. Horace Hutchinson, Burton Callis, Murray Stark and Earl Smith.

Prof. and Mrs. Joseph Rausch returned from their wedding tour last Saturday and will remain with Mrs. Rausch's parents a few days. While away they visited Cumberland, Cincinnati, Dayton, Ohio, and several other cities.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Dewitt, of Oakland, spent Saturday and Sunday in Hoyes with relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Asa Friend and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Custer are among the persons from this place who attended the picnic at Accident Saturday.

Mr. Harry Fowler, of Red House, was calling at M. Mattingly's Sunday evening.

Miss Freda Dewitt was a guest of Misses Sadie and Maud Spoerline, of Accident, Saturday and Sunday.

In Texas, the Kingdom of King Cotton

My two years experience in the "Kingdom of King Cotton" has taught me to look upon Texas as an unique state in many notable respects. Considered physically, educationally, economically, socially and especially "cottonically," the Lone Star State is more than unique.

In size, diversity of climate, variety of products, and magnitude of Democracy, Texas eclipses every other state in the Union. It is more than eight hundred miles from Texarkana to El Paso, and nearly as far from Amarillo to Brownsville. While you are crossing the state from east to west or from north to south, going at the same speed you could go from Oakland to Chicago, back to Oakland again, and still have almost an hour to drive over to the Park and back.

In climate we find a gradual gradiation from the blinding life-destroying blizzard that sweeps down from the Rocky mountains, across the Pan-handle and the Amarillian Plains, melting into mist as it approaches Fort Worth and Dallas, to the orange orchards, palm groves and perennial summer of Galveston, Corpus Christi and Brownsville. Crossing the state from east to west we pass from the region of the excessive rainfall of the lower Mississippi to the arid regions of Lubbock, Pecos and El Paso, where a good rain is as great a luxury as the election of a Democratic president.

The people of the eastern and central parts of the state look upon West Texas with about the amount of awe and fortune hunting romaniticism as our fathers a half century ago, looked upon Nebraska, Kansas and Oklahoma. Hundreds of families sell everything and settle in this pioneer section of the state. Most of them come back in a year or two penniless, especially if they have grown a crop of "bumblebee" cotton. If the first year or two is seasonable till the new settler gets established and can have enough ahead to tide him over a crop failure, he is likely to find farming in this section quite profitable, for when there is anything like a good crop the yield is enormous. The soil is very rich. It has never been leached of its plant-growing elements by too much rainfall or by the growing of useless vegetation. For the most part it is barren except for a sparsely-set sod in the early spring, and almost every known species of the cactus. Many of these grow to the height of several feet, and often form a wilderness hundreds of miles in extent. In these men and domestic beasts often lose their way and perish from thirst and hunger before they can be rescued. Game animals, especially the deer, are plentiful in these cactus forests, and sportsmen are about the first men to explore their prickly regions. The whole of the more thickly settled portion of the state is overrun with agents selling town sites in Western Texas. Usually these towns are to be built where some new railroad is to cross a river; and quite often both the town and the railroad are imaginary. In one instance four different agents were selling lots in "a new and thriving town" where a certain railroad crossed a certain river. Each town had a different name and location. When investigated, it was found that all four were fakes. None of the places existed. The railroad engineers themselves did not know where the line would cross the river. In another little town in the far west, a single location would be sold to as many as five persons. These agents will come to a town, hire a dray on which is hoisted a large canvas map of the imaginary site, then drive up and down the streets singing like madmen of the wonderful merits of the town in which they are sacrificing lots just for the special benefit of the people of the town they are parading.

All the land in West Texas is not to be laughed at. Where it can be irrigated either from the rivers or from artesian wells, it will produce equal to any soil in America. In some places a flowing well can be had at from seven to nine hundred feet. In a number of places, as in the case of Artisia, a thriving town with a prosperous farming region all about it springs up around a system of wells. The vicinity of Artisia leads the world for growing onions.

Texas boasts that she grows some of everything that America produces. This is probably true, but it is generally accepted that her one crop is cotton. Of Texas and her cotton, I hope to be able to write you in detail at some later date.

To convince my Garrett county friends that Texas Democracy is unique will not be a very hard task. One example will suffice. In the town in which my college is located there is but one Republican, and the citizens say they tolerate him only because he happens to be the grandson of General U. S. Grant. This, however, is an extreme case. In the large cities, especially Galveston and some of the northern cities, the other political parties poll a good many votes. G. N. STEYER.

Increase in Maryland's Coal Output.

The production of coal in Maryland in 1910 was 5,217,125 short tons, with a spot value of $5,835,058, according to statistics collected by the United States Geological Survey in co-operation with the Maryland Geological Survey. Maryland, like Virginia, benefited indirectly from the six month's strike among the miners in the Central or Mississippi Valley States. Owing to the shortage of fuel in the Western States a large amount of West Virginia coal, particularly from the southern part of the State, was diverted from the seaboard to the temporarily more profitable markets in the West. Profiting by this diversion, Virginia's production, shipped principally to Lambert Point piers near Norfolk, increased over 1,750,000 tons, or 37 per cent.

Maryland's coal production, which because of the approaching exhaustion of the famous "Big vein," had been showing a tendency for the past two years, and was also given an impetus by the trade conditions in 1910 and increased from that of 1909 by 1,193,884 tons, or 29.67 per cent. The value increased $1,363,327, or 30.5 per cent.

The coal mines of Maryland gave employment in 1910 to 5,809 men, who worked the unusually high average of 270 days, and although 97 per cent. of Maryland's tonnage is hand mined the average productive efficiency of the miners is considerably above the mean average for all the States. In 1910 the average production for each man employed was 898 short tons for the year and 3.33 tons for each working day. No labor troubles were reported in the coal mines of Maryland in 1910. The mines are operated 10 hours a day.

Although coal was discovered in the Georges Creek basin as early as 1783, the first eastern shipments from the Maryland coal district were not made until 1830, when small quantities were transported by barges down Potomac river. The first company was incorporated in 1836. After the construction of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, in 1842, and of the Chesapeake & Ohio canal, in 1850, the output from the Maryland mines increased rapidly.

Maryland and the adjoining counties in West Virginia which make up what is known as the Cumberland region constitute the only districts outside of the anthracite region of Pennsylvania where records of coal production have been kept from the earliest years. On deducting the total exhaustion from the original supply, it was found that at the close of 1907 there still remained in the coal fields of Maryland 7,802,000,000 tons, which is 1,400 the production of 1910 and over 900 times the exhaustion represented by that production.

VOLUME 35. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1911. NUMBER 26

THE HEALTHFUL AND BEAUTIFUL CITY OF OAKLAND

Last Sunday's Pittsburgh Post contained a page write-up of Oakland, profusely illustrated with views of all the public buildings, street scenes, etc., which we reproduce below:

Oakland, Md., is on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. It is in the extreme western end of the State, being twenty miles south of Pennsylvania and eight miles north and east of West Virginia. By rail Oakland is distant 12 hours from New York, 10 hours from Philadelphia, 6 hours from Wheeling, 11 hours from Cincinnati and 15 hours from Chicago.

Oakland is situated on a plateau about 2,500 feet above the sea level. This plateau extends from Altamont, summit of the railroad grade on the east, to Terra Alta, summit of the railroad grade on the west, a distance of 20 miles, the town is situated midway between the two. The breezes sweep over this plateau, but the mountain ridges which border it break the force of high winds and storms, such as are common in lowlands, are unknown.

The air always is stirring and on the warmest days in the summer there is a breeze. The singularly fine climate of Oakland—bracing, dry and soft air—is due not only to its elevation, but also to its location in the middle of this extensive plateau.

Oakland is the county seat of Garrett county, the largest in area and smallest in population per square mile, of the counties of Maryland. The town is regularly laid out, with streets running northeast to southwest and from northwest to southeast. The main streets are paved with brick or are macadamized. The sidewalks are of brick, stone or boards, generally the last. The little Youghiogheny river runs through the town and empties into the big Youghiogheny river about a mile to the northwest. Another small stream comes from the northeast and passes under the main street in the very center of the town and empties into the Little Yough, as it is locally called. The hillside upon which the houses are built dip toward these streams and there is natural drainage. Oakland dries up quickly after rain. The streets are lighted at night with arc electric lights and all the stores are equipped with incandescent electric lights and natural gas, so the town is bright by night as by day. The sentiment in favor of law and order is ruling and Oakland is peaceful.

Oakland has been a resort in summer for people from cities for many years. People who come, usually remain several weeks or the whole season, as cottage life is the rule rather than the exception. The hotels and boarding houses also have their guests and these stay here longer than do summer people elsewhere. The reason is that people do not come to Oakland for the amusements they can have at almost every place, but they come for the fresh, pure air, for rest, for out-of-door life, free from dust, noise and crowds. Oakland offers rest and quiet without isolation. A dozen or more families from cities regularly keep house in summer, finding it easy because the stores are good and supplies ample. Friends of theirs come to the boarding houses, hotels and cottages. There is a colony of summer people.

Oakland in summer is given over to out-of-door life. From early spring to to early summer there are trout to be caught in the mountain streams; later the bass come into the Youghiogheny river. Fishing has improved in recent years. There is, of course, not much shooting until fall, though woodcock occasionally are found. There are golf, tennis and baseball. Riding, driving and walking—because of the excellence of the roads and beauty of the scenery—are favorite forms of recreation. During August lectures, concerts and other entertainments are given morning, afternoon and night in the auditorium at Mountain Lake Park, distant one mile from Oakland.

Oakland air is its strongest claim as a summer resort. It is like a tonic. In it people feel well—life seems a pleasure. Sick children brought from cities revive in a few days. Oakland's accessibility is another claim. There are five express trains and two accommodation trains, or fourteen trains, both ways, daily. The express trains are through trains, carrying sleeping, dining and parlor cars. All trains stop at Oakland station, in which are express and telegraph offices. One can be out in the country at Oakland without being out of the world. Another claim for Oakland are its stores. Although a town of 2,000 inhabitants only, the stores would do credit to cities many times as large. Ladies in fashionable costumes, seated in carriages, with coachman and footmen, may be seen any summer day on shopping tours and and they can generally get what they want, as Oakland storekeepers have had this kind of trade many years. Finally, the charm of Oakland to some people is the variety of social life offered in and near it. At some summer resorts everybody dresses alike and does the same things. At Oakland one may put on the roughest clothes and spend the day in the forests which seems almost primeval; and in the evening, a few miles away, can mingle in society as gay and fashionable as is to be found anywhere, in brief, people who come to Oakland do not find their day's diversions cut out for them, but make their pleasures to suit themselves.

Oakland is best known as a summer resort because it offers such a decided change of climate from that of cities in hot weather and because most people take their vacations between June and September. Those who have remained in the mountains later have found the most enjoyable season between September 15 and November 15. In the early fall there are two or three cold days and nights, then a period of mild, dry weather sets in. The leaves on the trees have turned brilliant colors, the roads and lanes are dry, walking is easy, the bass in the rivers bite better, and the shooting season begins. Owing to its elevation Oakland air is dry and the same degree of cold is not felt so much as in places near sea level. If Oakland were close to a large city, it would be a winter, as well as a summer resort. Persons looking for a place in which to establish a residence for six or nine months of the year, spending the other months in the cities or travel, would do well to investigate the claims of Oakland One can leave Oakland after an early breakfast—or breakfast on dining car—and be in Washington in time for lunch and Philadelphia or New York in time for dinner. Leaving Oakland at night, one can reach Cincinnati or New York in time for breakfast the next morning. Oakland is nearer to New York than are the Adirondack mountain resorts.

The country around Oakland is the finest for farming that can be found anywhere in the United States, and offers exceptional opportunities for investments in agricultural, horticulture and trucking. Land yields as high as 72 bushels per acre, the average being about 30 bushels, which compares favorably with any section in the country. Yields of 100 bushels of oats, 70 bushels shell corn, 35 of barley, 45 bushels of buckwheat, 400 bushels of potatoes, five tons of timothy and clover hay, and seven tons of alfalfa to the acre are not unusual. Turnips, cauliflower and cabbage yield from $500 to $1,000 gross per acre.

Garrett county covers an area of 681 square miles, of which fully 200,000 acres are practically level and nearly the entire county is adapted to agricultural and horticultural pursuits. It is also an unusually fine grazing country and the supply of grain and hay is more than ample for the local demand, and large quantities are shipped both East and West. The dairy interests in the vicinity of Oakland show rapid growth and thousands of pounds of butter and and other dairy products are shipped to Baltimore and other points where they find reads market. Great opportunities are offered in this line of business.

Oakland is not at present a manufacturing town, unexcelled natural advantages will make it such in a very few years. It has an abundant water supply, natural gas, coal deposits, glass sand, lime stone, building stone, fire clay, Koalin, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile clay and shale.

The building contracts completed within the past year amount to over $75,000, furthermore a complete water and sewerage system has been installed which makes the town modern in every respect. The county has also recently erected a court house, sheriff's residence and jail at a cost of $135,000. This group of buildings is a credit to any community. It is entirely fireproof and is equipped with every modern appliance.

Several different religious denominations have built beautiful churches in which to hold their services. The educational advantages offered in Oakland are such as to make many larger towns ashamed. They have a graded public school under competent teachers and instructors. There is also a normal and training school during the summer months. Eleven months' schooling can be obtained if so desired. Oakland would be an idesl location for a boy or girl's academy.

Oakland is one of the wealthiest towns of its size in the East. There are two National banks which have a combined capital and surplus of $275,000. A thing that impresses the stranger on his first visit to Oakland is the way in which the merchants display their goods and the artistic advertising matter which they hand you.

There are numerous automobiles owned by the people of this town. In fact, they are the rule rather than the exception. From all points farmer are seen coming to town in their machines, and there are a number of them who do their hauling by motor power.

Great opportunity is offered in Garrett county for commercial fruit orchards, as is proven by the yield and surety of crops as well as quality of fruit found in the various farm orchards of this vicinity. Apples from this county at a recent meeting of the State Horticultural Society of Maryland, held in Baltimore, Md., carried off every first prize and fruit from the same section exhibited at Council Bluffs, Ia., during the meeting of the International Horticultural Expoeition were awarded more than half of the first prizes. The remainder of the prizes were distributed throughout 15 different States. The people of Garrett county are justly proud with the distinction awarded them, and show their progressive spirit by calling your attention to their products, but not in a boastful manner.

The size and quality of the fruit grown in Garrett county far surpasses that grown in the much boasted and advertised section of the upper Potomac and Shenandoah valleys. A remarkable feature of these apple crops is the fact that the apples of this district have practically grown themselves as the trees have not been sprayed nor has any special attention been paid them. A fact worthy of fruit growers' notice is that the much dreaded San Jose scale is unknown in Garrett county.

There is every reason to believe that the Confluence and Oakland Railway, which is now extended from Confluence along the Youghiogheny River to within 6 miles of Oakland, will in a short time be completed through to Oakland. When this is done it will establish a direct line between Oakland and Pittsburgh with a running schedule of three and one-half hours. This will open a rich coal field and other mineral deposits which have heretofore been inaccessible.

Garrett county has never been known to have a case of malaria. Typhoid

The Story of Lot

By Rev. Stephen Paulson

TEXT.—God delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked, for that righteous man dwelling among them vexed his righteous soul day to day with their unlawful deeds.—2 Peter 9:7.

These words bring before us the story of a man who was anxious to be rich. Let us recall the story and see what his overpowering desires for riches led him into. Lot was associated with Abraham from the first move from Ur of the Chaldees. With Abraham he tarried at Haran, and went down into Egypt, and returned from Egypt. But to be perfectly fair, Lot should be considered apart from Abraham. A face that is comely may suffer by comparison with one that is beautiful. So the character of Lot suffers by comparison with Abraham, and we will take him by himself. That he was a just man we have on the authority of the New Testament.

Crises do not make character, they only reveal it. A crisis came in the affairs of Lot. He and Abraham had grown to such wealth in flocks that they could no longer dwell together. So Abraham took him upon a high eminence and told him to choose any locality where he wished to dwell. And here it is that Lot's character is brought out in its true colors. He thinks he has the chance of his life. No consideration of Abraham enters his mind. He gets where he can look over the land, and then he chooses.

What did he choose?

"Then Lot chose him all the plain of Jordan and Lot journeyed east; and they separated themselves one from the other. Abraham dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom."

He chose the well-watered plain in the valley of the Jordan because it was rich and like Egypt. He had never forgotten Egypt, with its great cities and wealth, out of his heart. He saw that in the plain were cities, centers of commerce, where men were making money fast. The only consideration that entered his mind was his own personal advantage.

You notice that it said that Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom. Why not "within Sodom?" Because he knew perfectly well that Sodom was a wicked city, that the people of that city dishonored the God whom he wished to serve. So he did not feel right about going into the city, but he would get near it for the material advantage it would mean to him.

But let us see what happened. In the fourteenth chapter of Genesis we read that Lot is living in the city, and he has become an important man. "Lot sat in the gate." He had become a chief magistrate, an administrator of justice, and one who extended the hospitality of the city to strangers. What a wonderful case of success. Was he not right that day he made his choice? Try him by the business standards of today. Look at Abraham. He is still pitching his tents up and down the hills and valleys, and that is all he has amounted to.

But let us not be hasty in our eulogy. Let us get all the facts. Lot had become wealthy, and he had position, but what had it all done for him? A ray of light is thrown on the story by our New Testament. We learn that Lot "vexed his righteous soul from day to day." Is that a condition to live in? He was living among people who did not observe common decency. But you know, all his property was there, and he could not get away. When men were saying, "How well Lot is getting along," he never had an hour's peace.

But what had Lot's wealth and success done for his children? Would not they be well brought up and well provided for? You know the awful story of corruption and sin that came out of that life. One evening two angels came and warned Lot of the doom that was coming upon the city:

"And the men said unto Lot, Hast thou here any besides? Sons-in-law, and thy sons, and thy daughters, and whatsoever thou hast in the city, bring them out of this place: for we will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the Lord; and the Lord hath sent us to destroy it. And Lot went out, and spake unto his sons-in-law, which married his daughters, and said, 'Up, get you out of this place; for the Lord will destroy this city.' But he seemed as one that mocked unto his sons-in-law."

That shows the influence he had over his family. Next morning when he fled the city, only his wife and two daughters accompanied him.

Let me point out just one lesson of this story. There is success that ends in failure. Man can do a great deal without God. You may acquire wealth and position without God, and men may flatter you. But after all, what good is it? There will be no peace of mind, no abiding happiness, and your wealth and power will never accomplish any good purpose. It is right to desire success, but if you leave God out of the question it will end in failure.

So when you are planning your own life, or choosing the life-work of your children, your first consideration should be whether you and they can serve God in the calling which you have chosen, and remember that "godliness is profitable for the life that now is, and for that which is to come."

INDUCES CRAVING FOR DRINK

Well-Known English Eye Specialist Advances New Reason for Whisky Habit in Poor Eyes.

It is a queer theory which is now being put forward in explanation of drunkenness. If you suffer from eye-strain—astigmatism—you run the risk of becoming a victim of the whisky habit unless an eye specialist is consulted and glasses obtained to suit the defective sight.

"Very many people who think their eyes are quite all right are really astigmatic," a well-known English eye specialist declares, "and take no steps to remedy the defect. The result is that they suffer from mental and physical exhaustion, culminating in intense headaches, and often leading to a nervous breakdown.

"They find by experience that nothing alleviates these symptoms so quickly as brandy, and, when the pain becomes excessive, or the inability to work properly gets almost insuperable, they drink brandy, usually with soda water. When the effect of the brandy wears off there is a reaction, and the symptoms recur with greater violence, and more of the spirit is taken.

"As time goes on a greater quantity is needed to stimulate the system up to working point, and at last you get to that state when a man can only do business successfully when under the influence of alcohol.

"That state, of course, does not last, for in due sequence chronic alcoholism has made the eye-strain sufferer unfit for anything but a course of hospital treatment, and he is never the same man again. And not for one moment has the eye-strain been relieved, though the results have been evanescently deadened.

"What should have been done, of course, was to consult an oculist, who would have given a prescription for spectacles. Then the victim would have found himself able to work well and only get healthily tired at the end of the day.

"The fault very often lies not in the individual eyes, but in their inability to focus properly together. The focusing muscles in their effort to remedy this are strained, and in consequence give rise to general fatigue.

"I have had one interesting case in point. A professional man, whose work demanded mental concentration, and who suffered from astigmatism, became so ill that he had to undergo an operation.

"Surgically this was a success, but he did not recover at all well as regards his general health, and the medical man who attended him could not say why he was so slow.

"The man in six months was, however, in his opinion, fit enough to return to work. But he was attacked frequently by fits of nervous exhaustion, found brandy relieved them, and, at last, took to carrying a flask of the spirit to banish them.

"Luckily for him, his doctor at last noticing his eyes looked strained and suspecting trouble there, sent him to have his eyes examined, when it was found that he had to wear glasses. Now that he does so he is exuberantly healthy and feels no need for spirits."

INCREASE IN NATION'S DRINK

Of Distilled Spirits 165,000,000 Gallons Consumed, 30,000,000 More Than Last Year.

Simultaneously with the announcement that our total population in the home-land and its colonies has passed the 100,000,000 mark, comes another official announcement which causes a thrill of a different character. According to the figures of the internal revenue bureau, the fiscal year lately ended has been marked by the largest consumption of liquors ever known in this country. Of distilled spirits 165,000,000 gallons have been consumed, being 30,000,000 more than last year. During the same time, 59,485,117 barrels of fermented liquor have been consumed, being an increase of 3,000,000 barrels. For many years we have been gathering to ourselves a vast foreign population. For the last half decade, our annual immigration has averaged three-quarters of a million at the port of New York alone. This big army of newcomers has brought with it the drinking customs of the old world, and it will not be until the second generation that they can be hopefully converted to the modern scientific temperance view. Another cause of the increase is that our government still allows liquor to be carried into and through "dry" states, regardless of the will of the people, thus spreading the evil of intemperance.

These figures, startling though they are, need give no cause for discouragement. The increase, as we have shown, is more apparent than real. The fact remains, and should not be forgotten, that nearly 40,000,000 of our population are living under temperance laws of their own voluntary enactment—a larger number than ever before. Thus, though the evil itself grows, the remedy grows at a still more rapid rate. Scientific education in our schools concerning the nature and effects of alcohol must be pushed vigorously in all the states. Our churches and temperance organizations get together and work harmoniously for this common end.

LORD OF FENS FOUGHT HERE

The little market town of Tattershall near Boston in Lincolnshire can boast of many objects of historic interest both in the town itself and in the surrounding neighborhood. Not the least interesting of these is the picturesque old castle, around which are woven many romantic stories of Cromwellian days. The castle was rebuilt in the fifteenth century by the lord high treasurer, Cromwell, and contains a magnificently-carved fireplace, an exact replica of which is reproduced in the houses of parliament. It suffered considerably in the civil war about the time that Gainsborough and Lincoln fell into the hands of the royalists, who were routed by Oliver Cromwell, "the Lord of the Fens," in 1643. Tattershall can boast of a very fine park containing two Roman camps, to which many visitors are attracted.

BEES SWARM IN HER BONNET

A singular circumstance occurred recently at Avon, N. Y. A Mrs. Baker was in her garden, when suddenly she heard a buzzing in the air, and upon looking up saw a swarm of bees coming directly toward her. She stood still and the whole swarm alighted on her sun bonnet. With due presence of mind Mrs. Baker removed the bonnet, placed it on a stick, took the bees to a hive and secured them without assistance.

AN ENGINE GETS ARRESTED

A sensational arrest has been made at Bordeaux, France. A short time ago several acres of forest were laid waste by a fierce fire. Enquiries led the authorities to believe that the guilty party was a locomotive which emitted sparks on its way through the forest. Consequently the examining magistrate of Bordeaux was instructed to arrest the engine, and duly armed with a warrant he went forth and read the warrant in front of the throbbing monster and arrested it on a charge of arson. He then wheel-cuffed it—in other words, put the seals on it—without any resistance from the prisoner. The locomotive has now to stand trial before a jury of experts, who will decide whether the accused party is in proper working order, and whether or not it is guilty of a transgression of the regulations laid down with regard to the working of railway engines.

ICE CHEAP IN PERSIA.

The fact that ice is plentiful and cheap makes living in Persia more pleasant than it would otherwise be, and the fact that it can be obtained at all is indicative of the ingenuity of the people of the country. The ground is so porous that water percolates through quickly. There are therefore few rivers or lakes from which ice can be obtained, and it is seldom so cold in any part of Persia that ice of a thickness suitable for packing would form under the direct rays of the sun. The Persian obtains his ice by making a shallow pool and building a high wall which will protect it from the sun. A thin layer of ice will form; this he floods at night with water, and so he goes on adding inch to inch until he can cut a block of considerable thickness.

MAKES ITS OWN WIG.

There is a small crab found upon the English coast that is so afraid of his enemies that he has found out, or has perhaps been taught, a clever way to hide himself. The writer once saw one of these crabs which was kept as a pet, and he was lucky enough to visit him when he was in the very act of making his wig. The crab first tore off a piece of green ribbon-like seaweed with his pincers and put one end in his mouth.

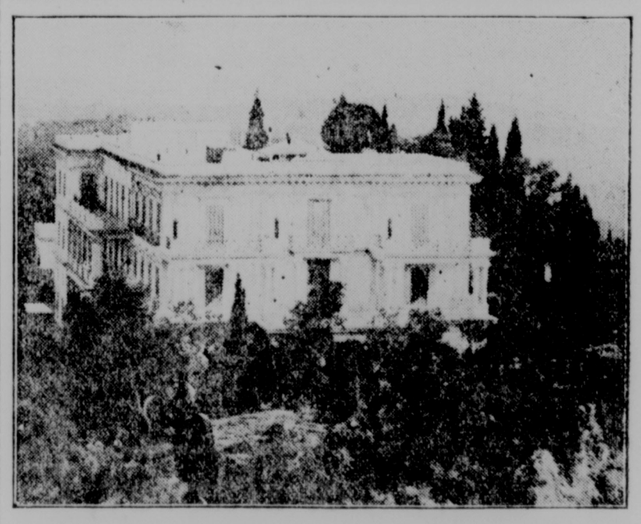
This he sucked and nibbled and moistened with some kind of glue that hardens under water, and then he pressed the sticky end upon his back. By and by his broad back was covered with a regular green and waving wig so that as he crawled about he looked like a bunch of seaweed in gentle motion. We must suppose that he makes a very sweet mouthful for a hungry fish, and that he makes the wig to preserve him from being gobbled up. From time to time the wig requires repairing, of course.

FRECKLES ARE HIS PETS.

To indulge his unusual pastime of raising freckles, Dr. Harold Gifford, an Omaha oculist, has become a "freckle farmer" and transfers patches of skin with the little brown spots from one part of his body to the other.

Freckles are his pets and he likes to graft them in fancy designs about his body. He told the Nebraska Medical association he had been experimenting with them since 1901, and that with only a few freckles and his razor he could have a perfectly lovely time.

FAMILY TREASURE HUNT.



Some people don't believe in banks. One of these was James T. Burge of Springfield, Mo., an inventory of whose estate, valued at $60,680, was filed the other day. Most of the property is cash and notes, and was found, after much searching by members of the family, secreted behind door jambs, inside secret table drawers and beneath false desk tops. The gold, which he had hoarded for many years filled a water bucket.

QUEER MONUMENTS IN CHINA

Near the famous tombs of the Chinese emperors at Nankin stand a number of most curious monuments. They are in the shapes of camels and elephants, and are carefully protected from vandals by railings.

Palace of Kaiser On Corfu

On Corfu, the largest of the Ionian islands in the Mediterranean, is the magnificent Achilleion palace, owned by Emperor William of Germany. It stands on the hill of Gasturi, five miles from the city of Corfu, and was built for Empress Elizabeth of Austria, who was murdered in Genoa. It is said the kaiser finds this palace something of a white elephant because of the great expense of maintenance and repairs.

MODEL FRUIT RANCH IN THE SOUTHWEST

A FAR FLUNG ORCHARD

It is not too much to say that the American apple,—yellow or green or rosy, but rich and mellow, always,—is the most widely known and most highly esteemed product of Uncle Sam's domain in the estimation of the great majority of the people over seas. We hear much talk of the extent to which American inventions and utilities have won their way around the world, and it is literally true. All up and down the highways of the earth we find strange people using Yankee safety razors and kodaks and enjoying the music of American-made phonographs. But after all it is the American apple which has done more than anything else to carry conviction as to what a bounteous realm is this premier republic of the new world.

And, speaking of the apple, it must not be supposed that any measure of its prestige is due to the mere fact that it is a food, whereas some of the other things which we export to the tune of millions of dollars a year are luxuries, pure and simple. The United States is food purveyor to the world with other eatables than the luscious products of our orchards. Why if it were not for our wheat and corn, for instance, half of Europe would go hungry just as were it not for our cotton, thousands of employes of foreign cotton mills would go idle. But with all due respect to these facts it may yet be declared that the American apple is in a class by itself. The old world owes her tobacco and her potatoes to the new world, likewise, but these she has succeeded in transplanting to her own soil. For the appetizing apple at its best, however, she must still come to the land of the Stars and Stripes.

There does not seem to be a very clear record of just when the American export trade in apples had its beginnings, but probably it began on a small scale almost as soon as the lovers of the good things of earth discovered what a precious boon is the mealy sphere with its refreshing, thirst-quenching propensities. The lands over seas have acquired their enthusiasm for American apples partly because they have already had the best grade of the fruit served to them. There are two explanations of this. On the one hand there is the consideration that only a good grade of apple of certain varieties has the keeping quality to permit of its exportation,—a transfer that means that weeks and more likely months must intervene between the time the apples are picked in America and the time they are eaten under foreign skies.

The second consideration, and it is equally important, in its influence, is that the sale of American apples abroad, extensive as it is, is for the most part to people who can afford to pay for such delicacies. The poorest classes in Europe eat the yields of our wheat and corn fields and if we could not sell our wheat and corn at reasonable prices, they would be obliged to pass them by and eat rice or some other food staple that could be obtained at prices within their means. With apples, however, the situation is very different. The fancy varieties that find way to alien shores, each apple neatly wrapped in its individual piece of paper, must perforce demand good prices and consequently thus far the only sale is among the wealthy or well-to-do. Perhaps, some day, if the craze for apple growing continues, we shall be producing so many apples of the poorer grades that our orchardists will in self-defense have to seek a market abroad for the poorer or at least the cheaper grades of apples.

When one is told that you are required to pay as high as twenty or twenty-five cents apiece in London and on the Continent for those huge red apples that have brought fame to the Pacific Northwest, you have a new explanation of the prices ranging from $2,500 to $10,000 per acre which are demanded for bearing orchards in this favored fruit land. The chances are that in the eyes of the average foreign apple-eater, Niagara Falls does not rank higher as an American wonder than the Hood River Valley in Oregon, the Wenatchee, the Yakima and other districts from the five acre and ten acre fruit farms of which come the winesaps and other varieties of apples that compel the most conservative European epicure to concede that America must be a wonderful place after all.

But it would be a great mistake to convey the impression that it is only the apples from Oregon and Washington which are freighted over land and sea to win praises in foreign tongues. The greatest apple shipping port in the world is Watsonville, California, and countless apples have gone forth as silent missionaries from the great orchards of the middle west and particularly from the Ozarks which long ago attained a proud position as a fountain head of the stream of apples that annually overspreads the world. The most famous apple growing region in the east,—the picturesque Albemarle highlands of old Virginia—is likewise a heavy contributor to the larders of moneyed foreigners. From this historic section of the Old Dominion come the famous Albemarle pippins which bring prices ranging up to $10 a barrel and which are such favorites in England that the tight little isle takes the lion's share of the crop. This is the apple which was so favored by the late Queen Victoria and which is likewise the especial favorite of Britain's new king.

Since this country has assumed the role of purveyor of apples to the civilized world, a great change has taken place in the methods of harvesting the choicer grades of apples. No more is there resort to the old hap-hazard method of detailing one boy to climb the tree and shake the limbs while other lads gathered from the ground the fruit which, in all too many cases, was more or less damaged by the fall. Nowadays when keeping qualities are as desirable as flavor in an apple, each apple is picked at its prime,—that is when it has attained perfection of color, but before it has commenced to grow mellow,—and is carefully packed in box or barrel from which it will emerge in perfect condition after months of cold storage.

It was because of the difficulty of obtaining apples that had been packed with extreme care that many large buyers,—particularly those buying for foreign markets,—some years ago inaugurated the practice of buying the apples on the trees and themselves attending to the picking and shipment. The plan has proven so satisfactory to both growers and buyers that it has been paid for the fruit "on the trees" in a single orchard. Of course, the grower does not get as large a lump sum as he would for the packed apples, but his net return is as great or greater and he saves himself no end of trouble and worry and controversy. The apple buyer who purchases an apple crop on the trees in this fashion may bring in his own expert pickers to harvest the fruit or he may merely employ the labor in the neighborhood.

It is sometimes declared that a considerable portion of the American people has to put up with what are, in effect, second-grade apples, while the proudest products of our orchards go scooting past our doors enroute to castles and hotels and mansions beyond the Atlantic. Of course, this is true, only in a measure. Immense quantities of all the high-priced varieties of American apples are consumed right here at home, although it may be admitted that the bulk of the supply for the populous eastern cities comes from the orchards of New York, New England and other districts that are close at hand. But, by the way, it may be added that the apple-growing industry in New England is taking a great "brace" as regards the quality of the fruit produced. Stony hillsides, particularly in Connecticut, are, under the advanced methods of cultivation, being made to yield heavy crops of huge delicious apples and if this sort of thing keeps on the time is coming when New England apples will vie in the markets of the world with the prize specimens from the west coast.

A noticeable characteristic of the American apple growing industry in all sections of the country is found in the immense numbers of people who are entering the field. There seems to be something of a general mania to take up fruit raising which exceeds in extent the stampede of a few years ago to get into the poultry-raising business. A good many of the newcomers have had little experience in fruit raising, or indeed in farming of any sort and those who are laboring, as many of them are, under the delusion that fruit-raising is an "easy money" proposition requiring neither experience nor hard work, would seem doomed to a rude awakening. On the other hand many of the men who have lately taken up apple raising as a serious business are shrewd business men of energy and determination who will win out in the end, even if they do stumble a few times at first. What is more, a number of them have the capital back of them to stick at the game and this is important inasmuch as the apple industry is liable to prove a waiting game,—not only with young trees which have not reached the bearing stage but also to some extent with mature orchards when a late frost or other inauspicious conditions may ruin a crop and allow the grower no chance for a profit until a full year hence.

Some of the apple growers have expressed fear within the past year or two that this immense influx of apple producers will serve to in time glut the market and force down prices. The best-posted authorities, however, take little stock in any dire predictions in this direction. They point out that not only is apple consumption bound to have a natural increase proportionate to the growth in the population of the country, but, more significant still is the circumstance that the American people are learning to make more extensive use of this supremely healthful fruit, serving it in a variety of new forms which will make the fruit what is ought to be,—a staple on every American table.

KING AND HIS PEOPLE

Most members of the royal family have had from time to time many interesting and amusing adventures when going about in disguise. They are able to escape for a little while from the rigid etiquette and ceremony that normally surround them, and to enjoy a degree of freedom very welcome to them.

King George as prince of Wales had many adventures in different parts of London in various disguises, which enabled his majesty to obtain a close insight into the different phases of life among many of his subjects, Pearson's Weekly says.

One of the most interesting adventures King George has had in disguise was a visit his majesty paid to a big railway goods yard some years ago on an occasion when there was an enormous pressure of heavy goods traffic. The king, then duke of York, went to the yard at 11 p. m., accompanied by a member of the royal household. Both were dressed in the garb of working men who were waiting in the yard until midnight on the chance of being taken on for the night shift if the work was specially heavy.

Only a few of the railway officials were aware that the heir to the throne was standing among the squad of hungry men eagerly and anxiously waiting the arrival of the foreman, who might pick out some of the most robust among them to aid in shifting the mountain of goods from the trucks to the clearing sheds during the night.

For nearly an hour the prince watched the work proceeding in the big yard under the white glare of the arc lamps with immense interest, and chatted to the men about him, entering thoroughly into the spirit of their rough but good humored chaff. A few minutes before midnight one of the railway officials who was aware of the presence of the prince came up to his royal highness and stood by him. A minute later the foreman arrived and after casting a searching glance over the squad before him, proceeded slowly to pick out a dozen men, who were then marched off to work.

The rest walked out of the yard except the prince and his companion, who were escorted out a little while later by the railway official. The latter had stood by his royal highness in case the foreman should have selected him for the night shift. The foreman was not informed of the identity of the prince, but had simply been instructed not to take on the two men beside whom the railway official was standing.

Some years after her marriage the queen made a series of expeditions about the east end of London, visiting all the poorest quarters as an ordinary lady visitor, her guide frequently being the present bishop of London.

The queen also a little while later visited the poorest quarters of Birmingham, Manchester and Liverpool in the guise of a nursing sister, which enabled her majesty to go to the worst quarters of these towns with little fear of being subjected to any rough or unpleasant treatment, for the sisters are almost invariably treated with respect even by the roughest characters in these localities.

TORPEDO FISH LIKE A SKATE.

But the Electric Ray Carries Its Own Storage Battery.

A recent addition to the division of fishes in the new national museum in Washington has proven one of the most interesting specimens in the entire collection, according to the Philadelphia Public Ledger. It is the electric ray, known in the language of the scientists as the Narcine brasiliensis, harmless enough as to name, but capable of repelling its enemies in a manner peculiarly its own, which gives it its common title of the "torpedo" fish.

The electric ray is of the skate variety, with a broad, flat, nearly oval head and body, and a tail something like that possessed by the majority of well-known fishes. Its mouth is on the under side and it can only feel the way to it when feeding. But the real curiosity about this fish is the fact that it carries its own storage battery with it on all its wanderings and that it has the power of recharging the thousands of little cells when they become exhausted, using its power over and over again. There are really two batteries. They are located where one would naturally expect to find the breathing apparatus of the fish, to the right and the left of the beady black eyes and back. They are kidney shaped, occupying perhaps one-third of the upper part of the body.

When at peace with itself and the rest of the world the torpedo fish swims around at leisure or rests in shallow water, burrowing in the sand at ease, but if attacked the battery is discharged and the enemy is glad to call it a drawn battle if it can swim away. It gets its prey by using its batteries to supply the necessary current to kill, but it must first complete a connection with the object of its attack. Men have speared these torpedos in shallow waters and have caught them in nets, but on handling them have been very glad to let them go and avoid further shock. Fishermen have been repeatedly knocked down by a contact with them. The species is common along the south Atlantic and gulf coast.

DIVISION OF LABOR.

There were points of resemblance between Mrs. Hammond and the lilies of the field; she had married a young man with a good salary, but she herself had never earned a penny in her life, nor had she been blessed with well-to-do parents.

"We have a joint account in the National Fountain bank," she announced to one of her friends, when she had been married a few months. "It is such fun to pay bills by check."

"What do you mean by a joint account?" asked the incredulous friend. "Do you put in equal sums?"

"Oh, I don't put in any," said Mrs. Hammond. "Will puts it in and I draw it out."

PHILADELPHIA FINDS GREATEST THING ON EARTH

Read what this man says. After using only two cakes of Resinol Soap and one-half jar of Resinol Ointment he cured sores and eruptions of long standing.

"I had a very sore face, and after trying most everything I thought I would try your Soap and Ointment. After using two cakes of Soap and part of a jar of Ointment I found them to be the greatest thing on earth. I advise all those who suffer from any skin disease to use Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment. I am glad to say that my skin is nice and clear and I intend to use Resinol Soap as long as I can get it.

"T. K. MATHIEU, Philadelphia, Pa."

It is evident that common sense requires everybody everywhere to have on hand, ready for immediate use, the one standard remedy for all skin troubles. It is Resinol Ointment, put up in screw-top opal containers and selling at fifty cents or a dollar, according to size. This ointment should occupy a prominent place in every bathroom, on every medicine shelf and in every traveling bag, that it may be ready for immediate use. Resinol Ointment does not contain a particle of lead or mercury or other poison. It is absolutely non-irritant, and cannot injure the most delicate skin. It is highly recommended by physicians and nurses. For years Resinol Ointment has remained the standard remedy, noted for its effectiveness and complete harmlessness. It is sold by druggists everywhere.

IN THE COURTROOM.

She—Who are those young men with books under their arms?

He—Students. They are taking up the law.

She—What's that old man in the big chair back of the desk doing?

He—He's laying it down.

Dying by Organs.

It has been discovered that if a human being dies after an ordinary illness and not a violent death he does not die all over and all at once. He may have a diseased liver, heart or lung, and this may be the cause of his death; but it has been found that if the diseased organ could have been replaced by a healthy one life might have been maintained indefinitely. This is no imagination or speculation. It has been confirmed by the most careful experiments by the ablest medical scientists in the country.—Leslie's Weekly.

Held the Records.

After each had related several feats of endurance and hardihood, one of them remarked that her husband had on one occasion dived under the water and remained down for fully two minutes, without coming up to take breath.

"Oh," said the other, "that is nothing. My first husband dived below the water five years ago, and has not yet come up to breathe.

STRONGER THAN MEAT

A Judge's Opinion of Grape-Nuts.

A gentleman who has acquired a judicial turn of mind from experience on the bench out in the Sunflower State writes a carefully considered opinion as to the value of Grape-Nuts as food. He says:

"For the past 5 years Grape-Nuts has been a prominent feature in our bill of fare.

"The crisp food with the delicious, nutty flavor has become an indispensable necessity in my family's everyday life.

"It has proved to be most healthful and beneficial, and has enabled us to practically abolish pastry and pies from our table, for the children prefer Grape-Nuts, and do not crave rich and unwholesome food.

"Grape-Nuts keeps us all in perfect physical condition—as a preventive of disease it is beyond value. I have been particularly impressed by the beneficial effects of Grape-Nuts when used by ladies who are troubled with face blemishes, skin eruptions, etc. It clears up the complexion wonderfully.

"As to its nutritive qualities, my experience is that one small dish of Grape-Nuts is superior to a pound of meat for breakfast, which is an important consideration for anyone. It satisfies the appetite and strengthens the power of resisting fatigue, while its use involves none of the disagreeable consequences that sometimes follow a meat breakfast." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Mr. J. B. Emory Thanks His Friends.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Through the medium of THE REPUBLICAN I desire to express to the Republican voters of the county my sincere appreciation of the honor bestowed upon me at the primary election on August 29th, when they placed me in nomination for the office of county treasurer. I most heartily thank the Republicans throughout the county for the generous support they accorded me and I shall do my utmost throughout life to prove myself worthy of the confidence thus manifested. Trusting that I may have the undivided support of the Republican party at the November election, I remain your humble fellow-citizen,

J. B. EMORY.

Bittinger, Sept. 4th, 1911.

To the Editor of The Republican:

In Swanton, Friday, September 1st, 1911, was lively rejoicing among the youthful generation and proportionate happiness among the more matured ones.

The Anderson Chapel Protestant Episcopal Sunday school dedicated the day to its fullest freedom in the open and with that settled intent, in the first hours of the afternoon the school, mustering about forty in number, gathered on the grounds of its Superintendent for a holiday outing. Ice cream, cake, fruits, and many plays with "sportive tricks" interspersed to meet the taste and enlived the spirits of the young—it was their day and time, and those who were of quiet mien and sober temper unlimbered their dignity in the general relaxation of the occasion. Later in the afternoon the school, with many of it friends, followed Mr. William W. Shearer, who conducted a service for the children particularly, but bright and delightful for all present. The procession to the chapel was one well calculated to attract attention and excite admiration. A line of Sunday school children bearing flowers entered the church and as they passed in order left their fresh offerings about the chancel rail. So many young voices in the singing and responses of the service lent a charm unusual and beautiful. The Chapel devotions were peculiarly impressive as they were known to be the last before severing the existing relations between this parish and Mr. Shearer who has not only for several years labored fruitfully among us but to an extraordinary degree beloved by many and admired by all.

Well, the first election in conformity with the recently adopted primary law has left its actuality for good or bad on Maryland's record. In it we have, at least, a wholesome release from the farce of old conventions which, generally speaking, sent its machine creatures to Baltimore merely to hear a polite little product of the larger State machine declare, while rubbing his hands with cordial pretensions, "All has been agreed upon, but you can walk out with the Committee on Credentials, and you with the Committee on Rules, but no mental strain at all will be imposed upon you as the papers have been written out by kind friends." The writer has not only seem it but experienced the rush of blood in so debasing a position. Thanks to an aroused public sentiment the sun of that day has at last dipped under a popular condemnation. But it smacks no little of the irony of that the author and framer of the Primary Enactment, a patriotic legislator and a blameless gentleman, should fall the victim in the State under the initial test of the operations of his own law and method. Some of the many cogs of the new machinery may yet catch or jar in the working of the system, but a little legislative tinkering prudently applied may bring harmony to the general movement. In this District we greatly prefer elimination of the spaces for second or third choice from the ballot as useless and confusing; and a discontinuance of the envelope plan and the distribution of all and any ballots except such as are clearly marked as sample ballots. From a possession of the genuine ballot is apt to grow a disregard to decent customs and rightful observances until the voter with his agent sinks to an actual nullification of the highest aims and wisest intentions of the law.

RELLIM.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The General Convention of the Bible Student's Association is now in session, with an attendance of about five thousand, most of whom are being entertained in the Park and Loch Lynn. The crowd Sunday was very large although comparatively few were present from the surrounding neighborhood. Very likely our country friends will be here in full force next Sunday. Pastor Russell preached last Sunday afternoon to an immense concourse of people which tested even the standing capacity of the Amphitheatre. He will preach again Sunday at 10.00 a. m. and 4.00 p. m. The convention will close Monday. This is the largest convention ever held here and our people speak in terms of the highest praise of the conduct of the delegates who were entertained in our hotels, boarding houses and homes.

The death of Mr. W. F. Mansfield, B. & O. agent at this place, which occurred at the Keyser hospital Monday, caused general sorrow here, where he was very highly esteemed. [See obituary notice in another column.]

Mr. Eugene Binkley was visiting his mother here last week.

Misses Abbie Chance and Lucile Echard returned from their Eastern outing last Friday. They visited Atlantic City and the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Dr. C. W. Baldwin preached in the M. E. Church Sunday morning last.

Preaching next Sunday in the M. E. at 11.00 a. m. and 7.45 p. m.

Our people are to be congratulated on the change made by the Association at a meeting of the board Tuesday when the entire management of the Park, including the Chautauqua, was placed in the hands of Dr. C. E. Shelton.

Intelligence reached relatives here yesterday morning of the death of Mrs. Belle Welch at the home of her sister, Mrs. Frank Kern, in Morgantown, W. Va. Deceased was born and raised near Selbysport, this county and was in her 85th year. She leaves two nieces residing here, Mrs. Amanda Michael and Mrs. Letitia V. Hayden.

Married.

BROCK—LAKE—A wedding which will be of interest to many persons in this city and county was that of Mrs. Emma Bird Lake of this city, to Mr. James Brock of Oakland, Md., which occurred at the bride's home, No. 221 Walnut street, last evening.

Promptly at nine o'clock, the hour named for the ceremony, the bride and groom entered the parlor, where they were met by the officiating minister, Rev. U. W. Morrison, of the M. P. church, who, the by beautiful ritualistic service of that church, pronounced the words which made them husband and wife. The ceremony was witnessed by only the relatives and a few close friends of the contracting parties and at its conclusion the bride and groom were freely congratulated by all present.

Mr. and Mrs. Brock left last evening on train No. 4 for Oakland, Md., where the groom already has a home furnished for the reception of his bride and where they will in the future reside. The bride is one of the best known and most highly esteemed ladies of this city. She is an active member of the M. P. church and will be greatly missed from the church, and the circle in which she moved. During her residence in this city she has drawn to herself scores of friends who will join the Sentinel in extending congratulations to the newly wedded couple and in wishing them an abundant measure of success and happiness. The groom is a prominent business man of Oakland, is a gentleman of pleasing address, and is considered eminently worthy of the lady he has won for his wife. On the occasions of his visits to this city he made many friends and left a most favorable impression on all who met him while here.

Among those from out of town who attended the wedding were Mr. John Nalley, of Oakland, a close friend of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Owens and little son, Hume, of Clarksburg, Mrs. Owens being a daughter of the bride; Mrs. J. Wesley Law, of Clarksburg, and Mrs. Sarah Flowers and daughter, Miss Mayme, of Baltimore, Md.—Grafton Sentinel, August 31.

BAKER—KITZMILLER—Yesterday, in Cumberland, Miss Ethel Kitzmiller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs I. T. Kitzmiller, of near Oakland, became the bride of Mr. Arch T. Baker of Oakland. Following the ceremony the couple went to Atlantic City where they will remain a few days and then return to Oakland where they will reside

Oakland Civic Club.

The ladies' of the Oakland Civic Club held [a well attended meeting in their room in the Court House on Tuesday afternoon and heard reports from the different departments. The Club decided to meet on the first and third Tuesdays of each month for the transaction of business. They have received advices that the street baskets ordered some time ago, have been shipped and will arrive here in a few days when they will be distributed to all parts of town.

Misses Carrie and Goldie Frazee, of Somerfield, Pa. were guests of W. W. Savage's family over Sunday.

Preparation for a large crowd is being made and many good speakers will make addresses, a game of ball will be one or the attractions, the band has been engaged, and will dispense choice selections during the day and evening.

The Town Council met in regular session on Monday evening. Leonard Lytle was appointed policeman in the place of J. Nugent, resigned. A number of bills were ordered paid, some side walks were reported as being in bad repair, and orders were to see that they were repaired at once.

Mr. Turner of Pittsburg was here on a week's vacation, returning home on Saturday.

G. W. Engle, of Baltimore, spent this week with his parents at this place

Corn cutting is occupying the attention of the farmers at this time, and the yield promises to be good.

Miss Evelyn Codden, of Connellsville, who is spending the summer at the home of C. C. Beachy, near this village, entertained a few young friends on last Saturday evening.

WOMAN IN THE CASE GOT SIX MONTHS AT THE CUT

Mrs. Thomas Saucer Confessed Implication in Escape of Prisoners

The suspicions of Sheriff Andrew Shartzer concerning the guilt of the party who passed saws into the Garrett county jail two weeks ago with which four of the prisoners confined therein effectually sawed their way to freedom which, however, was short lived so far as three of the men were concerned, were verified last Wednesday morning when a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Thomas Saucer was issued and her arrest at Keyser, where she was employed in a restaurant, followed the same day.

Upon being brought to Oakland by the officer the woman made a confession as to her guilt and at the hearing before Justice Teats on Saturday she entered a plea of guilty and was immediately sentenced to serve a term of six months in the Maryland House of Correction, to which institution Sheriff Shartzer took her on train No. 2 yesterday morning.

Charles Sullivan, Mrs. Saucer's paramour, who was also sentenced to serve a term of nine months in the same institution for committing an aggravated assault upon the Saucer woman's husband, and who appealed the case, dismissed the appeal, and was also taken down to the House of Correction yesterday morning.

THE DEATH RECORD.

W. FRANK MANSFIELD.

W. Frank Mansfield, aged 30 years, son of Captain and Mrs. Mansfield, of Westernport, Md., died at the Hoffman Hospital at Keyser at ten o'clock Monday night, following an operation for peritonitis Sunday morning at 2.30 o'clock.

The death of this popular and well known man of Cumberland is sad in the extreme. While it is impossible to secure definite information of Mr. Mansfield's illness, it is believed that he suffered from internal injurles caused by a fall from a bicycle a short time ago. He had been at the Park as railroad agent since last fall.

The deceased was a most highly educated, polished and refined man of exemplary habits. In early life he was educated in Baltimore with a view to his entering the priesthood. This vocation, however, was given up after some years of study and he learned telegraphing in which he made a great success and was regarded as one of the most efficient and painstaking men. Deceased was a member of the Knights of Columbus of Cumberland.

ROY F. MARTIN.

Died, August 31st, 1911, of typhoid fever, Roy F. Martin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Christian Martin, of near the Red House. The deceased was aged 26 years, 7 months and 24 days.

The interment was made in the Red House cemetery Sept. 3rd, in the presence of about seven hundred people. He was sick about five weeks and was conscious up to the time he died. Just before death came he called the family to his bedside and told them how he wanted to be buried and made his own selection of pallbearers, who were Henry, Earl, Carl and Owens, the brothers, and Andy Miller and Schooler Clark, his brothers-in-law. He requested that he would like to be buried as near like his brother Lester as possible. He said he hoped that none of the rest would get the fever. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Manges, of Oakland, and Rev. Wade, of Eglon.

About nine years ago he joined the Lutheran church at the Red House and has been a faithful member ever since.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is still;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
God in his wisdom has recalled
The loan his love had given,
And though the body slumber here
The soul is safe in heaven.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin extend their thanks to the many friends for their sympathy shown them in their bereavement.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Abell, of Baltimore, who spent two weeks in Oakland where they were guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Tower, returned to Baltimore, Sunday evening. Mr. Abell's visit to Oakland, after an absence of thirty-five years, was "an epoch" in his life, as he expressed it the other day when he called at this office, at which time he renewed his acquaintance with Capt. Hayden, former editor of The Republican, who purchased the plant from Mr. Abell after the latter had installed it here and established the Garrett County Gazette, the name of the paper being then changed to The Republican. While in Oakland Mr. Abell did some special work for the Baltimore News, upon which paper he has been engaged for several years in the capacity of proof reader. Both Mr. and Mrs. Abell were greatly benefitted by their visit to Oakland and have decided to return here early next June and to remain until October.

SYNOPSIS.

David Amber, starting for a duck-shooting visit with his friend, Quain, comes upon a young lady equestrian who has been dismounted by her horse becoming frightened at the sudden appearance in the road of a burly Hindu. He declares he is Behari Lal Chatterji, "The appointed mouthpiece of the Bell," addresses Amber as a man of high rank and pressing a mysterious little bronze box, "The Token," into his hand, disappears in the wood. The girl calls Amber by name. He in turn addresses her as Miss Sophie Farrell, daughter of Col. Farrell of the British diplomatic service in India and visiting the Quains. Several nights later the Quain home is burglarized and the bronze box stolen. Amber and Quain go hunting on an island and become lost and Amber is left marooned. He wanders about, finally reaches a cabin and recognizes as its occupant an old friend named Rutton, whom he last met in England, and who appears to be in hiding. When Miss Farrell is mentioned Rutton is strangely agitated. Chatterji appears and summons Rutton to a meeting of a mysterious body. Rutton seizes a revolver and dashes after Chatterji. He returns wildly excited, says he has killed the Hindu, takes poison, and when dying asks Amber to go to India on a mysterious errand. Amber decides to leave at once for India. On the way he sends a letter to Mr. Labertouche, a scientific friend in Calcutta, by a quicker route. Upon arriving he finds a note awaiting him. It directs Amber to meet his friend at a certain place. The latter tells him he knows his mission is to get Miss Farrell out of the country. Amber attempts to dispose of the Token to a money-lender, is mistaken for Rutton and barely escapes being mobbed. A message from Labertouche causes him to start for Darjeeling, and on the way he meets Miss Farrell.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Photograph.

That same night Amber dined at the Residency, on the invitation of Raikes, the local representative of government, seconded by the insistence of Colonel Farrell. It developed that Sophia's telegram had somehow been lost in transit, and Farrell's surprise and pleasure at sight of her were tempered only by his keen appreciation of Amber's adventitious services, slight though they had been. He was urged to stay the evening out, before proceeding to his designated quarters, and the reluctance with which he acceded to this arrangement which worker so happily with his desires, may be imagined.

Ease of anxiety was more than food and drink to Amber; his feeling of relief, to have convoyed Sophia to the company and protection of Anglo-Saxons like himself, was intense. Yet he swallowed his preliminary brandy-peg in a distinctly uncomfortable frame of mind, strangely troubled by the reflection that round that lone white table was gathered together the known white population of the state; a census of which accounted for just five souls.

Amber was relieved when at length the meal was over, and Miss Farrell having withdrawn in conformance with inviolable custom, the cloth was deftly whisked away and cigars, cigarettes, liquors, whisky and soda were served.

Amber took unto himself a cigar and utilized an observation of the Political's as a lever to swing the conversation to a plane more likely to inform him. Farrell had grumbled about the exactions of his position as particularly instanced by the necessity of his attending tedious and tiresome native ceremonies in connection with the tamasha.

"What's, precisely, the nature of this tamasha, Colonel Farrell?"

"Why, my dear young man, I thought you knew. Isn't it what you came to see?"

"No," Amber admitted cautiously; "I merely heard a rumor that there was something uncommon afoot. Is it really anything worth while?"

"Rather," Raikes interjected drily, "the present ruler's abdicating in favor of his son, a child of twelve. That puts the business in a class by itself."

"But why should a prince hand over the reins of government to a child of twelve? There must be some reason for it. Isn't it known?" asked Amber.

"Who can fathom a Hindu's mind?" grunted Farrell. "I daresay there's some scandalous native intrigue at the bottom of it. Eh, Raikes?"

The Resident shook his head. "Don't come to this shop for information about what goes on in Khandawar. I doubt if there's another Resident in India who knows as little of the underhand deviltment in his state as I do. His majesty the Rana loves me as a cheetah loves his trainer. He's an intractable rascal."

"There have been a number of deaths from cholera in the Palace lately, the grand vizier's amongst them."

"White arsenic cholera?"

"That, and the hemp poison kind."

"Refractory vizier?" questioned Farrell. "The kind that wants to retrench and institute reforms—railways and metalled roads and so forth?"

"No; he was quite suited to his master. But the bazar says Naraini took a dislike to him for one reason or another."

"Naraini?" queried Amber.

"The genius of the place." Raikes nodded toward the Raj Mahal, shining like a pearl through the darkness on the hillside over against the Residency. "She's Salig's head queen. At least that's about as near to her status as one can get. She's not actually his queen, but some sort of a heritage from the Rutton dynasty—I hardly know what or why. Salig never married her, but she lives in the Palace, and for several years—ever since she first began to be talked about—she's ruled from behind the screen with a high hand and an outstretched arm. So the bazar says."

"Old women we are, forever talking scandal," said Raikes, with a chuckle. "Oh, well! it's shop with us, you know."

"Of course. . . . Then I understand that the tamasha is the reason for the encampment beyond the walls?"

"Yes; they've been coming in for a week. By tomorrow night, I daresay, every rajah, prince, thakur, baron, fief, and lord in Rajputna, each with his 'tail,' horse and foot, will be camped down before the walls of Kuttarpur. You've chosen an interesting time for your visit. It'll be a sight worth seeing, when they begin to make a show. My troubles begin with a state banquet tomorrow that I'd give much to miss; however, I'll have Farrell for company."

"I'm glad to be here," said Amber thoughtfully. Could it be possible that the proposed abdication of Salig Singh in favor of his son were merely a cloak to a conspiracy to restore to power the house of Rutton? Or had the tamasha been arranged in order to gather together all the rulers in Rajputana without exciting suspicion, that they might agree upon a concerted plan of mutiny against the Sirkar? The state affair of surpassing importance had been arranged for the last day of grace allotted the Prince of the house of Rutton. What had it to do with the Gateway of Swords, the Voice, the Mind, the Eye, the Body, the Bell?

"By the way, Mr. Raikes," said the Virginian suddenly, "what do they call the gate by which we entered the city—the southern gate?"

"The Gateway of Swords, I believe."

Farrell, on the point of entering the house, overheard and turned. "Is that so? Why, I thought that gateway was in Kathiapur."

"I've heard of a Gateway of Swords in Kathiapur," Raikes admitted. "Never been there, myself."

"Kathiapur?"

"A dead city, Mr. Amber, not far away—originally the capital of Khandawar. It's over there in the hills to the north, somewhere. Old Rao Rutton, founder of the old dynasty, got tired of the place and caused it to be depopulated, building Kuttarpur in its stead—I believe, to commemorate some victory or other. That sort of thing used to be quite the fashion in India, before we came." Raikes fell back, giving Amber precedence as they entered the Residency. "By the way, remind me, if you think of it, Colonel Farrell, to get after the telegraph clerk tomorrow. There's a new man in charge—a Bengali babu—and I presume he's about as worthless as the run of his kind."

Amber made a careful note of this information; he was curious about that babu.

In the drawing room Raikes and Farrell impressed Clarkson for three-handed bridge. Sophia did not care to play and Amber was ignorant of the game—a defect in his social education which he found no cause to regret, since it left him in undisputed attendance upon the girl.

She had seated herself at a warped and discouraged piano, for which Raikes had already apologized; it was, he said, a legacy from a former Resident. For years its yellow keys had not known a woman's touch such as that to which they now responded with thin, cracked voices; the girl's fine, slender fingers wrung from them a plaintive, pathetic parody of melody. Amber stood over her with his arms folded on the top of the instrument, comfortably unconscious that his pose was copied from any number of sentimental photogravures and "art photographs." His temper was sentimental enough, for that matter; the woman was very sweet and beautiful in his eyes as she sat with her white, round arms flashing over the keyboard, her head bowed and her face a little averted, the long lashes low upon her cheeks and tremulous with a fathomless emotion. It was his thought that his time was momentarily becoming shorter, and that just now, more than ever, she was very distant from his arms, something inaccessible, too rare and delicate and fine for the rude possession of him who sighed for his own unworthiness.

Abruptly she brought both hands down upon the keys, educing a jangled, startled crash from the tortured wires, and swinging round, glanced up at Amber with quaint mirth trembling behind the veil of moisture in her misty eyes.

"India!" she cried, with a broken laugh: "India epitomized: a homesick, exiled woman trying to drag a song of Home from the broken heart of a crippled piano! That is an Englishwoman's India: it's our life, ever to strive and struggle and contrive to piece together out of makeshift odds and ends the atmosphere of Home! . . . It's suffocating in here. Come." She rose with a quick shrug of impatience, and led the way back to the gardens.

Pensive, the girl trained her long skirts heedlessly over the dew-drenched grasses, Amber at her side, himself speechless with an intangible, ineluctable, unreasoning sense of expectancy. Never, he told himself, had a lover's hour been more auspiciously timed or staged; and this was his hour, altogether his! . . . If only he might find the words of wooing to which his lips were strange! He dared not delay; tomorrow it might be too late; in the womb of the morrow a world of chances stirred—contingencies that might in a breath set them a world apart.

"Are you in the habit of indulging in protracted silences?" she rallied him gently. "Between friends of old standing they're permissible, I believe, but—"

"A day's journey by tonga matures acquaintanceship wonderfully," he observed abstrusely.

"Indeed?" She laughed.

"At least, I hope so."

He felt that he must be making progress; thus far he had been no less inane than any average lover of the stage or fiction. And he wondered: was she laughing at him, softly, there in the shadows?

"You see," she said, amused at his relapse into reverie, "you're incurable and ungrateful. I'm trying my best to be attractive and interesting, and you won't pay me any attention whatever. There must be something on your mind. Is it this mysterious errand that brings you so unexpectedly to India—to Kuttarpur, Mr. Amber?"

"Yes," he answered truthfully.

"And you won't tell me?"

"I think I must," he said, bending forward.

There sounded a stealthy rustling in the shrubbery. The girl drew away and rose with a startled exclamation. With a bound, a man in native dress sped from the shadows and paused before them, panting.

Amber jumped up, overturning his chair, and instinctively feeling for the pistol that was with his traveling things, upstairs in the Residency.

The native, reassured him with a swift, obsequious gesture. "Pardon, sahib, and yours, sahiba, if I have alarmed you, but I am come on an errand of haste, seeking him who is known as the Sahib David Amber."

"I am he. What do you want with me?"

"It is only this, that I have been commissioned to bear to you, sahib."

The man fumbled hurriedly in the folds of his surtout, darting quick glances of apprehension round the garden. Amber looked him over as closely as he could in the dim light, but found him wholly a stranger—merely a low-caste Hindu, counterpart of a million others to be encountered daily in the highways and bazars of India. The Virginian's rising hope that he might prove to be Labertouche failed for want of encouragement; the intruder was of a stature the Englishman could by no means have counterfeited.

"From whom come you?" he demanded in the vernacular.

"Nay, a name that is unspoken harms none, sahib." The native produced a small, thin, flat package and thrust it into Amber's hands. "With permission, I go, sahib; it were unwise to linger—"

"There is no answer?"

"None, sahib." The man salaamed and strode away, seeming to melt soundlessly into the foliage.

"I think you are a very interesting person, Mr. Amber," she said, resuming her chair.

"Well! . . . I begin to think this a most uncommonly interesting country." He laughed uncertainly, turning the package over and over. "Upon my word—! I haven't the least notion what this can be!"

"Why not bring it to the light, and find out?"

He assented meekly, having been perfectly candid in his assertion that he had no suspicion of what the packet might contain, and a moment later they stood beneath the window of Residency, from which a broad shaft of light streamed out like vaporized gold.

Amber held the packet to the light; it was oblong, thin, stiff, covered with common paper, guiltless of superscription, and sealed with mucilage. He tore the covering, withdrew the enclosure, and heard the girl gasp with surprise. For himself, he was transfixed with consternation. His look wavered in dismay between the girl and the photograph in his hand—her photograph, which had been stolen from him aboard the Poonah.

She extended her hand imperiously. "Give that to me, please, Mr. Amber," she insisted. He surrendered it without a word. "Mr. Amber!" she cried in a voice that quivered with wonder and resentment.

He faced her with a hang-dog air, feeling that now indeed had his case been made hopeless by this contretemps. "Confound Labertouche!" he cried in his ungrateful heart. "Confound his medding mystery-mongering and hokus-pokus!"

"Well?" inquired the girl sharply.

"Yes, Miss Farrell." He could invent nothing else to say.

"You—you are going to explain, I presume."

He shook his head in despair. "No . . ."

"What!"

"I've no explanation whatever to make—that'd be adequate, I mean."

He saw that she was shaken by impatience. "I think," said she evenly—"I think you will find it best to let me judge of that. This is my photograph. How do you come to have it? What right have you to it?"

"I . . . ah . . ." He stammered and paused, acutely conscious of the voices of the Englishmen, Farrell, Raikes, and young Clarkson, drifting out through the open window of the drawing room. "If you'll be kind enough to return to our chairs," he said, "I'll try to make a satisfactory explanation. I'd rather not be overheard."

The girl doubted, was strongly inclined to refuse him; then, perhaps moved to compassion by his abject attitude, she relented and agreed. "Very well," she said, and retaining the picture moved swiftly before him into the shadowed garden. He lagged after her, inventing a hundred impracticable yarns. She found her chair and sat down with a manner of hauteur moderated by expectancy. He took his place beside her.

"Who sent you this photograph of me?" she began to cross-examine him.

"A friend."

"His name?"

"I'm sorry I can't tell you just now."

"Oh! . . . Why did he send it?"

"Because . . ." In his desperation it occurred to him to tell the truth—as much of it, at least, as his word to Rutton would permit. "Because it's mine. My friend knew I had lost it."

"How could it have been yours? It was taken in London a year ago. I sent copies only to personal friends who, I know, would not give them away." She thought it over and added: "The Quains had no copy; it's quite impossible that one should have got to America."

"None the less," he maintained stubbornly, "it's mine, and I got it in America."

"I can hardly be expected to believe that."

"I'm sorry."

"You persist in saying that you got it in America?"

"I must."

"When?"

"How?" she propounded triumphantly.

"I can't tell you, except vaguely. If you'll be content with the substance of the story, lacking details, for the present—"

"For the present? You mean you'll tell me the whole truth—?"

"Naraini?" Queried Amber.

"Sometime, yes. But now, I may not. . . . A dear friend of mine owned the photograph. He gave it to me at my request. I came to India, and on the steamer lost it; in spite of my offer of a reward, I was obliged to leave the boat without it, when we got to Calcutta. My friend here knew how highly I valued it—"

"Why?"

"Because I'd told him."

"I don't mean that. Why do you value it so highly?"

"Because of its original." He took heart of despair and plunged boldly.

She looked him over calmly. "Do you mean me to understand that you told this friend you had followed me to India because you were in love with me?"

"Precisely. . . . Thank you."

She laughed a little, mockingly. "Are you, Mr. Amber?"

"In love with you? . . . Yes."

"And how soon will you be free to tell me the whole truth?"

"Only after . . . we're married."

She laughed adorably. "Mr. Amber," she protested, "you are dangerous—you are delightful! Do you really believe I shall ever marry you?"

"I hope so. I came to India to ask you—to use every means in my power to make you marry me. You see, I love you."

"And . . . and when is this to happen, please—in the name of impudence?"

"As soon as I can persuade you—tonight, if you will."

"Oh!"

He was obliged to laugh with her at the absurdity of the suggestion. "Or to morrow morning, at the very latest," he amended seriously. "I don't think we dare wait longer."

"Why is that?"

"Delays are perilous. There might be another chap."

"How can you be sure there is'nt already?"

He fell sober enough at this. "But there isn't, is there, really?"

She delayed her reply provokingly. At length, "I don't see why I should say," she observed, " but I don't mind telling you—no, there isn't—yet." And as she spoke, Farrell called "Sophia?" from the window of the drawing room. She stood up, answering clearly with the assurance that she was coming, and began deliberately to move toward the house.

Amber followed, deeply anxious. "I've not offended you?"

"No," she told him gravely, "but you have both puzzled and mystified me. I shall have to sleep on this before I can make up my mind whether or not to be offended."

"And . . . will you marry me?"

"Oh, dear! How do I know?" she laughed.

"You won't give me a hint as to the complexion of my chances?"

She paused, turning. "The chances, Mr. Amber," she said without affectation or coquetry, "are all in your favor . . . if you can prove your case. I do like you very much, and you have been successful in rousing my interest in you to an astonishing degree. . . . But I shall have to think it over; you must allow me at least 12 hours' grace."

"You'll let me know tomorrow morning?"

"Yes."

"Early?"

"You've already been bidden to breakfast by Mr. Raikes."

"Meanwhile, may I have my photograph?"

"Mine, if you please! . . . I think not; if my decision is favorable, you shall have it back—after breakfast."

"Thank you," he said meekly. And as they were entering the Residency he hung back. "I'm going now," he said; "it's good night. Will you remember you've not refused me the privilege of hoping?"

"I've told you I like you, Mr. Amber." Impulsively she extended her hand. "Good night."

He bowed and put his lips to it; and she did not resist.

Sure, He Did the Right Thing!

"I hope it will be a long time before I have such another test applied to my honesty," a down-town merchant remarked as he returned from waiting on a customer, relates the St. Paul Dispatch. "What was the trouble?" asked his partner. "These near-wool suits. An old fellow came in just now and asked me the price of one. 'Seven dollars,' I told him. 'Speak louder!' he said, holding his hand behind his ear. So I yelled, 'Seven dollars!' 'Eleven dollars! Too much! I'll give you nine!' he replied." His partner looked at the speaker in alarm. 'You—er—of course, did the right thing?" "I guess you can depend on me to do the right thing," was the haughty retort. Then he paused. "You'd better get some dollar bills when you go to the bank," he remarked. "I just gave an old fellow our last one for change."

Army and Navy Inventors.

There are numerous examples of officers of the army and navy inventing machinery and devices which are used by the service without any compensation from the government. Generally speaking, they are guided by the code of honor that as they were educated at the expense of the government and enlisted in its service it has the right to the use of their inventions without payment of royalty or other money. There have been many who have not considered themselves so bound, and have claimed compensation for use of their inventions.—The Bookman.

Another Phase of the Problem.

"Doubtless the servant girl problem is very annoying to you."

"Very," responded the housewife. "I have a really desperate time getting maids my clothes won't fit."

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had tumors, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Any one wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PEYROUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

"Poor man! How did you become a tramp?"

"I wuz a war correspondent in Manchuria, mum. I got so used ter doing nuthin' dat I hain't been no good since."

Distressing.

"Here is the account of a poor woman who lost both arms in a railroad wreck."

"It must be dreadful to go through life without any arms."

"Yes, indeed. And much worse for a woman than for a man."

"How is that?"

"Well, a woman without any arms can't reach around to feel if the back of her collar and the back of her belt are all right."

Unexpected.

Suddenly the umpire called time.

"Aw, what's the matter!" demanded the catcher.

"Somebody in the grand stand applauded me," he said, wiping the blinding tears from his eyes, "and I wasn't prepared for that . . . Play ball!"

More Than That.

"Did they water the stock?"

"They fairly turned the hose on it."

For Late Summer

FORESHADOWING already what we may expect for the coming fall season, the hats for late summer indicate that we shall have many bonnet-like shapes, tall crowns and large hats few in number as compared to small and medium-sized models. Outing hats for July and August are of felt in white or light colors, such as Alice blue, champagne and the season's beautiful pink tones. These are either all felt or felt and hemp combinations and are trimmed with scarfs, bands, soft draperies of chiffon and wings or ribbon. They are exquisite and, it must be confessed, fragile in the matter of keeping clean. But they remain presentable for some time and are cleaned with fine sandpaper. Everywhere the floating white veil accompanies these cool-looking creations of the milliner. The veils are of lace, in several varieties, in coarse silk nets and in chiffon. They are all washable and add immensely to the attractiveness of the hats and the complexion, for they are worn either over or off the face.

One of the cone-shaped hats, of which we may expect to see numbers during the fall season, is shown in the illustration. It is trimmed with a full ruche of silk "pinked" at the edges and laid in quadruple box-plaitings. Velvet fruit, like plums, cherries or even apricots, set in these ruchings make a trimming chic and striking. Velvet fruit, in fact, is developing so much popularity that it will probably stay with us and add a charming note to winter millinery, and hats made of felt in the shape pictured here are quite like to be trimmed in the same way.

A model of black hemp, with a moderately tall crown, is also shown. It is calculated to pave the way for extremely high-crowned models, or crowns trimmed extremely high, which Paris says, are to be a vogue for winter. This soft-crowned model makes use of the feather band about the brim edge and is finished with a cluster of upstanding plumes at the back. An ornament made of plaited ribbon finishes the trim, poised on the crown at the right side.

AFTERNOON DRESS.

Peacock blue Irish poplin is chosen for our model. The plain skirt has a row of satin-covered buttons sewn part way up the seam at right side of front.

The bodice has a yoke of white tucked ninon over peacock blue; a braided or fancy silk waistcoat surrounds the yoke. The sides are of material; they are carried down over the top of sleeves, which have fancy cuffs edged with ninon frills.

Materials required: 4½ yards poplin 42 inches wide, ¼ yard tucked ninon, ½ yard silk 20 inches wide.

Apron Pockets.

Sew the pocket of your apron on the inside, a little in from the right-hand edge. Nothing will drop from it then, it will stay clean and a great deal can be carried in it without showing any ugly fullness.

TO PREVENT SAGGING SKIRTS

Have Garment Properly Prepared Before It Is Turned Up to Be Hemmed.

Summer dress skirts when made of thin material will always sag after they are hemmed and finished if care is not taken to prevent it. A good way to do is to have the skirt sagged first before it is turned up to be hemmed.

This is done after the skirt is completely finished excepting the hem, from the band to the final fitting and the last hook and eye is in its place. The skirt is now hung in a closet or, better still, put upon a full-length dress form raised from the floor by placing it on a box, and the bias portions of the gores weighted so they will stretch to the fullest extent.

After several days of this strain the material will have sagged to its fullest extent, and the hem may be measured and turned up. Anything will do for weighing. The smallest weights from the kitchen scales, put in temporary coverings of muslin and pinned on, are excellent. Any other small objects of uniform heaviness will do for other weights.

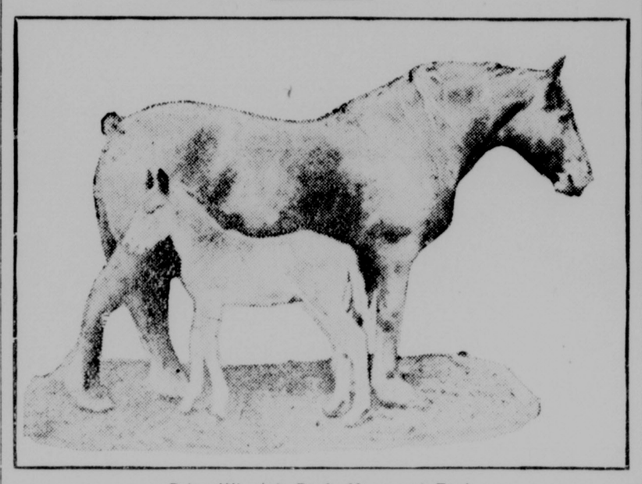
A Curious Fashion.

The latest models in skirts or in costumes with attached skirts and waists show the skirt decidedly shorter in front than at the back, a difference which, in the walking length, is very noticeable. Even ballroom gowns are cut on the same lines.

"Shows the embroidery on the front of her socks and hides the darns in the heels," said a male critic of one of these gowns, and his cruel remark accurately describes the style.

Why such an untidy fashion should have come from Paris at a season when all the crudeness of spring has usually been eliminated from its garments is a puzzle, but here it is, nevertheless, and many frocks that would otherwise have been graceful have been marred by it.

Sashes.



One of the greatest aids in varying the white summer gowns is the use of the sash, which is the style as much as ever.

The velvet sash of the winter is superseded by the pastel colored moires and the lighter chiffon ruches, black in color, as an edging, this finished with black chenille fringe and flowers of the same at the ends, some being decorated with wreaths of gold roses at the ends in place of the other decoration.

These are some of the newer fancies that seem at once to become popular, as they are shown in some of the most exclusive shops.

PROPER TREATMENT OF COLTS DURING THE SUMMER'S HEAT

Many Good Animals Have Been Aged and Made Dull by Foolish Habit of Letting Them Run Unbroken Into Spring When They Are Three or Four Years Old and Then Putting Them to Work.

Prize Winnink Draft Mare and Foal.

(By J. M. BELL, Virginia.)

Try to be patient with your colt Mr. Farmer. Remember he is green—yes, as green as the grass he eats so peacefully when you turn him out to graze and the harness no longer chafes his soft young body.

All farmers know that a four-year-old colt will stand more than a three-year-old. Bone and muscle are better matured and generally better size, therefore, he is better able to stand a day's work. But, when it comes to that, no green, unbroken colt should be expected to do a full day's work in the team of well seasoned farm or road horses.

So many good colts have been aged and made dull by this foolish habit of letting them run absolutely unbroken into the spring when they are three or four-year-olds and then catching them and putting them at hard, steady work just as the busy season comes on, when the crops need work, when the flies are rampant and when neither the master's nor the colt's tempers are at their best.

Imagine a farmer starting out to mow hay with a green or half broken colt hitched alongside of a mule or a steady farm horse to a mowing machine, double row cultivator, corn planter, plow or harrow.

All implements need a steady, well-broken team and at the same time a good driver, who, in order to do his best work has little time for else than quietly handling his team and implement at one and the same time.

This man will not get much satisfaction out of a day's work if he has to worry with a green, restive colt, who, chafing at the unexpected misery of heavy work in hot weather, starts up a little too soon or not soon enough, protests at having to walk in a straight line at a slow gait, etc.

It is not impossible that he will balk, kick or rear upon what might be considered a very slight provocation, or no provocation at all to a broken, middle-aged farm horse.

In that section of Virginia known as The "Valley" famous for its splendid line of stock, the farmers are very successful breeders of horses, notably heavy draft horses and their rule is to break these big colts at two years old, never working them over half a day at time and beginning the breaking-in process in the late winter and early spring.

The first link is to a wagon in a steady team and with a quiet teamster, generally a white man who is used to the daily handling of horses.

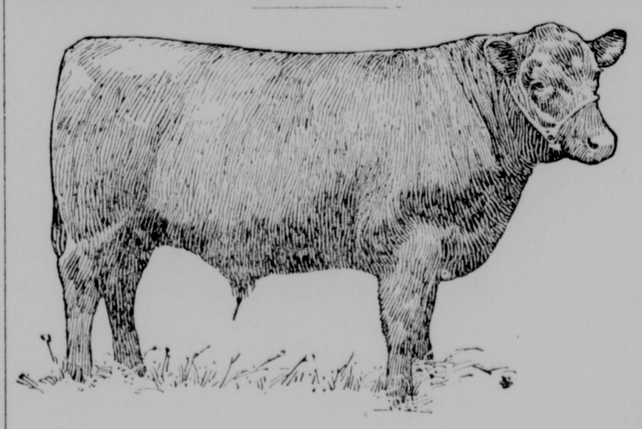
The writer visited that section two years ago this month and while the guest of a well-known horse breeder, saw four full-blooded Percherons working to a manure spreader, a nine-year-old mare under the saddle, a three-year-old stallion in the off-lead and a young mare under the line.

The average weight of these splendid horses was about 1,800 pounds each, but the remarkable part of the business was that these two young, vigorous stallions were working quietly with mares. Their teamster had them under perfect control, but they had been worked the same as two-year-olds and had become used to farm labor by degrees.

Of course, advice is cheap and the farmers get lots of it and in this matter of working colts and green horses in the summer time they have heard it all—fitting on the harness, scraping the collars at night, washing off the shoulders and sparing the lash.

I have only to say this, and I speak from experience: If the farmer don't go easy with the three and four-year-olds at this season they will be old and sluggish long before their time.

GIVE MILK COW GOOD TREATMENT



Animal Should Have Access to Rock Salt at All Times—Should Not be Hurried by Dog or Horse.

A small quantity of barrel salt should be given the cow once or twice a week; and she should have constant access to rock salt, either in the yard or pasture.

In going to and from the pastures, the cows should have the use of a good wide lane, so that they may not be hooked and jammed about. Do not hurry them with a dog or horse. If the floors of the barn are of cement, a small quantity of sand should be sprinkled on the floor before the cows are turned out or allowed to come in. This will prevent them from slipping.

Care should be exercised, when they are running together, that heavy cows do not ride the young heifers when the latter are in season. Heifers are frequently injured for life by this treatment; broken-down rumps being rather common in some herds.

CHAMPION STEER SHAMROCK II.

Silage is going to be more used than in the past, and cattle feeders are coming to the conclusion at last that it should not be ignored, says the National Stockman. Cheaper grains have been made by using silage as roughage, while gains have been made more rapid, especially where the cattle were fed only 90 days. The plan adopted in handling silage is to let the ear of the corn reach as advanced a stage of maturity as possible without firing the fodder. Many stock feeders in the upper edge of the corn belt, where dent corn often fails to come to maturity because of early frosts, are using this silage method with the best of success, and for wintering cattle its use is equal to pasturing them. Meanwhile the demand for breeding cattle is showing a steady increase, and Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio farmers are buying thousands of good breeding cows, paying as high as $50 per head, or more than killers will offer. Furthermore, west of the Missouri river, in the former range country, new farmers have fenced in the lands and are in the market looking for pure-bred bulls in some instances, although most of the demand now is for cheap bulls. The illustration shows Shamrock II., grand champion steer, at the recent International Live Stock show.

Timothy Hay.

Timothy hay, when fed alone, is a very poor ration for any animal, but it is much worse for a growing one. It will fill, but he who feeds it will not get best results.

PIMPLES COVERED HIS BACK

"My troubles began along in the summer in the hottest weather and took the form of small eruptions and itching and a kind of smarting pain. It took me mostly all over my back and kept getting worse until finally my back was covered with a mass of pimples which would burn and itch at night so that I could hardly stand it. This condition kept getting worse and worse until my back was a solid mass of big sores which would break open and run. My underclothing would be a clot of blood.

"I tried various remedies and salves for nearly three years and I was not getting any benefit. It seemed I was in eternal misery and could not sleep on my back or lean on a chair. I was finally given a set of the Cuticura Remedies and inside of two weeks I could see and feel a great relief. I kept on using Cuticura Soap, Ointment and also the Resolvent, and in about three or four months' time my back was nearly cured and I felt like a new being. Now I am in good health and no sign of any skin diseases and I am fully satisfied that Cuticura Remedies are the best ever made for skin diseases. I would not be without them." (Signed) W. A. To Laugh at Tuberculosis.

Much ignorance prevails among the unfortunate victims of tuberculosis and families of these unfortunates, according to the Los Angeles Herald. For such as these the words spoken by Adolphus Knopf should be chiseled in imperishable granite. Or, better still, they should be published in every public print, viz: "There is no such thing as hereditary tuberculosis. The remedy is simple and all should know it. It is one of the most easily curable of all the chronic infectious diseases. You can cure consumption by the unstinted use of God's good fresh air, twenty-four hours in twenty-four, plenty of good food and plenty of good water, inside and out. You all know that cleanliness is next to godliness. Children should get all the fresh air possible. They should sleep and play in the open air. They should attend open-air schools."

The Age of Development.

We don't have to be gray-haired to remember the time when mother made soft soap with the fat savings, combined with potash, which were mixed with the same accuracy as when she put a pinch of salt into the stew. We call this "soap" by courtesy, but it wasn't a good soap to use.

Hewitt's Easy Task soap is a scientific product—no guesswork, no excess of fat or alkali, which are both injurious, but real soap, which is absolutely effective. It is pure and white, made exactly the same for a quarter of a century—there are many imitations—insist on getting Easy Task.

Reasons Why The Great Majestic You Should Buy

1st. It has the reputation of being the best range money can buy.
2d. It not only has the reputation but IS the best range made, and we will prove this to you if you will let us.
3d. It is constructed of malleable iron, material you can't beat, and of Charcoal iron' material that resists rust 300 per ct. greater than steel, is riveted together air tight. No heat escapes or cold air enters the range, thus uses very little fuel to do perfect work.
4th. The reservoir alone ir worth the price of range over any other reservoir made. It boils 15 gallons of water; is heated like a tea kettle, with pocket against left hand lining; and is movable and sets on a frame, hence cannot wear out. When water gets too hot it can be moved away from fire.

Majestic ranges use less fuel; heat more water—and heat it hotter; costs practically nothing for repairs; lasts three times as long; bakes better; easier to keep clean and gives better satisfaction than any other range on the market. If you know aositively that the above statements are true wouldn't you buy a Majestic at once?

Come in Demonstration Week and We'll Prove it To You.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 35. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1911. NUMBER 27

GOLDSBOROUGH NOW REPUBLICAN HEAD. GORMAN NAMED BY DEMOCRATS

Republican Platform Ignores Liquor, Scores Democrats, Pledges Party in State to Many Reforms

With full delegations present from every county and from the city districts, the Republican state convention met at Albaugh's Theatre last Thursday, adopted a party platform and nominated a state ticket, as follows:

For Governor—Philips Lee Goldsborough of Cambridge.

For Comptroller—John H. Cunningham of Westminster.

For Attorney General—Morris A. Soper of Baltimore.

George R. Gaither, who was the party's candidate for governor four years ago, sprang a surprise in the convention by introducing a resolution asking the convention to indorse a general state law under which any city or town in the state might adopt by popular vote the commission form of government. The plan to be followed is that used in New Jersey.

This resolution was immediately referred to the committee on resolutions and the convention, after being in session only a short time, took a recess to permit the committee to meet. There was much discussion over the platform, while Mr. Gaither's resolution caused a long conference.

There was a decided sentiment in favor of the Gaither resolution, but the "steam roller" got in its work and the resolution was voted down. The explanation was given that the resolution was presented "too late."

The platform adopted was absolutely silent on the question of local option.

Taft's administration commended.

Democratic dealers in legislation and protectors of vice denounced.

Wilson ballot law condemned; unfair elections scored.

Strictor corrupt practices act demanded.

Legislative economy pledged.

Delay on state roads and cost of same condemned.

Strengthening of Public Utilities Commission pledged.

Passage of new city charter for Baltimore pledged.

Greater representation for city urged.

Divorcing of schools from politics declared essential. Women urged to take greater interest in schools.

Creation of a people's court in city recommended.

Appointment on liquor license and police boards of highest type of men pledged.

The state convention of the Democratic party of Maryland also named its state candidates Thursday in the Auditorium Hotel and adopted a platform on which it would make its appeal to the voters of this state. The nominees are:

For Governor—Arthur P. Gorman of Howard county

For State Comptroller—Emerson C. Harrington of Dorchester county.

For Attorney General—Edgar Allan Poe of Baltimore city.

The platform is based largely on the ideas advanced by State Senator Blair Lee in his fight for the nomination in which he was defeated by one vote by Arthur P. Gorman.

The convention was simply a necessary formality to comply with the primary election law. Each of the twenty-four counties and Baltimore city were represented by delegates apportioned according to population. Consequently, while Gorman received a popular majority of 13,414 for the the entire state he only carried a sufficient number of counties to give him a majority of one vote in convention.

Roads Commission.

A party of four, composed of Mr. John M. Tucker, chairman of the Maryland State Roads Commission, Chief Engineer W. W. Crosby, Mr. Uhler, who has charge of the maintenance of State Roads, and Mr. W. E. G. Hitchens, of this city, left here early on Friday morning in an automobile owned by the Frostburg garage for an inspection of the National pike west of this city as far as Grantsville. The party was very much gratified to find that the work that is now going on is proving very satisfactory. All the bridges between this city and Grantsville have been completed and are in excellent condition except the large bridge near Grantsville, which will be finished sometime this fall. Work on the new piece of State road that is being built on the National pike west of this city, will be continued with hard stone which has recently been found to take the place of the soft sandstone.—Frostburg Cor. Cumb. Times.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE STUDENTS CONFERENCE WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

Nearly Six Thousand was the Daily Attendance at Mountain Lake Park.

The many special train parties of International Bible Students, in convention at Mountain Lake Park from September 1st until the 12th, have returned to their respective homes in all portions of the United States and Canada, the first train having left the Park for Memphis, Tenn., shortly after midnight Sunday, and on Monday special as well as regular trains were departing nearly every hour, until Monday afternoon when comparatively few of the many thousands in attendance were left upon the grounds.

The convention opened Friday, the 1st inst., with about four thousand people present. Some delegates attended only during the opening days, who were unable to remain throughout the convention, and departing, gave place to more than an equal number of belated arrivals.

The average attendance was near the five thousand mark, with a total attendance of six thousand on special days.

Last Sunday by far the largest crowd during the days of the convention was present, when Pastor Russel delivered his farewell sermon to the assembled students. Pastor Russell took for his text, Isaiah II, 2, but included in his discourse the remainder of the chapter, the subject of his address being "God's Kingdom Is At Hand."

He declared that in the symbolic language of the Bible, the Mountain of the Lord's House means the Kingdom of the Lord, ruled over by Messiah and His House, the Church. The promise of the text, that some day Messiah will reign over all the kingdoms of earth, the speaker believes will soon be realized. It is for this Kingdom that God's people have for years been praying, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven."

None of the kingdoms of this world are Messiah's kingdoms, declared Pastor Russell. None of them bear the earmarks of Messiah's Kingdom, outlined in the Bible. They are the kingdoms of this world, ruled by the Prince of this world, "who now worketh in the hearts of the children of disobedience." Nevertheless, Messiah's Kingdom will be inaugurated; Satan's Empire or Mountain, deceiving mankind through ignorance and superstition, will be brought to an end. Satan will be bound for a thousand years, while Messiah's Kingdom, equally invisible, will dominate the world, chasing away ignorance and superstition and filling the whole world with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord.

The speaker declared that the Bible everywhere shows that Messiah's invisible Kingdom will be represented amongst mankind by princely characters of the Jewish race, who will be resurrected to human perfection for this very work. Instead of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and the Prophets being any longer the Fathers, they will be the children—the first-born children of Messiah, in the full perfection of human nature. The Church, the Bride of Christ, is not, declared the Pastor, Scripturally known as children of Messiah. In perfect accord is the text, "One is your Father, even God;" and again, "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who hath begotten us" (I Peter i, 3).

Discoursing on other features of the chapter, Pastor Russell called attention to the fact that the words declare a judgment of the nations. In the time of trouble which will then overthrow Society, financial, political, social and religious, the nations will be so chastened by war that thereafter "Their swords will be converted into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks," and the study of war will be at an end. Pastor Russell surmised that this great time of trouble will result from anarchism, which he believes will invade the armies of the world and turn them against the very powers which organized and armed them.

All were cautioned to avoid, so far as possible, having any sympathy with the anarchistic spirit, in harmony with God's Message to His people, "Wait ye on Me, saith the Lord." In other words, do not attempt by force to right present wrongs; rather submit and leave the entire matter in God's hands.

The Prophet Isaiah, said the Pastor, calls attention to the idolatry of wealth—silver and gold—and indicates that such idolatry will pass away in the great time of trouble with which Messiah's reign of righteousness will be inaugurated—"He must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet." In the shakings of the great time of trouble, many people will be in perplexity, and will crawl into the caves and dens of the earth, and the clefts of the rocks. Pastor Russell quoted Revelation vi, 15-17. He interpreted the dens and caves and rocks to signify political and social fastnesses—Insurance and Combines. He declared that many are already in fear and are hiding themselves as described in this Scripture, although the great storm has not yet broken, and will not break out in its severity for a few years yet—probably not before 1915.

In the end it will be seen that the Divine permission of the reign of sin and death in the earth, instead of being a blot upon Divine character and a demonstration of Divine unwisdom and incompetency, will reveal the great Creator to His subjects, his children, as nothing else could have done.

The speaker closed with an exhortation that his hearers remember the words of Jesus, "Watch ye, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things coming upon the world, and to stand before the Son of Man."

A Surprise Wedding.

Cards were received yesterday by many Oakland people announcing the marriage of Miss Lorena Myrtle, eldest daughter of Mr. Ephraim J. Fringer, of Oakland, to Mr. John Rufus Chamblee, of Anderson, South Carolina. The wedding ceremony took place Tuesday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Sincell, the ceremony being performed by Rev. E. Manges, of the Oakland Lutheran church, in the presence of members of the immediate family of the bride. Following the ceremony the couple took their departure for points in the east and south. They will be at home after November 10th at Anderson, where Mr. Chamblee is engaged in cotton planting and manufacturing.

WASTE OF WAR

By Rev. Samuel M. Dick
Pastor of Wesley M. E. Church, Minneapolis

TEXT.—And he will judge between the nations and will decide concerning many peoples; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Isaiah 2:4.

This prophecy is beginning to reach its fulfillment. When the awful cost in life and treasure is reckoned with, it is astonishing that sensible civilized men should ever resort to war to settle any question. There is another reason apart from its destructive character why war should not be resorted to. It never settles any question. The best it can do is to restate it and put it in another form. Take for illustration the Civil war in this country. Did it settle the race question? Did it settle the slavery problem? Not by any means, but if the amount of money that war cost us during its progress and for pensions since, had been expended among the colored people of this nation for industrial education and other civilizing agencies that race today would have been further advanced in the scale of progressive peoples than it will 500 years from today under the present circumstances.

Christ's kingdom does not come by the sword. It is within you. The patriotism of war rules the world with the sword. The patriotism of peace rules the world with an idea. The one is spectacular and wins instantaneous applause; the other is quiet, moves unseen and its marks are seen only in generations. One is like a derrick, it moves the mass of iron by force applied in one place; other is like a sunbeam, it moves the mass of iron by the unseen expansion of its molecules.

The maintenance of peace by preparedness for war is out of harmony with the gospel, with reason, with ethics, with economics and with common sense, and any institution that is out of harmony with all these things should be discontinued. The prophet says the nations shall not only settle down to the great industries of peace but that they shall not learn war any more. As long as peace is maintained by overwhelming navies the nations are learning war and the progress of the world is checked. Given national jealousy, hatred, preparedness for war and any trifle is sufficient to produce war. Given national fraternity, great prosperity on the part of the people and no armament and no problem is sufficiently grave to produce war.

The logic of preserving peace by increasing the navies of the world would finally leave the world power in the hands of one nation. It would only be a matter of time when all nations but one would become bankrupt.

The foolishness of increasing armament is seen in the experience of our own peaceful republic. For the eight years preceding the Spanish war, our appropriations for the army were a little less than $24,000,000 per annum, and for the navy a little over $27,000,000 per annum. For the eight years preceding 1911 the appropriations for the army sprang to $83,000,000 per annum, and for the navy to more than $102,000,000. We are now spending for army, navy and pensions the enormous sum of $470,000,000, or 72 per cent. of the entire revenue of the United States. If this increase alone in the army and navy were turned toward the industries which make a nation rich and happy, it would enable and maintain an industrial and agricultural experiment station in every county in the United States and give it more than $50,000 per annum for its work. What would this mean to the people? Last year our farm products of all kinds were valued at more than $4,700,000,000. With an experiment station conducted as Minnesota is conducting her work among the farmers in every county, with $50,000 per annum to operate it, the agricultural products of this country could easily be doubled, and with its doubling every other industry would keep pace. As it is now, we are spending at least $125,000,000 annually on our army and navy more than is necessary for reasonable national policing, and thereby losing annually more than $4,000,000,000 which we might have if we followed the law of gospel and common sense and used the amount of money to develop the resources of the country that we are now fooling away on war measures and getting absolutely nothing for it.

How long, oh how long, will this wickedness and nonsense continue?

Abiding in Christ.

Abiding in Jesus is nothing but the giving up of one's self to be ruled and taught and led, and so resting in the arms of everlasting love. Blessed rest! It is the peace of God, the great calm of the eternal world, that passeth all understanding, that keeps the heart and mind. With this grace secured, we have strength for every duty, courage for every struggle, a blessing in every cross, and the joy of life eternal in death itself.—Rev. Andrew Murray.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

POVERTY NOT DRINK CAUSE

Prominent Writers Retard Temperance Movement by Theories—Diagnosis Is False and Harmful.

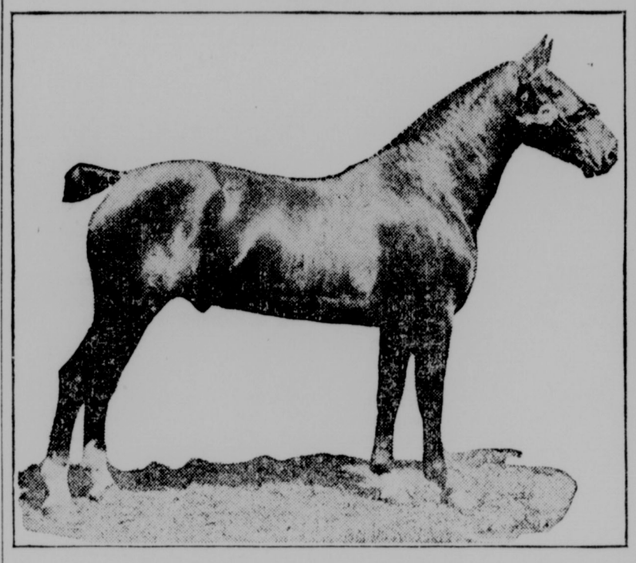
Some prominent writers on social science have seriously retarded the temperance movement by teaching that poverty, instead of being the result of the drink habit, is more often the cause of intemperance. They claim that many people dring because they are poor; they are not poor simply because they drink. They point to the human wrecks in the low saloon, and tell us that these persons are driven there by their miserable condition to drown the woes of want in the cup. They also tell us that the family in the hovel or dingy tenement is in distress not primarily through intemperance, but that the parents have been led to drink by their poverty.

The problem is complex, and no single explanation will fit all cases. But this theory advanced by some social scientists is, in the main, grievously false and exceedingly harmful to the cause of genuine temperance, writes Joseph H. Covoker in the National Advocate. These writers have mistaken the late and incidental condition of these lives for the real cause, which lies farther back and is radically different. It is often true, that later on in life people resort to drink to drown their misery; at this late stage they do drink because poor. But this is not the whole story, nor is it the important part of the story. When, however, we go back to early life, when we touch the formative period and the determining factor, we find that the young man did not begin to drink because poor. He first drank because it was the custom, because he enjoyed the companionship and exhilaration—perhaps to gratify an appetite, though this probably plays a smaller part than is generally supposed. Probably ninety-nine in every hundred of those who become drunkards start the habit without any reference whatever to financial conditions. It is only late in life, when want has overtaken them, that they drink because they are poor.

The appeal to life at this point is decisive. If any one will visit the places where young men congregate to drink liquor he will realize at once the obvious fact that practically none of these persons are there because they are poor. They are not even there simply because drinking is the cheapest form of amusement. The time will come when some will continue to drink because in want; but even here the poverty is only the incidental factor, and at this stage more result than real cause. A person with wide acquaintance among the poor and the intemperate would have to search a long time to find an individual who began to drink solely because destitute. There are such, but they are very rare. But those who are poor because they drink crowd upon us at every corner. Again, let any one investigate the history of the score of drunkards whom he may know. Probably not in a single case did poverty have anything to do with the beginning of the habit. Still again, how many cases have any of us known where loss of fortune has driven men to intemperance? Very few indeed. But we do know very many instances where too much money has made young men drunkards, who long afterward probably drank because poor, although their poverty really came as a direct result of using liquor.

These social scientists stop short with the wreckage late in life, but they fail to go back to the real cause; their diagnosis is false and harmful. The drunken parents do today send out for liquor to drown the woes of poverty. Speaking superficially you may say that they drink because they are poor. But when we go into the life history and look back far enough and penetrate deep enough what we really find is this: Originally it was not poverty that led them to the drink habit, but it was long-continued intemperance that has brought them to this sad condition. The score of workmen lining the bar of the obscure saloon are not there because poor, not because they have no other enjoyments in life; many others who are poorer and who have fewer pleasures are not there. A determining factor largely influential in causing their presence there is the ancient superstition that liquor is a life-giver—a superstition which science has shown to be utterly false. While it is not true that poverty of things is the chief source of intemperance, it is true that "poverty of life" largely causes the drink habit.

Profit From Working Class.



An ex-saloonkeeper says that "the mass of saloons do not live on salaried people, much less get rich off of them. Nearly all the trade and profit comes from the poor working classes. If the liquor trade depended upon the salaried class for support it would soon be a thing of the past."

EXERCISE CARE IN SELECTING PARENT STOCK FOR BREEDING

Breeders Do Not Give Sufficient Thought to Individuality, Size, Bone, Substance and Soundness—Temper or Temperament Not Considered, Speed Being One Object Sought for.

A Good Horse of His Breed—A Hackney.

(By CAPT. A. H. WADDELL.)

If we are good judges of human nature, or able to judge others by their biographers, we should feel very much inclined to lay a $10 bill to a 10c piece that the wily "Richard" who once made himself hoarse shouting "A Horse, a Horse, my Kingdom for a Horse," wanted a good one.

Richard had just killed five Richmonds, or thought he had, and was looking for another when his horse was killed under him, and when he uttered his memorable words. Yes, he wanted a horse and he wanted one badly enough, but, he wanted a good one.

A good horse was what he wanted, good horses are what we all want, and it is only the large breeder who can really tell us, how many bad horses he breeds, for one good one that he sells. This is in large measure due to haphazard methods in breeding; breeders are not careful enough in the selection of their parent stock, nor do they take pains enough to ascertain the peculiarities and characteristics of the families from which the parent stock comes.

In the trotting horse everything has been neglected for speed, and in the thoroughbred in this country, nothing but this element has been considered; the result is too well known to be recapitulated. Notwithstanding this nobody seems to try to remedy the defects that this near sightedness has produced. There is not one trotting horse in a thousand whose anatomical formation, physical and constitutional soundness, will permit him to become a 2:10 trotter, nor is there one race horse in the same number that can gallop a mile in first class company with any chance of winning, for the same reason.

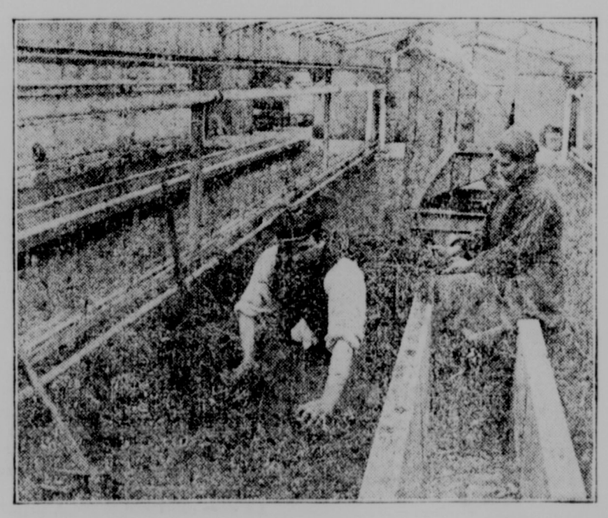
Breeders no not give sufficient care to individuality, size, bone, substance, and soundness; they never think of temper or temperament and only consider speed, which, although inherited on both sides is useless in a weakling.

Stamps and types of horses and ponies have been bred which are well exemplified in the Shire, Clydesdale, Suffolk, Percheron, Belgium and Hackney. Why cannot this obtain in some measure at least in the trotter and thoroughbred in America? It does in other countries and why should it not here, in the greatest and most lavishly, bestowed by nature for the purpose?

The American is the best business man in the world, as good a horseman as can be produced anywhere, and is always looking for the straightest way of getting to a certain point, and has certainly succeeded in surprising the world in this direction. He has produced the most extraordinary light harness horse that has ever been heard of, when speed alone is considered, and also some of the fastest thoroughbreds, and it seems that the time has not arrived when more care should be shown in the selection of horses for breeding purposes, so as to be able to produce sounder, bigger, and better individuals.

SUMMER WORK FOR CHICKENS

Where There Is Not Perfectly Comfortable Poultry House on Farm One Should be Provided This Summer.



(By MILLER PUVIS.)

If there is not a perfectly comfortable poultry house on the farm, one should be planned and provided this summer, at least before cold weather sets in, for it is poor planning to put off providing a warm poultry house until the time arrives for its use. A comfortable poultry house need not be a costly one nor a particularly warm one. Every poultry house should have two rooms with a tight partition between them. If it is build in this way, the flock may be crowded into one room when very cold weather comes, and the heat of their bodies will keep the room warm. A hen does not feel the cold as quickly as a man does, for her blood is five per cent. warmer naturally, and if she can sleep where there is no draft blowing on her she will be very comfortable in a room in which the temperature runs as low as 10 to 12 degrees below the freezing point.

ASPARAGUS PLANT IS HARDY

Asparagus may be started from seed and come into size for table use at the third year. Seed may be planted as late as mid-summer.

It requires about six weeks for the seed to germinate and come up. The young plants may be cultivated in rows as other garden vegetables and set in permanent rows or beds this fall or next spring.

The asparagus plant is doubly useful. The young shoots can be used for food and the foliage branches for decoration. Sprays of asparagus are equaled by few other plants for their pleasing effect in decoration.

The plants are very hardy, will stand all kinds of treatment, but will respond liberally to good treatment and will thrive in one place for ten to twenty years. The illustration shows a method of planting asparagus in a French nursery house.

THAT AWFUL BACKACHE

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. I was completely run down. On advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain since I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have the backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. OLLIE WOODALL, Morton's Gap, Kentucky.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for special advice. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.

"You better consult an optician."

"Don't we ever get a close decision?"

"Who ever told you that you could umpire?"

"Back to the ribbon counter for you very shortly, Percy."

"Say, honest, how much are you getting for throwing the game?"

"Don't you know enough to retire when you have gone totally blind?"

"You certainly must have something on your boss to hold your job."

"The only thing about you that looks like an umpire is your mask and protector."

"You better start to run for the back fence as soon as the game is over, for we are going to get you."

These, and a few million more "complimentary" expressions of a like nature are hurled at the umpire during the course of a closely contested game.

It is really strange and wonderful into what a frenzy the average baseball fan can work himself during the progress of an exciting game. It is almost incredible to think what he will do or say when he imagines the umpire has made a wrong decision that has apparently put his club out of the running.

Prominent attorneys, distinguished doctors, well-known actors, staid business men, in fact men of all classes, will invariably jump to their feet at what they consider a "punk decision," and shake their fists violently, utter all kinds of incoherent remarks, and insist that nothing will satisfy their thirst for revenge but the life blood of the poor, defenseless umpire. The next day, when some one meets one of the frenzied rooters, and in a joking way explains to him how he acted and tells him some of the things he said about the umpire, Mr. Loyal Rooter takes a vow then and there that he will never again open his mouth at a ball game, no matter how thrilling the situation. Perhaps the very next afternoon, if the proper occasion arises, he will unknowingly commit the very act of the previous day.

Civic pride is to be admired in all things. A baseball fan who doesn't want to see the home team triumph is surely a peculiar sort of man. Perhaps it might be well for him to have his sanity investigated. Desire to win at any cost however often makes intelligent persons absolutely unfair in their views and opinions.

The extent to which the fan will allow his civic pride to dominate his opinion was well illustrated to me one day last year. While on my way to the hotel after a particularly brilliant game, which the home team had lost by a score of 1 to 0, after a desperate struggle, I was much amused at the conversation of a number of dyed-in-the-wool fans who happened to be in the same car.

It was the unanimous opinion of every one that the home team needed good-sized boards instead of regulation bats, if they were ever to win a game. They cited a half dozen instances where a hit, or even a fly to the outfield, would have won the contest. All of them were sore over the loss of the game, principally because of the weak hitting of their favorites. They proclaimed the visitors stronger in every respect. That one run was the big event of the day. The fans seemed to forget that for 11 innings the hitting of the visitors was just as feeble as that of the home team. That the hit that sent the only run of the game across the plate was due to a lucky bound which sent it over the second baseman's head. To me it was one of the best games of the year.

The following day the home team won by a very one-sided score of 12 to 1. As fate would have it, I bumped into several fans of the previous day on the car down town. The contest was a decidedly poor one, I thought, the one and only redeeming feature being the hard hitting of the home club. The fans were satisfied, however, for it was unanimously agreed that the home boys had recovered their batting eyes, and that from now on they would make the best of them step the limit to win.

I shall never forget a little incident that happened to "Silk" O'Loughlin during a game at Washington, one day, which illustrates what some fans will do when the home team is getting trimmed.

I happened to be working back of the plate that afternoon, while "Silk" was performing on the bases. All the close plays seemed to come up on the bases. "Silk" had at least a dozen plays that could have been given one way or the other, because of the extreme closeness. Practically all of the plays went against the home team, and while "Silk" had little or no trouble from the players, a fan, who was sitting in the third base section of the grandstand chose to disagree with the arbitrator on practically all of his rulings. He kept up a volley of remarks throughout the game, and before its close had enlisted quite a few volunteers.

Because of the actions of this one lone fan, "Silk" was subjected to a rather strenuous afternoon, although his work was well nigh perfect. "Silk" discovered that his enemy was sitting in the front row of the grandstand, also that he wore glasses. He made up his mind long before the close of the game that he would express himself to the gentleman in question.

The home team managed to win out by a brilliant ninth inning rally. In his jubilation over the winning of the game, the fan had forgotten entirely that a person bearing the title of umpire ever existed. The Irish in "Silk's" blood was up, however, and he managed to work his way through the crowd to where the frenzied rooter was celebrating over the victory. The fan was a well-dressed chap, and appeared to possess more than the average intelligence.

"You have a lot of license to be roasting an umpire, when you have to wear a pair of thick glasses to be able to even see. I can't see how you ever managed to break into the grandstand. Your place is on the outside, looking through a knot hole." The fan said nary a word in reply, and "Silk" having gotten all the venom out of his system, was content to drop the matter. It was evident from the look of embarrassment that came over the rooter's face that he was thoroughly disgusted with himself. He just began to realize what he had been doing throughout the afternoon.

Shortly after we had reached our dressing room there was a knock at the door. We bade our visitor enter. He introduced himself as Dr. "So and So," a very prominent eye specialist. We both began to wonder if he had come to examine our optics.

"I just overheard your conversation with that excited fan, Mr. O'Loughlin," said the specialist. "I really can't blame you for saying what you did to him, but I would advise you to ignore him in the future. I've been treating that chap for a year for eye trouble. His sight is decidedly defective. He really can't see 90 feet with any kind of accuracy. He wouldn't have known whether it was you or Jack Sheridan umpiring the bases if some one hadn't told him."

"Silk" almost keeled over when he heard the news. It simply goes to show what baseball will do to a man, especially if the home team happens to be losing. This chap with the defective eyesight was getting an excellent umpire into trouble because most of the decisions were going against the home team, and he was so partisan in spirit that he could see only one side of the argument.

When you come to think it over, and weigh carefully the cold facts, it is really remarkable the work that devolves upon an umpire during a ball game. In the course of a regular nine inning contest he is called upon to render between 375 and 400 decisions. Rather remarkable figures. Considering his arduous duties, it is not to be wondered at if he errs. Indeed it is remarkable that the judges of play do not slip up more frequently. Here is a little data that is mighty interesting. Possibly a perusal of it may cause the umpire to receive more favorable consideration.

In a nine inning game on an average of 35 men on each team will face the pitcher, making 70 men in all who step to the plate in an attempt to outguess the twirler. Thus the umpire is called upon to pass judgment on three score and ten batters.

It has been estimated that the umpire makes four decisions on each man. In these modern days of baseball "groove" pitchers are mighty scarce. The pitcher is constantly trying to make the batter hit at bad balls on the outside and inside, while the batter is trying to make the twirler get them over. Consequently the game resolves itself into a continual battle of wits between the pitcher and batter.

Should the batter strike out on three balls, it would require three decisions. If the batter works the pitcher for a pass to first on four balls, it requires that many decisions. Often the count before the batter is finally retired or reaches first is one strike and three balls, two balls and two strikes, two strikes and three balls, three balls and three strikes, four balls and two strikes or any of the many other combinations that may arise. Thus it would seem that four decisions on each batter in connection with balls and strikes would be a fair estimate.

With 70 men coming to the plate in a nine-inning game, and each batter averaging four decisions, the umpire is called upon to render in the neighborhood of 280 ball and strike decisions.

That there are 20 decisions to render on balls in the immediate neighborhood of the foul line during the ordinary game is a conservative estimate. The decisions are often a matter of inches, and many times change the entire complexion of the game.

Of course, in a full nine inning game, 54 men must be retired before it is completed. If the home team happens to have made more runs in eight innings than the visitors in nine, they will refuse the last half of the ninth, making it necessary to retire only 51 men in order to complete the game. A decision is necessary on every one made, although frequently it is evident to every one that the man is retired as on a fly ball or when a man takes a healthy swing for the third strike. Such decisions are more a mere matter of form than anything else. On the other hand, there are perhaps 20 plays that come up in a game where the umpire rules the player is safe on a very close decision.

A resume would show 280 decisions on balls and strikes, 20 decisions on fair and foul hits, 54 rulings on outs and somewhere near 20 plays in which the runner gets the benefit of the doubt, and is called safe, making 374 rulings an umpire is called upon to make during a nine inning contest.

It is easy to sit in the grandstand or bleachers, surrounded by a lot of friends who see things just as you do, and umpire the game, when you are not busy munching peanuts. It is entirely different on the ball field, however, where you are a stranger in a strange land, with a hostile crowd ever ready to criticise and 18 active ball players and as many substitutes, together with two foxy managers, trying their level best to outwit you.

I happened to have an off day in Cleveland last year, and I decided to journey out to the ball park and call on my brother umpires, "Bull" Perrine and Bill Dinneen had been assigned to the game. After making them a friendly visit I told them I intended taking a seat in the grandstand to look them over. They laughingly assented and informed me that they would give their best performance of the season.

Bill Dinneen, the former star pitcher, worked the bases, and it seemed as if every decision was close. Philadelphia was the opposing team that afternoon, and despite the closeness of many of the plays there was scarcely a kick from any of the players. Cleveland was losing, however, and the fans made considerable fuss over several rulings on the bases by Dinneen. From where I was sitting in the rear part of the big grandstand it really did look as if he had slipped up on four plays. Observing that not a kick was made, I was convinced that something had happened in each instance which the fans in the stand—myself among them—had not noticed. I made note of the plays with the intention of asking Dinneen about them, just to satisfy my own curiosity, and after the game I went to his dressing room.

"Why did you call Collins safe at first, Bill, on that throw from Turner?" I asked.

"Why, there wasn't anything to that play," said he. "The throw you will remember was a trifle wild. It pulled Stovall some distance off the bag, and when he lunged back his foot was about three inches shy of touching first."

"Why did you call Baker safe at second?" was my second inquiry. "From the stand it looked as if the ball beat him to the bag by a yard."

"The ball beat him all right," said Bill, "but the force of the collision in touching Baker caused that young shortstop Knaupp to drop the ball. Had he held the throw, Baker would have been an easy out."

"Why did you call Birmingham out at second when Coombs threw to catch him napnapping? Looked as if Joe got back to the bag before the ball reached Barry's hands."

"He got back, but not to the bag," replied Bill. "Barry had him blocked off, and 'Birmy' slid against Barry's shoe, not the bag. He hasn't touched the base yet."

"Just one more, Bill. Why was Jackson out at third? It looked as if he easily beat Catcher Lapp's throw in an attempt to keep him from stealing."

"No question about his beating the throw," answered Bill. "He was safe a mile, if he hadn't overslid the bag three or four inches and allowed himself to be touched out before he was able to regain it."

On the four plays in which Dinneen was absolutely correct he was forced to submit to all kinds of censure, because the fans did not know what had really happened.

There are any number of points that the fans should take into consideration when they see the umpire declare a man out who seems to them to be safe beyond a reasonable doubt. Four of them I have already referred to; failure to touch the bag, due to being drawn off by a high, low or wild throw; dropping of the ball after having touched the base runner, due to the force of the collision; sliding of the base runner into the foot of the infielder, instead of the bag and the oversliding of the bag after having reached it in safety.

The fallaway slide is another point that causes all kinds of trouble for the umpires. This slide is used by most of the leading base runners, and consists of going straight for the bag until within a short distance of it, then falling away, so to speak, by throwing the body either towards the infield or outfield as best suits the occasion, and hooking one foot under the bag. This slide makes it very hard for an infielder to put the ball on the runner, as it gives him only the sole of the shoe, or as the players express it, only the spikes to touch.

The baseball fans, however, may be considered pretty fair creatures, and each year they are getting more fair-minded. I have noticed a vast improvement in each of the five years I have umpired in the major leagues. I attribute the improvement to the fact that the umpires are being backed up in their decisions, and the attitude of the sporting writers.

QUEER DISEASE IS IN UNITED STATES

Many Here Afflicted With Odd Ailment, Says Prof. Munyon.

GREWSOME CREATURES VERY COMMON, FINDS EXPERT.

Many people in the United States are afflicted with a queer disease, according to a statement yesterday by Professor James M. Munyon. He made the following remarkable and rather grewsome statement:

"Many persons who come and write to my headquarters at 53d and Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa., think they are suffering from a simple stomach trouble, when in reality they are the victims of an entirely different disease—that of tape worm. These tape worms are huge internal parasites, which locate in the upper bowel and consume a large percentage of the nutriment in undigested food. They sometimes grow to a length of forty to sixty feet. One may have a tape worm for years and never know the cause of his or her ill health.

"Persons who are suffering from one of these creatures become nervous, weak and irritable, and tire at the least exertion. The tape worms rob one of ambition and vitality and strength, but they are rarely fatal.

"The victim of this disease is apt to believe that he is suffering from chronic stomach trouble, and doctors for years without relief. This is not the fault of the physicians he consults, for there is no absolute diagnosis that will tell positively that one is not a victim of tape worm.

"The most common symptom of this trouble is an abnormal appetite. At times the person is ravenously hungry and cannot get enough to eat. At other times the very sight of food is loathsome. There is a gnawing, faint sensation at the pit of the stomach and the victim has headaches, fits of dizziness and nausea. He cannot sleep at night and often thinks he is suffering from nervous prostration.

"I have a treatment which has had wonderful success in eliminating these great creatures from the system. In the majority of cases it is necessary, in addition, to aid digestion, and ridding the blood, kidneys and liver of impurities it has proven fatal to these great worms. If one has a tape worm this treatment will, in nine cases out of ten, expel and pass it away, but if not the treatment will rebuild the run-down person, who is probably suffering from stomach trouble and a general anaemic condition. My doctors report marvelous success here with this treatment. Quite a dozen persons have passed the worms, but they are naturally reticent about discussing them, and of course we cannot violate their confidence by giving their names to the public."

Letters addressed to Professor James M. Munyon, 53d and Jefferson Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., will receive as careful attention as though the patient called in person. Medical advice and consultation absolutely free. Not a penny to pay.

For more than a generation, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have done more for pimples, blackheads and other unsightly conditions of the complexion, red, rough, chapped hands, dandruff, itching, scaly scalps, and dry, thin and falling hair than any other method. They do even more for skin-tortured and disfigured infants and children. Cruel Disappointment.

Jugend tells this story: "In the lower court of a small town in Saxony William had served faithfully and well as attendant to the presiding judge for many years without ever having received any reward aside from his legal stipend. On the day of adjournment for the season, when visitors had retired, the judge, who was also about to leave, asked: 'William, do you smoke?' Seeing a square box under the judge's arm, he answered respectfully: 'Yes, your honor.' 'I knew it by the smell of your coat,' said the judge, as he walked out."

Redskin in Family.

While examining a hole in a sudsy undergarment a woman noticed her hands which looked very red and angry. "If you'd throw away that yellow stuff and use Hewitt's Easy Task Laundry Soap as I do," smiled a friend, "you'd cut your washing troubles in two—save your clothes, and my! how fine your hands would feel. You know it's the original white, pure kind. Your grocer sells it."

Plenty of Stability.

"What do you think of it?" asked the proud Gothamite as he pointed out the skyscrapers.

"Well," replied the miner, "it looks like a permanent camp all right."—Success Magazine.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1911.

IN A a curt letter of resignation to the Mayor of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Prof. Herbert E. Mills, president of the Board of Education, cites among the reasons for retiring recent action by a majority of the Board which seemed to him to involve favoritism in business patronage, a low standard of qualification in an important appointment and other unfortunate tendencies.

Garrett county extends her condolences.

THE LA FOLLETTE PROPAGANDA.

Never before in the history of the Republic has a more systematic effort to discredit an administration been made by nominal members of that party from which the Executive was chosen. The progressives so-called, are making no false moves; they are timing every manoeuvre and it must be said to their credit they have not hesitated to reveal their hand.

John Tyler was in bad repute with the party that made him Vice-President, thus opening the White House doors to him; Andrew Johnson broke openly with the Republican Congress after he succeeded Lincoln, and Grover Cleveland, by his sturdy contempt for repudiationists, estranged more than three-fourths of his political friends; but these were not seeking renominations, at least not at the hand of the organizations they had embittered. The present situation is without precedent.

Almost simultaneously with the announcement that President Taft would visit a number of Western and Northwestern states, the "League" opened headquarters in Washington, and a contributing editor and principal owner of the leading Republican paper of the Middle West has been placed in charge of the propaganda.

One by one at intervals Senators and Representatives have been announcing their determination to oppose the present Executive's renomination, and here and there meetings have been called for the purpose of duly impressing the great American public. The latest of these meetings was held at Minneapolis Thursday, and it seems that the sentiment was all one way.

MINING COAL IN MARYLAND

The annual report of the State Mine Inspector shows a gratifying increase in the amount of coal produced in Maryland, being 677,096 tons over last year's total of 4,716,382 tons. Of this 3,938,909 tons were produced in Allegany county, giving employment to 5,042 men. This means a big industry for one county, the production being about half as much as that of West Virginia's best producing county, McDowell, and running far in advance of the average counties of that great coal state.

The inspector calls attention to some amendments in the laws governing mining which he thinks the Legislature should enact. The suggestions are (1) that fans should be run in mines employing ten or men, whether mines are running or not; (2) that miners shall be prohibited from "shooting off the solid"—that is, from blasting coal by merely boring a hole and without any cut-under; (3) to limit the amount of powder taken in the mine by one man to five pounds; (4) to compel the use of a better grade of oil for illumination; (5) to provide for miners' hospitals.

It will be noted that of the five recommendations made three are for the purpose of making the miner himself take better precautions for his own safety. It will strike the ordinary observer as peculiar, yet it is true, nevertheless, that the greatest danger to the miner is the miner himself. One of the chief of his offenses against his own safety is his tendency to save work by "shooting off the solid." The proper way to mine coal by the use of explosive is to cut away the bottom of the coal with pick or machine, then bore a hole some distance above the cut and put in the blast. This makes easy work for the explosive in "breaking down" the coal. But it is easier for the miner to simply bore a hole and put in a big blast and let it blow loose what it will.

As there is more resistance in such cases, "blow-out shots are more usual—that is, shots that act as a charge in a gun, simply blowing out the "tamping" around the charge, and not "breaking down" any coal. In such a case the flame leaps out from the hole for several feet, and if there is gas in the mine, or it is filled with fine, impalpable dust, this flame is liable to set it off and cause a terrific explosion. And the peculiar part of the matter is that it is the experienced miner who indulges in this labor-saving device.

Also it is the experienced miner who takes dynamite into the mine and this is usually against the desire of the operator, because dynamite, in addition to being highly dangerous, is a quick explosive and grinds much of the coal to powder. The practice of taking large quantiuies of powder into the mine is one that comes from indolence, and the amount thus carried in at one time should be limited to what is necessary for one day. Then, too, it is the miner who uses the inferior grade of oil that fill the mine with smoke and helps to generate a dangerous gas. So it is seen that the recommendations of the inspector respecting these three things are designed to save the miner from himself.

That all mines should be well ventilated goes without saying, and the fans should be kept busy at all times, whether the mines are being operated every day or not. Thus the gas and foul air are drawn out to allow the cool, pure air to rush in and take its place, and the mine is rendered safe. That hospitals should be established and maintained by the state for the care of those whose work in a hazardous occupation adds so much to the wealth of the state is a well-settled policy in mining communities and one that might properly be adopted in Maryland.

The inspector's report presents some very interesting things for Marvland legislators to consider.—Baltimore Sun.

THE PRESIDENT ON HIS TRAVELS

President Taft having given out the itinerary for his 13,000 mile journey to begin tomorrow, local reception committees may now remove the moth balls from frock coats, and borrow their high hats. They can also get all the satisfaction possible from rehearsing speeches that will be drowned out by the uproar of a crowd out to see a real live president.

Let the welcoming committees beware how they assume dignities with which they are not familiar. Well do we recall how in a not distant city a former president was once received.

Few of the men named to escort him to a picnic ground had ever worn a "plug hat." Blossoming out in this unaccustomed state, they were totally unable to guage the lofty sweep of the high head gear. Soon the glossy tiles were hopelessly dented by unforeseen contact with limbs of trees and low doorways.

The presidential custom of "swinging around the circle," is derided as a mere building of political fences. Yet even our revered George Washington descended from his pedestal five months after inauguration for a long journey out to meet the every day people.

When President Monroe took his four months' trip in a day of no telegraphs and slow mails, he got all out of touch with public business. The newspapers roasted him well for neglect of his work. They might have felt better had he not offended ideas of Jeffersonian simplicity by ascending the Delaware river in a boat lined with crimson velvet, propelled by oarsmen in white trousers and sleeves and crimson vests. When he got to New Hampshire the governor refused to receive him, and the party found their way around alone by the guide boards.

To many onlookers, the hurried and stereotyped speeches from rear car platforms, the meaningless tasks of handshaking, the time spent in useless contemplation of freight yards and cross ties make the journey an irrational one.

But no doubt the president gets his chance to talk with those in each locality who represent the conscience and brains of that community. At Washington he see mostly the politician class, who notoriously misrepresent the general public pulse.

On the road he will hear things worth listening to from men whose time is too valuable for hanging around Congressional lobbies.

The weather has been very bad as it rains almost every day and this makes wheat sowing very slow.

We have had one little frost here already.

STATE MINING INSPECTOR MAKES ANNUAL REPORT

Recommends to Coming Legislature Five Amendments to Mining Laws.

The report of John H. Donahue of Frostburg, state mining inspector for the year ended May 1, 1911, has been issued. The report says: "The year 1910, while showing no phenomenal or unprecedented features, was on the whole or at least for the miners, a much more prosperous one than the one preceding it. The total production of coal mined for the year was 4,716,382 long tons, showing an increase of 677,096 tons over the year 1909, and an aggregate production of 798 tons for each employe in and outside of the mine. The production by counties for the year 1910 was: Allegany county, 3,814,510 tons, mined by pick, and 124,399 tons by machines, making a total of 3,938,909 tons of coal and increasing the production 423,627 tons over the year 1909. Garrett county produced 777,473 tons by pick, and giving the large increase of 253,369 tons over 1909. Allegany county employed 3726 miners, 371 drivers, 390 inside laborers and 555 outside laborers, making a total of 5,042 men employed, an increase of 157 men over the year 1909. Garrett county employed 645 miners, 47 inside laborers and 97 outside laborers, showing an increase of 87 men over the previous year.

Machines are used only in Allegany county and 47 in 1910 against 41 in 1909. During the fiscal year ended April 1, 1911, there were 17 fatal and 125 nonfatal accident. For the calendar year ended December 31 1910, there was 18 fatal accidents showing a production of 262,021 tons for each life lost and 3.28 per thousand employed. The fatal accidents were two less than the previous fiscal year. The largest percentage of accidents occur at the working faces and in many cases due to carelessness on the part of the miner. The inspector says he had time and again recommended a more systematic inspection of the working face by the mine foreman and he "regrets that this and other suggestions of the inspector were not adopted." The mine foreman is to the mine the same as the peace officers is to the town. Mr. Donahue adds: "Where proper notices fail to be effective then he should firmly and impartially demand obedience to his instructions and to the rules and regulations of the mine under his charge and also observe and require obedience to the laws of the State governing the mines so that lives of the men under his care may be protected to this end that accidents may be reduced and lives may be saved." The inspector urges that reasonable discipline be impartially enforced.

The report recommends that the following amendments to the mining laws be passed by the next Legislature:

First. All mines employing ten men or more, where a fan is required, to keep it running all the time, whether the mine is running or not.

Second. To prevent the solid shooting of coal.

Third. The amount of powder, not to exceed five pounds, to be taken into the mines by one person.

Fourth. A better grade of oil for illuminating purposes.

Fifth. A miners hospital—something that is badly needed in the mining region.

The inspector commends operators who have installed telephones in their mines which are valuable especially in case of accident. He urges that all operators so equip their mines. The excessive use of explosives is condemned. The miners so addicted is called an "explosive miner," whose "wages are falsely made for they are not secured by superior skill in the art of mining, but through reckless daring, at the sacrifice of safety and some times his own life or that of his fellow workman."

PASTOR RUSSELL SUED.

Philip Sidersky, of Baltimore, Claims $10,000 Damages.

Philip Sidersky, of Baltimore, has filed suit for libel against Pastor Russell here and service on Pastor Russell was had at Mountain Lake Park, where he was in attendance as chief speaker at the International Bible Students' convention last week.

Sidersky's complaint alleges that he is and for a long time has been conducting a Christian Mission for Jews at Baltimore, and from which he received large sums of money, and upon which he depended for a livelihood and that Pastor Russell recently addressed a letter to the Jewish Exponent in which he stated that said Sidersky was associated with a street preacher, and that said Sidersky had induced the Morning Journal to believe that he is an Orthodox Jew. He further alleges that Pastor Russell is so widely and well known throughout the United States that the publication of said letter has resulted in the cutting off of his income, to his damage in the sum of ten thousand dollars, because the Jews no longer go to mission.

The complaint filed shows an interesting contrast between Sidersky and Pastor Russell. Sidersky alleges that he obtained the large yearly income which supplied his livelihood, by collecting money from those interested in his mission, while Pastor Russell has never taken up a collection during his forty years service as a minister, but on the contrary has been and is a large contributor to the International Bible Students' Association, of which he is President. Sidersky states that he is trying to Christianize his fellow Hebrews for a financial consideration, where Pastor Russell is advising the Jews to adhere to God's promises made to them through their prophets, and is not accepting a cent for so doing.

GOSS SALOON CLOSED FOR NON-PAYMENT OF RENT

The Proprietor's Continued Absence Brought About Climax of Affairs.

The saloon of Frank F. Goss, located on Second street at the junction of Liberty street, was closed last Friday by Sheriff Shartzer under a distraint for rent issued at the instance of Mrs. Goss, owner of the building in which the saloon is located, and which was rented by Mr. Goss prior to the marriage of the couple under a writtthn agreement by which he was to pay a stipulated sum monthly. According to the account he is in arrears on the rent to the amount of $370.

Several days prior to Friday Mr. Goss left Oakland telling members of his family that he was going up into the woods of the Kendall Lumber Company to superintend mill work for that firm and that he would return within the week. His failure to arrive home at the specified time and the absence of any word from him as to his whereabouts had a tendency to make his creditors uneasy. His business being left in the hands of one of his young sons who conducted it in a slipshod manner forced the climax and proceedings against him by his wife were instituted with the result that the place was closed and is now in the hands of Sheriff Shartzer.

Since the saloon was closed a number of attachments have been issued against Mr. Goss by merchants of Oakland as well as by some wholesale liquor and beer concerns in Pittsburgh and elsewhere.

Under the proceedings for payment of rent Sheriff Shartzer advertised a sale of the property to take place today, but yesterday the Cumberland Brewing Company through its local attorney, replevined the goods under a bill of sale executed to the concern by Mr. Goss, hence the sale will not take place and it may be some weeks before the matter is finally determined and the rightful owner of the property is placed in possession.

A letter received at this office a day or two ago from Dr. John E Legge, who has been in Europe for the past year taking post graduate courses at Berlin and Vienna, states that he leaves the former city in a few days for London, stopping at points of interest enroute. Messrs. Dixon & Kelso had unloaded in the yards here yesterdey a fifty-five horse power gas engine to replace a smaller one with which they had been operating their mill which was found to be too light since they installed their wheat grinding mills. The smaller engine was sold to Mr. Andrew W. Helbig, who has had it placed in the City Roller Mills and which will be used by him to operate the machinery in that establishment. The new engine received by Messrs. Dixon & Kelso is of sufficient horse power to operate both their wheat and buckwheat mills at the same time and which will facilitate the handling of grain in every particular. The new engine will probably be in operation within the next week.

"Human Hearts."

The forthcoming visit of "Human Hearts" will, no doubt, be welcomed by the lovers of all that is good in melodrama. "Human Hearts" is beyond question one of the strongest and most interesting of plays that has ever visited our city. The author belongs to that too small group of dramatists, who understand how to reach the heart and hold the attention of the audience In "Human Hearts" he has constructed a play that will never grow old. The principal theme of the play is "Hope," and has not some author written—"Hope springs eternal in the Human breast." "Hope" the one bright ray of sunshine that breaks through and illumines the clouds of despair that almost overwhelms poor "Tom Logan"—the hope of a good pure woman's love—the hope of brighter days—the hope of an honest man, unjustly accused of crime, that the criminal will be detected and his good name restored. The author has handled this subject with consummate skill and ease that shows the true dramatic instinct. The love interest is all as absorbing. The comedy element is introduced in such a way that it becomes relevant to the story, and the climaxes are worked out naturally and logically.

Orchard and Field Products Create Favorable Impression.

Lieut. E. S. West went out to Fairmont Tuesday, taking with him a large selection of farm and orchard products which he placed upon exhibition in a large show window in that city. The county fair is now being held in Fairmont and with the object of interesting visitors to the fair in Garrett county the exhibition of her products is being made by Lieut. West. After remaining in Fairmont all of this week the exhibits will be taken to Clarksburg on next Monday and placed at the Harrison county fair. Later they will be taken to Spencer, W. Va., where they will be exhibited the third time. While Lieut. West was placing the products in Fairmont much interest was evinced by the large crowds of people assembled there and quite a favorable impression was made upon many of them with the result that Garrett county may gain some more enterprising residents at the expense of our sister state.

In connection with the above Lieut. West has requested us to state that he will be pleased to receive from the producers other and additional samples of grain, potatoes, apples and other fruits which he will aid to the exhibits already placed at Fairmont, so that the products may present a fresh appearance when they are removed from that point to Clarksburg and Spencer.

He is especially anxious to secure specimens of freshly dug potatoes by noon of Friday of this week.

This campaign of advertising is costing considerable money, all of which comes out of the private purse of Lieut. West, and we feel sure that the people of the county will encourage him by placing at his disposal the products of their farms and orchards.

SYNOPSIS.

David Amber, starting for a duck-shooting visit with his friend, Quain, comes upon a young lady equestrian who has been dismounted by her horse becoming frightened at the sudden appearance in the road of a burly Hindu. He declares he is Behari Lal Chatterji, "The appointed mouthpiece of the Bell," addresses Amber as a man of high rank and pressing a mysterious little bronze box, "The Token," into his hand, disappears in the wood. The girl calls Amber by name. She in turn addresses her as Miss Sophie Farrell, daughter of Col. Farrell of the British diplomatic service in India and visiting the Quains. Several nights later the Quain home is burglarized and the bronze box stolen. Amber and Quain go hunting on an island and become lost and Amber is left marooned. He wanders about, finally reaches a cabin and recognizes as its occupant an old friend named Rutton, whom he last met in England, and who appears to be in hiding. When Miss Farrell is mentioned Rutton is strangely agitated. Chatterji appears and summons Rutton to a meeting of a mysterious body. Rutton seizes a revolver and dashes after Chatterji. He returns wildly excited, says he has killed the Hindu, takes poison, and when dying asks Amber to go to India on a mysterious errand. Amber decides to leave at once for India. On the way he sends a letter to Mr. Labertouche, a scientific friend in Calcutta, by a quicker route. Upon arriving he finds a note awaiting him. It directs Amber to meet his friend at a certain place. The latter tells him he knows his mission is to get Miss Farrell out of the country. CHAPTER XIV.

Over the Water.

Ram Nath, patient and impassive as ever, had the tonga waiting for Amber before the Residency. Exalted beyond words, the American permitted himself to be driven off through Kuttarpur's intricate network of streets and backways, toward a destination of which he knew as little as he cared. He was a guest of the state, officially domiciled at the designated house of hospitality; without especial permission, obtained through the efforts of the Resident, he could sleep in no other spot in the city or its purlieus. He was indifferent, absolutely; the matter interested him as recently—which is to say not at all—as did the fact that an escort of troopers of the state, very well accoutred and disciplined, followed the tonga with a great jangling of steel and tumult of hoofs.

Alighting in the compound, Amber disbursed a few rupees to the troopers, paid off Ram Nath—who was swift to drive off city-wards, in mad haste lest the gates be shut upon him for the night—and entered the bungalow. An aged, talkative, and amiable khansamah met him at the threshold with expressions of exaggerated respect, no doubt genuine enough, and followed him, a mumbling shadow, as the Virginian made a brief round of inspection.

Standing between the road and the water, the resthouse proved to be moderately spacious and clean; on the lake front it opened upon a marble bund, or landing stage, its lip lapped by whispering ripples of the lake. Amber went out upon this to discover, separated from him by little more than half a mile of black water, the ghostly white wall of the Raj Mahal climbing in dim majesty to the stars.

The Virginian remained long in rapt wondering contemplation of it, until the wind blowing across the waters had chilled him to the point of shivering; when he turned indoors to his bed. But he was to have little rest that night. The khansamah who attended him had hardly turned low his light when Amber was disturbed by the noise of an angry altercation in the compound. He arose and in dressing-gown and slippers went to investigate, and found Ram Nath in violent dispute with the sergeant of the escort—which, it appeared, had builded a fire and camped round it in the compound: a circumstance which furnished food for thought.

Amber began to suspect that the troops had been furnished as a guard less of honor than of espionage, less in formal courtesy than in demonstration of the unsleeping vigilance of the Eye—kindly assisted by the Maharana of Khandawar.

A man who, warmed by the ardor of his first love, feels suddenly the shadow death falling cold upon him, is apt to neglect nothing. Amber considered that he had given Ram Nath no commission of any sort, and bent an attentive ear to the communication which the tonga-wallah insisted upon making to him.

Ram Nath had returned, he asserted, solely for the purpose of informing Amber in accordance with his desires. "The telegraph office for which you enquired, sahib, stands just within the Gateway of the Elephants," he announced. "The telegraph-babu will be on duty very early in the morning, should you desire still to send the message."

"Oh, yes," said Amber indifferently. "I'd forgotten. Thanks."

He returned to his charpoy with spirits considerably higher. Ram Nath had not winked this time, but the fact was indisputable that Amber had not expressed any interest whatever in the location of the telegraph office.

Wondering if the telegraph-babu by any chance wore pink satin, he dozed off on the decision that he would need to send a message the first thing in the morning.

Some time later he was a second time awakened by further disputation in the compound. The troopers were squabbling amongst themselves; he was able to make this much out in spite of the fact that the sepoys, recruited exclusively from the native population of Khandawar, spoke a patois of Hindi so corrupt that even an expert in Oriental languages would experience difficulty in trying to interpret it. Amber did not weary himself with the task, but presently lifted up his voice and demanded silence, desiring to be informed if his sleep was to be continually broken by the bickerings of sons of mothers without noses. There followed instantaneous silence, broken by a chuckle and an applausive "Shabash!" and nothing more.

Amber snuggled down again upon his pillow and soothed himself with the feel of the pistol that his fingers grasped beneath the clothes.

Footfalls and hushed voices in the bungalow were responsible for the next interruption. Amber came to with a start and found himself sitting up on the edge of the charpoy, with a dreamy impression that two people had been standing over him and had just left the room, escaping by way of the khansamah's quarters. He rubbed the sleep from his eyes and went out to remonstrate vigorously with the khansamah. The latter naturally professed complete ignorance of the visitation and dwelt with such insistence upon the plausibility of dreams that Amber lost patience and kicked him grievously, so that he complained with a loud voice and cast himself at the sahib's feet, declaring that he was but as the dust beneath them and that Amber was his father and mother and the light of the Universe besides.

Somewhat mollified and reflecting, at the same time, that this was all but a part of the game, to be expected by those who patronize resthouses off the beaten roads of travel, the Virginian returned to his charpoy and immediately lapsed into a singularly disquieting dream. . . . He was strolling by the border of the lake when a coot swam in and hailed him in English; and when he stooped to look the coot lifted an A. D. T. messenger boy's cap and pleaded with him to sign his name in a little black book, promising that if he did so, it would be free to doff its disguise and be Labertouche again. So Amber signed "Pink Satin" in the book and the coot stood up and said: "I'm not Labertouche at all, but Ram Nath, and Ram Nath is only another name for Har Dyal Rutton, and besides you had better come away at once, for the Eye thou dost wear upon they finger never sleeps and it's only a paste Token anyway." Hearing which, Amber caught the coot by the leg and found that he had grasped the arm of Salig Singh, whose eyes were both monstrous emeralds without any whites whatever. And Salig Singh tapped him on the shoulder and began to say over and over again in a whisper . . .

"Hasten, hazor, for the night doth wane and the hour is at hand."

"What devilry's this?" Amber demanded sharply, with a threatening gesture.

But the native neither attempted to free himself nor to evade the pistol's mouth. "Have patience, hazor," he begged earnestly, "and make no disturbance. It is late and the sepoys sleep; if you will be circumspect and are not afraid—"

"Who are you?"

"I was to say, 'I come from you know whom,' hazoor."

"That all?"

"In the matter of a certain photograph, hazoor."

"By thunder!" Labertouche's name was on Amber's lips, but he repressed it. "Wait a bit." He gulped down the last dregs of sleep. "Let me think and—see."

This last was an afterthought. As it came to him he dropped the pistol by his side and felt for matches in the pocket of his coat, which hung over the back of a beside chair. Finding one, he struck it noiselessly and, as the tiny flame broadened, drew his captive nearer.

It was a fat, mean, wicked face that stood out against the darkness: an ochre-tinted face with a wide, loose-lipped mouth and protruding eyes that blinked nervously into his. But he had never seen it before.

"Who are you?" He cast away the match as its flame died and snatched up his weapon.

"I was to say—"

"I heard that once. What's your name?"

"Dulla Dad, hazoor."

"And who are you from?"

"Hazoor, I was not to say."

"I think you'd better," suggested Amber, with a grim significance.

"I am the hazoor's slave. I dare not say."

"Now look here—"

"Hazoor, it was charged upon me to say, 'I come from you know whom.'"

"The devil it was. . . . Well, what do you want?"

"I was to say, 'Hasten, hazoor, for the night——'"

"I've heard that, too. You mean you're to lead me to somebody, somewhere—you can't say where?"

"Aye, hazoor, even so."

"Get over there, in the corner, while I think this over—and don't move or I'll make you a present of a nice young bullet, Dulla Dad."

"That is as Allah wills; only remember, hazoor, the injunction for haste."

The man, a small stunted Mohammedan, sidled fearsomely over to the spot indicated and waited there, cringing and supplicating Amber with eloquent gestures. The Virginian watched him closely until comforted by the reflection that, had murder been the object, he had been a dead man long since. Then he put aside the revolver and began to dress.

"Only Labertouche would have to communicate with me by such stealth," he considered. "Besides, that reference to the photograph—"

He slipped hurriedly into his clothing and ostentatiously dropped the pistol into his right-hand coat-pocket. "I'm ready," he told the man. "Lead the way; and remember, if there's any treachery afoot, you'll be the first to suffer for it, Dulla Dad."

The Mohammedan bowed submissively. "Be it so, my lord," he said in Hindi, and, moving noiselessly with unshod feet, glided through the door which opened upon the bund, Amber close behind him.

In the water at their feet a light boat was gently nosing the marble bund. Dulla Dad, squatting, drew it broadside to the steps and motioned Amber to enter. The Virginian boarded it gingerly, seating himself at the stern. Dulla Dad dropped in forward and pushed off. The boat moved out upon the bosom of the lake with scarce a sound, and the native, grasping a double-bladed paddle, dipped it gently and sent the frail craft flying onward with long, swift, and powerful strokes, guiding it directly toward the walls of the Raj Mahal.

Two-thirds of the way across the Virginian surrendered to his mistrust and drew his pistol. "Dulla Dad," he said gently; and the man ceased paddling with a shudder— "Dulla Dad, you're taking me to the palace."

"Yea, hazoor; that is true," the native answered, his voice quavering.

"Who awaits me there? Answer quickly!"

"Hazoor, it is not wise to speak a name upon the water, where voices travel far."

"Dulla Dad!"

"Hazoor, I may not say!"

The boat surged swiftly on, while again and again Amber's finger trembled on the trigger. Though already the white gleaming walls towered above him, it was not yet too late—not too late; but should he withdraw, force Dulla Dad to return, he might miss . . . what?

He did nothing save resign himself to the issue. As they drew nearer the moonlit walls he looked in vain for sign of a landing-stage, and wondered, the lighted bund that he had seen from over the water being invisible to him round an angle of the building. But Dulla Dad held on without a pause until the moment when it seemed that he intended to dash the boat bows first against the stone; then, with a final dextrous twist of the paddle, he swung at a sharp angle and simultaneously checked the speed. Under scant momentum they slid from moonlight and the clean air of night into a close well between two walls, and then suddenly beneath an arch and into a cavernous chamber filled with the soft murmurings of water and with darkness.

Here the air was sluggish and heavy and rank with the odor of slime.

"Hazoor!"

It was Dulla Dad's voice, sleek with fawning. For all the repulsiveness of the accents, Amber was not sorry to hear them. At least the native was human and . . . this experience wasn't, hardly. . . . He leaned toward the man, eyes aching with the futile strain of striving to penetrate the blackness. He could see nothing more definite than shadows. The boat was resting motionless on the tide, as if suspended in an abyss of night, fathomless and empty.

"Well, what now?" he demanded harshly. "Be careful, Dulla Dad!"

"We are arrived, hazoor," said the native calmly. "If you will be pleased to step ashore, having care lest you overturn the boat, the steps are on your left."

"Where? . . . Oh!" Amber's tentative hand, groping in obscurity, fell upon a slab of stone, smooth and slippery, but solid. "You mean here?"

"Aye, hazoor."

"And what next?"

"I am to wait to conduct you back to your place of rest."

"Um? You are, eh?" Amber, doubtful, tried the stone again; it was substantial enough; only the boat rocked. He struck a match; the short-lived flame afforded him a feeble, unsatisfactory impression of a long, narrow, vaulted chamber, whereof the floor was half water, half stone. There was a landing to the left, a rather narrow ledge, with a low, heavy door, bossed with iron, in the wall beyond.

Shaking his head, he lifted himself cautiously out of the boat. "You stay right there, Dulla Dad," he warned the native, "until I see what happens. If I catch you trying to get away—the boat'll show up nicely against the opening, you know—I'll give you cause for repentance."

"I am here, hazoor. Turn you and knock upon the door thus"—rapping the gunwale of the boat—"thrice."

Amber obeyed, wrought up now to so high a pitch of excitement and suspense that he could hardly have withdrawn had he wished to and been able to force Dulla Dad to heed him. As he knuckled the third signal, the door swung slowly inward, disclosing, in a dim glow of light, stone walls—a bare stone chamber illuminated by a single iron lamp hanging in chains from the ceiling. Across the room a dark entry opened upon a passageway equally dark.

By the door a servant stood, his attitude deferential. As the Virginian's gaze fell upon him he salaamed respectfully.

Remained Long in Rapt Wondering Contemplation of It.

Amber entered, his eyes quick, his right hand in his pocket and grateful for the cold caress of nickeled steel, his body poised lightly and tensely upon the balls of his feet—in a word, ready. Prepared against the worst he was hopeful of the best: apprehensive, he reminded himself that he had first met Labertouche under auspices hardly more prepossessing than these.

The clang of the door closing behind him rang hollowly in the stillness. The warder moved past him to the entrance of the corridor. Amber held him with a sharp question.

"Am I to wait here?"

"For a moment, heaven-born!" He disappeared.

Without a sound a door at Amber's elbow that had escaped his cursory notice, so cunningly was it fitted in the wall, swung open, and a remembered voice boomed in his ears, not without a certain sardonic inflection: "Welcome, my lord, welcome to Khandawar!"

Amber swung upon the speaker with a snarl. "Salig Singh!"

Dominating the scene with his imposing presence—a figure regal in the regimentals of his native army—the Rajput humbled himself before the Virginian, dropping to his knee and offering his jeweled swordhilt in token of his fealty.

"Oh, get up!" snapped Amber impatiently. "I'm sick of all this damned tomfoolery. Get up, d'you hear?—unless you want me to take that pretty sword of yours and spank you with it!"

A quiver, as of self-repression, moved the body of the man at his feet; then, with a jangle of spurs, Salig Singh leaped up and stood at a distance of two paces, his head high, his black eyes glittering ominously with well-nigh the sinister brilliance of his vibrating emerald aigrette.

"My lord!" he cried angrily. "Are these words to use to one who offers thee his heart and hand? Is this insolence to be suffered by a Rajput, a son of Kings?"

"As for that," returned Amber steadily, giving him look for look, "your grandfather was a bunia and you know it. Whether or not you're going to 'suffer' what you call my insolence, I don't know, and I don't much care. You've made a fool of me twice, now, and I'm tired of it. I give you my word I don't understand why I don't shoot you down here and now, for I believe in my heart you're the unholiest scoundrel unhung. Is that language plain enough for you?"

"Is That Language Plain Enough for You?"

For an instant longer they faced one another offensively, Amber cool enough outwardly and inwardly boiling with rage that he should have walked into the trap with his eyes open, Salig Singh trembling with resentment but holding himself in with splendid restraint.

"As for me," continued Amber, "I suspect I'm the most hopeless ass in the three Presidencies, if that's any comfort to you, Salig Singh. Now what d'you want with me?"

A shadowy smile softened the blackness of the Rajput's wrath. He shrugged and moved his hands slightly, exposing their palms, subtly signifying his submission.

"Thou art my overlord," he said quietly, with a silky deference. "In time thou wilt see how thou hast wronged me. For the present, I remain thy servant. I harbor no resentment, I owe thee naught but loyalty. I await thy commands."

"The dickens you do!" Amber whistled inaudibly, his eyes narrowing as he pondered the man. "You protest a lot, Salig Singh. If you're so much at my service . . . why, prove it."

By way of reply Salig Singh lifted his sword in its scabbard from its fastenings at his side and, with a magnificent gesture, cast it clanking to the floor between them. A heavy English army pattern revolver followed it. The Rajput spread out his hands. "Thou art armed, my lord," he said. "I, at thy mercy. If thou dost misjudge my purpose in causing thee to be brought hither, my life is in thy hands."

"Oh, yes." Amber nodded. "That's very pretty. But presuming I chose to take it?"

"Thou art free as the winds of the morning. See, then." Salig Singh strode to the outer door and threw it open. "The way of escape is clear—not even locked."

"I see," assented Amber. "Well?"

Salig Singh shut the door gently. "Is there more to say?" he enquired. "I have shown thee that thou art free."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Insane for Hiring Him.

This one was told of the late Senator Dolliver. It is of the trial of a man for murder, who was undoubtedly guilty, but was acquitted, greatly to the surprise of the presiding judge. The jury had been out two days considering the case, without reaching a conclusion. Then the judge called the jury into court and asked what the difficulty was. The foreman said:

"Judge, there is only one thing that is troubling us. Was the prisoner's counsel appointed by the court, or retained by the prisoner himself?"

"The prisoner is a man of means," said the judge, "and he retained his own counsel."

Ten minutes later the jury sent out word that an agreement had been reached. They filed into court. The foreman rose and announced the verdict: "Acquitted, on the ground of insanity."

Looking for an Ax.

"There is a certain kind of souvenir fiend that has pretty poor pickings these days," said the policeman. "I mean the man or woman—usually it is a woman—who wants the ax with which the door is cut down and the furniture smashed in a gambling raid.

"There are Puritans a-plenty who beg us for these implements of destruction. Every raid that the public gets wind of brings out scores of letters from foes of gambling who have the cotton batting all ready to pack away the ax that struck a blow at corruption.

"Unless the old ax gets lost in the shuffle somebody in the crowd usually sends it to the person who can write the most touching letter."

PHILOSOPHY TO THE RESCUE

Pat Went Without His Steak, but at That Everything Was Not Lost.

Charles Nagel, secretary of commerce and labor, says the Irish race has, in addition to its sentiment and romance, lot of philosophy as one of its characteristics.

"The best illustration I ever heard of this," he explained to a dinner party one evening, "was the case of a poor Irishman who had been given a fine, juicy piece of steak. Being a religious man, he placed the steak in front of him, and there, in the shade of the trees surrounding his benefactor's house, he folded his hands, closed his eyes, and gave thanks to heaven for the meal. When he was in the attitude of prayer a dog rushed up and captured the steak. Pat looked around in time to see the food disappearing over the hill.

A WALKING SKELETON.

Worn Out and Prostrated with Terrible Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Margaret Cook, North Market St., Logan, Ohio, says: "It is almost impossible to describe my sufferings. My back ached constantly and so awful was the bearing-down pain that I could scarcely drag myself about. Kidney secretions were in terrible condition and pains through my head were so intense I could scarcely refrain from screaming. I could not sleep, was nervous and lost flesh so rapidly I looked like a walking skeleton. I doctored all the time but had begun to think there was no help for me. Then I began taking Doan's Kidney pills and was entirely cured. Doan's Kidney Pills gave me a new lease of life."

"Yes, Wilfred."

"What is reciprocity?"

"Reciprocity, Wilfred—"

But pause. Father never told. He slipped over no epigram. He knew not what was reciprocity. No. He was totally different from the average father figuring in this sort of short squib. He just told Wilfred to run along and play, and resumed his reading of the evening paper.

AT THE PARSONAGE.

Coffee Runs Riot No Longer.

"Wife and I had a serious time of it while we were coffee drinkers.

"She had gastritis, headaches, belching and would have periods of sickness, while I secured a daily headache that became chronic.

"We naturally sought relief by drugs without avail, for it is now plain enough that no drug will cure the diseases another drug (coffee) sets up, particularly, so long as the drug which causes the trouble is continued.

"Finally we thought we would try leaving off coffee and using Postum. I noticed that my headaches disappeared like magic, and my old 'trembly' nervousness left. One day wife said, 'Do you know my gastritis has gone?'

"One can hardly realize what Postum has done for us.

"Then we began to talk to others. Wife's father and mother were both coffee drinkers and sufferers. Their headaches left entirely a short time after they changed from coffee to Postum.

"I began to enquire among my parishioners and found to my astonishment that numbers of them use Postum in place of coffee. Many of the ministers who have visited our parsonage have become enthusiastic champions of Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Lovely White Hats

THIS is the whitest of white summers, and everywhere the preponderance of white gowns makes a background against which millinery is displayed to the very best advantage. The greater number of hats are white also, but not entirely. Plume-laden or flower-laden, they are adorned with exquisite colors. Pink, in the coral, seashell and other delicate tones; blue in the nattier and other grayish tints; lilac, rose, green and cerise, are favorites, and, just at the hour, yellow has put in an appearance. In any large gathering of women, out for the summer evening, these colors, in the liveliest of shades are scattered in a sea of white. For the entire costume, from shoes to chapeau, of the great majority is colorless, except for the trimmings on the hats.

Two very beautiful white hats are pictured here, which illustrate very clearly the foregoing. The small hat in white hair braid is decorated with a band of gray net on which a pattern in white beads is wrought. The transparency of the braid and delicacy of the net are adorable for midsummer wear. Two flat rosettes simulate roses full blown and are made of a light weight ribbon in a wonderful shade of pink. The rosettes are joined by a bridle of ribbon.

A rich hat in white hemp is covered with a plateau of princess lace which is fastened down with a twist of wide nattier blue ribbon having a highly lustrous surface. Small blown garden roses with foliage and some mossy stems, provide the touch of color here. Nearly half the plateau of lace is folded both from the left side and tacked to the crown, leaving the hemp braid uncovered.

Scarfs of white down and down with ostrich border finish the midsummer toilette, providing more warmth than one would imagine. In fact, they are quite equal to protecting the throat, even when their wearers are out until the "wee sma' hours," which are the coldest of the twenty-four.

SANDWICHES EASY TO MAKE

When a Quantity Is Required, as for a Picnic, Try the Following Method.

The picnic season—hence the sandwich season—is at hand. When quantities of these unfailing requisites are required, try the following plan and see how easily this trying work can be done: Cut the crusts from a loaf of bread with four strokes of a sharp knife—front, back and sides, then cut the crustless loaf in half, butter each half where you cut the loaf, slice piece of bread from each half, put in filling and the slices will exactly fit. Proceed, cutting one slice from each side of loaf. Wrap in waxed paper, and you will have dainty, symmetrical sandwiches when the luncheon basket is opened.

Place a napkin around the top of the pineapple, give it a twist, and the stem is removed. Lay pineapple on a board and with a sharp knife (silver is preferable) cut into slices. Pare each slice as you would an apple.

DAINTY LITTLE FROCK.

This dainty dress is of white batiste elaborately trimmed with swiss embroidery and valenciennes lace.

The skirt is plaited; the blouse forms a sort of corslet and the girdle is of ribbon fastened at the side with a cockade and long ends.

BROWN SAILOR HATS LIKED

Have Achieved a Popularity Almost as Great as Has Come to the Black.

Almost as popular as the black sailor hat is the one of brown straw, or its close kin, that of burnt straw. It is especially well liked for wear with the popular brown linen suit—for brown seems to be having quite a vogue this season.

Newest, of course, are the small sailor with the large head size, the small or medium sized brim and the rather high crown. These are somewhat trying to many types of women, but look exceedingly well on the girls who are "tailorish" enough to don them.

On the black and dark brown hats white bands are the most approved and fashionable style, while the burnt straw hats are encircled by bands of darker brown.

And the smartest hats, of course, are those of the extreme straws—either very rough or quite smooth and fine.

Changeable Taffeta Garments.

Not many are yet seen, but they are expected to have a great run a little later on. One reason why they are not yet more in evidence is undoubtedly because of the price of the French chiffon qualities of which they are made. From $2.50 to $3.50 per yard is asked in the retail shops for these new taffetas. By another season domestic manufacturers will have popular-priced lines, but if one desires an exclusive silk gown for the present summer she should invest in one of changeable chiffon taffeta.

Striped Coat Set.

Fine muslin, chiffon cloth, and marquisette are all used to make collar and cuff sets for short jackets. These, with eyelet embroidered batiste, have taken the place of Irish lace, which seems at a discount these days.

The striped coat sets are in any color that one wishes, not necessarily to match the suit. The collar is quite long, deep at the back, and finished with an edge of cluny lace or a hem of colored muslin or linen to match the stripe.

Of Fascinating Quaintness.

Frock of white cachemire de soie with peachblow satin stripes. The simply designed bodice has a finely plaited fichu drapery of Malines lace, finished at the top of the wide apricot velvet girdle by a rose of pale pink chiffon. The slightly gathered skirt is quaintly trimmed with three narrow ruches of white taffeta.—Vogue.

"No Chickens for Sale"

By DONALD ALLEN

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

The same train that carried Miss Mildred Frayne up to her aunt's home at Long Point to spend the summer month also carried Mr. Winfield Chester. They sat in different coaches, however, and there was no coincidence about it. Had they sat in the same chair car he might have been reading a magazine and she looking out of the window.

A quarter of a mile below Aunt Taylor's house lived old Mrs. Ryder. She was a widow and lived alone, and now and then she had a bad turn with rheumatism. Miss Mildred had known her for several years, and it wasn't two hours after her arrival that she started out to see the old lady. She found her in bed and sadly needing nursing.

"What you need," sagely replied the girl when she had heard the lamentations, "is chicken soup. It's better than all the doctors. I know at least a dozen people who'd have died but for chicken soup. Chicken soup with a little rice in it will make a well woman of you in two days."

"Maybe it might help me," the patient sighed.

"It will. It must. It cured me when I had typhoid fever and the doctors had given me up. I can get the rice up at the house, but as for the chicken—let me see? We have none, but one must be found somewhere. I'll go back and telephone to some of the farmers around here. Some of them will surely spare me a chicken."

Started Off With the Chicken.

"But it will be too much trouble."

"Trouble? Don't you think I'll willingly go to some trouble to save your dear old life? Just lie quietly till I come back. You can groan all you want to, however. Our family doctor says that groaning is a great help in curing any one."

Back to Aunt Taylor's the girl got down the telephone book and called up one farmer after another and inquired about the chicken market. It was not encouraging. Some had chickens and some hadn't, but those who had answered that none was for sale. The very last address proved hopeful. The call was answered by a pleasant voice saying:

"Why, yes, we have chickens here."

"And will you sell one?"

"I—I don't think we have ever sold chickens."

"But this is a special case. A chicken is wanted for an old lady who is ill."

"Then that alters the case, and I can promise you a fat pullet."

"How much is it?"

"No charge."

"But I'm willing to pay and want to. If you can send it down to old Mrs. Ryder's I'll give you 50 cents for it. Have the man bring change for a dollar."

"As I said before, we have no chickens for sale, but—"

"And send him soon, please. Good-by."

That message had gone to the house of Mr. Chester's mother, and he it was who had answered it. He believed the voice to be that of a girl. He hadn't hung up the receiver before he believed her to be good looking. His mother hadn't come into the room before he had made up his mind to be the bearer of that chicken.

"I know there is an old woman named Ryder living about two miles down the road," said the mother, "but she can't have a telephone in her cottage. It might have come from the Taylor's. I'll have James kill a chicken and take it down there."

"But I'm going to take it myself," said the young man.

"And why?"

"I want to see the girl who owns that voice."

"Nonsense! Mrs. Taylor is as old as I am. I don't know of a girl within five miles of here."

Nevertheless, the young man insisted on going, and after the unhappy pullet had had her neck wrung he started off with the body dangling from his right hand. Before his two-mile walk had been accomplished dusk fallen and the moon had come up. Thus, as he approached the cottage he saw a figure of a girl standing in the highway, and heard a voice calling:

"If you are the man with the chicken make haste, please. Yes, you have it, and I'm so glad and thankful. You see, I want to get the soup made right away. Did you bring change for a dollar?"

"Well—er—n-o-o," was the reply.

"Why, you are not a farmer's hired man!" exclaimed the girl as she looked at the chicken carrier for the first time.

"No, but I have brought the fowl. Let me carry it in for you, please. It's bleeding yet. My name is Chester."

"But really—"

"And do you know how to pick and dress a chicken?"

"My stars, but I never thought of that, and Mrs. Ryder's sound asleep! I am Miss Frayne, Mrs. Taylor's niece. I'll have to run up and ask auntie."

"Perhaps I can help you," said the young man, trying hard to look wise. "To get the feathers off easily you have to scald the bird, I believe. Can you get some hot water?"

"I've got a big kettle on the stove, and here's a dishpan. But you mustn't help. You must take your pay and go. That is—that—"

"That is, I'm going to help with the chicken. You might spoil it for soup, you know. We lay it in the dish. Now we pour on boiling water. Now we turn it over. After five minutes the feathers will be loosened."

"But you are a gentleman—and you are a young man—and you must live in the city—and how do you know? If I don't know how to dress a chicken why should you?"

"And now we take it outdoors," continued the young man with a smile, "and don't you see how easily the feathers come off? And while I'm holding the body over the flame of the stove for a minute you will please get me the butcher knife. The chicken must be drawn and then cut up."

"But why do you help?" asked Miss Mildred.

"Because I feel sorry for Mrs. Ryder, and because you don't know how to dress a chicken. Now the knife. Now to put the pieces in cold water and rinse them thoroughly. One piece will do for all the soup she'll want tonight. Only about a quart of water. Now put in the rice and pepper and salt and boil for 30 minutes, and there you are. I must go now, but I'll drop in in the morning to see how the patient gets along."

"But who—who asked you to?"

"Oh, I furnished the chicken, didn't I?" he answered with a laugh. "Good-night."

Forty minutes later, when old Mrs. Ryder was taking her chicken soup and telling how good it was, she noticed a serious look on Miss Mildred's face and asked what had happened.

"Why, a young man brought this chicken."

"Bless his kind heart!"

"And he dressed it for you."

"Bless him some more!"

"And he bossed me around terribly."

"He did, eh?"

"And I know just how things are going to turn out. He'll come here again tomorrow, and then I shall have to ask him to auntie's house, and she'll like him, and he'll like me, and I—I—. Well, it won't be two months before he'll say he loves me and must have me, and—and—"

"And you'll be engaged, and then married and be one of the happiest brides in the land. What a fine chicken! What beautiful soup! Why, that young man is worth his weight in gold!"

"Love and Life."

We find the following tolerably clever description of love in an old magazine. "Love is like the devil, because it torments us, like heaven, because it wraps the soul in bliss; like pepper, because it often sets one on fire; like sugar, because it is sweet; like a rope, because it is often the death of a man; like a prison, because it makes one miserable; like wine, because it makes us happy; like a man, because it is here today and gone tomorrow; like a woman, because there is no getting rid of it; like a beacon, because it guides one to the wished-for port; like a will-o'-th'-wisp, because it often runs away with one; like a little pony, because it amuses nicely with one; like the bite of a mad dog or the kiss of a pretty woman, because they both make a man run mad; like a goose because it is silly; like a rabbit, because there is nothing like it. In a word, it is like a ghost, because it is like everything and like nothing—often talked about, but never seen, touched or understood."

Belle of the Beach.

"I got my hand stung by a sea nettle," said the young girl.

"Terrible; too bad."

"It wasn't so bad. Four young men insisted on holding my hand all at once."

Shining.

"I saw a bright little fellow yesterday."

"What did he say?"

"Nothing. He'd just had his bath."

HE HAD THEM IN A CORNER

Clergyman's Rebuke to Thoughtless Youths at Once Neat and Disconcerting.

A well-known clergyman was one day in a barber's shop, when four or five young men walked in whom he knew by their voices, but who did not recognize the man in the chair, with lather all over his face. They proceeded to spend the time by telling stories and using expressions which, to say the least, were rather strong. When the barber pulled away the towel the clergyman, cleanly shaved, stood before them. So nonplussed were they that no one tried to take the vacant chair, and the barber called several times: "Next gentleman!"

The clergyman smiled somewhat grimly as he said:

"It isn't a bit of use, John. There's not a man here who has the effrontery to answer to that name."

Do You Wash in Streaks?

Some women do. They can't help it. They don't have time to wash out the streaky yellow soap. They are too tired, anyway. "There's no yellow in Hewitt's Easy Task Laundry soap. It's white and pure. Makes a quick, foamy suds that chases dirt out and sends the wash out snow white to the line. Your grocer has it. Five cents a cake.

A short time later Janet was heard confiding to one of her playmates:

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The season here is practically closed although a number of families still remain, some of whom will be with us well up towards winter.

Our resident population will be largely increased this winter. We expect to have about eighty families on the Park which will give us a population of about four hundred.

About all the delegates to the Bible Student's Convention have taken their departure. But few were added to their cult in this neighborhood and we heard of a number who left here before the convention closed saying they "were going back to their churches and try to do their duty in the future."

Mr. Edward O'Donnell left Tuesday morning for a visit to Pacific Coast cities, and on his return will visit his sister in Oklahoma. He will return in about a month.

Mrs. S. L. Allen, of Baltimore, who recently returned from a tour of Europe, is here for a few days to close Allenhurst for the winter.

Miss Otley, who had charge of Queenwood, was called Sunday night to the bedside of her uncle in Washington D. C., who is extremely ill. She will return to the Park today or toworrow.

Sunday morning last Dr. C. E. Shelton preached in the M. E. Church and will again preach Sunday evening. There should be a full house to hear this eloquent gentleman. Sunday school at 10 and preaching at 11 a. m.

Miss Mary Simpson, of Cumberland, has been visiting the Misses O'Donnell here, and other friends at Blaine.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Sharpless, of Wildell, were visiting friends here last week.

The Epworth League held a largely attended reception in the basement of the M. E. church on Thursday evening last. A number of new members were enrolled.

Mr. Roy Rafter, the Prince of Good Fellows, and purveyor to the automobile travelling public, has two machines now in service. Roy never lets the green grass grow under his wheels and the writer can testify that there are some stretches where his machine only hits the roads in the high places, between here and Oakland. The main object is to "keep your seats, gentlemen," when Roy is at the steering wheel.

Hon. J. Elbert Chappell and your correspondent left on Sunday morning for a two weeks' outing. Their camp is located on the South Branch, some twenty miles south of Keyser, where there are good fishing grounds, and the scenery is grand, gloomy and peculiar—and then some.

If the "boys" are not too backward about coming forward—especially those who have not been very early of late—and others who have always been behind before—it will not be a great while until THE REPUBLICAN will be called upon to record a double wedding; and maybe a triple one. Selah.

Quite a number of our young men attended services (?) at Davis on Sunday. Much enthusiasm was manifested from the first inning to the finish of the game. "Nutting lak eet, ever, Toctor," remarked our friends, Charlie Jouvenat. Charlie is of French extract, you know, and consequently somewhat emotional.

Some of our farmers are a little behind with their work—and some housekeepers are late with their daily tasks—but the liquid refreshment train from Westernport—which brings wine for sacrimental, and other purposes—invariably arrives on time to the minute, and there is much rejoicing then, there and thereafter. FRIENDSVILLE.

Miss Minnie Kamp was the guest of Frederick Kamp and family for a few days recently.

George F. Frazee has bought the Racket Store, of Leon Hardie, in the K. of P. building, and will continue to do business there, while Mr. Hardie intends moving South. The people will all regret seeing Mr. and Mrs. Hardie leave our town, for they have a host of friends here.

A number of preachers arrived at our town one day last week, their destination being Accident, where the German Lutherans held Conference. The Crawford Hotel provided dinner for them on their arrival. The hotel's capacity was tested that day, for some forty guests ate dinner there.

Earl Dean, of Pittsburg, is a visitor to our town at present and will remain a few days.

Mrs. E. C. W. Ryland is sick, but we trust she will soon recover.

Mr. and Mrs. Troy Glover, of Confluence, were the guests of Jessie Frazee and family on Saturday.

Urbin Ross returned home from a visit to Midland on Thursday. He spent several days in the house on his return, being sick, but is again out, we are glad to report.

A lecture was given in the M. E. church on Monday evening on "The Ups and Downs of Life." Not a very large audience was present as it was not advertised, and many did not know of it.

Saturday was to have been a picnic day here, as the ladies and school of the Christian Church had advertised, but the rain came down in torents from early morning until two o'clock, and it was called off. Suppers were served in the opera house with a festival in the evening, and a large crowd gathered. Addresses were made by Rev. Browell, the pastor, and Frank Conway. Some solos were rendered by Mrs. Browell, who is a singer of great merit. She has a cultivated and beautiful voice, and charmed all her listeners. The band played in its usual good style throughout the afternoon and evening.

An accident happened to a team of horses, belonging to our liveryman here, on Monday afternoon. Urbin Ross had driven a drummer out, and on returning while crossing the tracks of the lumber company's railroad, the locomotive came along with steam escaping which frightened the horses and they ran, throwing the occupants out, and wrecking the buggy. The team had not been recovered on Monday evening. Both parties were badly shaken up, although no bones were broken.

How about that new road the people are wanting so badly. It seems rather mysterious that some people that were so enthusiastic about it being built are now so silent. What has brought about the change? The people want that road built and did everything according to the law in applying for it. What is the reason we don't hear from it?

The Pittsburg Post's description of Oakland is a fine writeup, and we believe everything said of our county seat, for it is all true, but we must not forget that there is another fair spot in Garrett county, an enterprising community that is doing business right along, that is just as healthy, that has the best mineral resources and fine water power going to waste, although some of it is used for milling purposes, and for electric power to light our town, still there is lots of it for other business enterprises that will come in in the near future. Our town is yet in its infancy, but it is not going to be always so. Why when the politicians come around to see us, and mind they don't forget to come, they tell us what a fine little city we have, and what a fine quality of persons we are, and we put our thumbs in the armholes of our vests, and swagger around for we know it is true, every word of it, and it don't swell us up any. We have no newspaper published here yet, but THE REPUBLICAN comes regularly every week and contains all the news of this vicinity and you ought to get it, if you don't already, A word to the correspondent here will put you on the subscription list immediately.

BITTINGER.

David Miller, of Deer Park, paid a pleasant visit to friends in this vicinity last Sunday evening.

The match game of base ball which was to have been played between the Meadow Mountain team and the Bittenger boys, on last Saturday afternoon was postponed on account of the wet weather.

Mr. Benjamin Shepp Writes His Friends Through This Medium.

To the Editor of The Republican.

When visiting through Garrett county, in July last, I promised a good many of my old friends to return in the fall, but I have spent so much time in other States that I will have to cut the return visit out. I have just arrived here from a trip through the New England States, and will give a brief outline of my journeyings.

On leaving Pittsburgh I went to Lancaster, Pa., around which is the finest farming country, and produces the most abundant crops of any I saw. The farmers are composed of Amish, Mennonites, Quakers and Dunkards. On leaving Lancaster we went to New York City, by way of Jersey City, passing through the tunnel under the Hudson river, thence up the Hudson river by daylight, which afforded a fine view of the scenery, to Albany; from Albany through Vermont to Massachusetts, on the way passing through the Hoosack tunnel, which is five miles in length; thence to Concord, N. H.; from there to the Lakes and the White Mountains, returning by way of Manchester, thence to Portland, Me.; from there to Boston, Mass., thence to Providence, R. I., New Haven., Conn., and from there to New York city, and from New York to this place. COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT BROWNING ARRESTED

County Superintendent Ed. A. Browning was before Justice E. I. West last Saturday, having been arrested the afternoon preceding upon two warrants charging him with assaults upon Mary E. Notes and her husband, Oscar Notes, both colored.

The two trials were heard in the presence of a crowd of people which filled every available inch of space in the Justice's office and were listened to very attentitively by every one present.

The trial of the alleged assault upon the woman was heard first. The testimony was to the effect that Mr. Browning met the woman by appointment at the high school building for the purpose of engaging her to act as janitress at the building during the school term. Satisfactory arrangements were arrived at and she was engaged to perform the work at the sum of $6 per month. In parting Mr. Browning testified that he laid his hand upon her shoulder and said that he believed she was an industrious woman and would give the building the attention required. The woman's testimony was somewhat different from that of Mr. Browning. Upon the charge of assaulting the woman Justice West rendered a verdict of not guilty.

In the case of the colored man against Mr. Browning the court rendered a verdict of guilty and fixed the fine at $10 and costs, amounting to $13.95 in all.

The assault upon the colored man occurred Friday afternoon in the office of the Board of Supervisors of Election at the court house, of which Notes is the janitor, and grew out of the alleged assault made upon the colored man's wife by Mr. Browning, the former having given free circulation to the matter which came to Mr. Browning's ears and he attacked the man with a chair after exchanging some very uncomplimentary and profane words in which the assault upon the the colored woman was stoutly denied by Mr. Browning.

REV. G. R. WILLIAMSON WILL GO TO MEADVILLE

Transferred by Bishop Berry to Erie Conference Monday Morning.

The West Virginia Conference of the M. E. church will lose one of its strongest preachers and the people of Oakland, especially members of St. Paul's church, will regret to learn of the transfer of Rev. G. R. Williamson from his pastorate here to that of First Church, Meadville, Pa., which was announced Monday morning at the closing session of Erie Conference by Bishop Berry.

Rev. Williamson's first intimation that he was to be transferred was contained in a telegram Monday morning announcing his appointment and urging him to accept. He hurriedly called his official board together and a conference was held when it was decided that while they regretted to have him sever his relationship with the local church the board would not stand in the way and consented to his transfer.

The Meadville church is considered one of the best appointments in the Erie conference and Rev. Williamson's appointment to that charge is a recognition of his ability as a preacher and pastor. The best wishes of the people of this community follow him and his family.

CIVIC CLUB ADDRESSED BY LADY

An Excellent Talk Upon Civic Life Delivered by Mrs. Barroll.

The ladies of the local Civic Club who did not attend the meeting of the organization last Tuesday afternoon missed a very delightful and entertaining talk upon the needs of civic improvement delivered by Mrs. Barroll, of Chestertown, Md., who has been engaged in civic work for the past fifteen years in her home city, which is one of the beauty spots of the Eastern shore, made so by the untiring efforts of the ladies of the town and the enthusiastic support tendered them by the business men.

The ladies of the club who were present were fully repaid for venturing out in the rain of the afternoon as the speaker gave utterance to many practical thoughts that will prove helpful in the work being carried on in Oakland.

Another meeting of the club will occur on Friday afternoon at three o'clock when every member is urgently requested to be present.

The waste paper baskets, ordered some time ago by the club, have been received and have been placed at prominent points along the streets. That they are appreciated by the residents of town is apparent by the use being made of them.

GARRETT CO. PRODUCTS FAVORABLY RECEIVED

At Points in West Virginia Where They were Placed upon Exhibition.

Mention was made in this paper last week of the Garrett county products taken to Fairmont by Lieut. E. S. West, and there placed upon exhibition in a large show window upon one of the main streets of that hustling young city.

In commenting upon these exhibits the Fairmont West Virginian of of last Thursday contained the following which appeared in a prominent place in that paper:

Lieut. E. S. West, representing the Board of Trade of Oakland, Maryland, placed in the window of S. M. Wise, the Main street meat dealer, a magnificent display of farm products and fruits from Garrett county, Md., which is attracting a great deal of attention.

Almost everybody knew that Garrett county was famous for buckwheat but the exhibit on display is an eye-opener to the importance of this section and Mr. West says Garrett county agriculturally and horticulturally speaking has just been discovered.

The crop yield per acre is very large. For instance the average yield of wheat is 30 bushels, the maximum being 72 bushels; oats, 105 bushels, weight 42 pounds, ten pounds above the average; buckwheat, 50 bushels; corn, shelled, 70 bushels; potatoes, 450 bushels; timothy, three tons; Alfalfa, seven to ten tons.

It is a matter of record as well as a great deal of pride to the citizens of Oakland that Mr. Geo. T. Porter, of that city, at the State Horticultural and Agricultural Exhibition at Baltimore took sweepstakes on wheat, first in oats barley and corn.

The fruit on display as well as the photographs of the trees speak for themselves. The fruit trees of this section are free from the San Jose scale and require no spraying. No fruit on exhibit is from sprayed trees. Here are to be seen apples weighing over a pound and measuring as large as fourteen and a half inches in circumference; plums larger than hens' eggs and a two foot branch from a pear tree carrying over forty pears.

The advertising matter accompanying the exhibit states very forcibly: "Garrett county, Maryland, never had a crop failure. We have taken every first prize in apples, wheat, oats, buckwheat, potatoes, corn and hay at State fairs. Yield per acre cannot be beaten.

OUR BALTIMORE LETTER.

Politics Freely Discussed By Our Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, MD., Sept. 18, 1911.

If the Hon. Blair Lee was really sincere in his public declarations when he seconded the nomination of the Democratic candidate for Governor, and if he really means it when he asks his erstwhile followers to support the Mahon-Smith-Vandiver-made candidate, then he as well as the Democratic bosses will find they have a big surprise coming when the votes are counted in the election—that is, in those sections of the State where the votes are counted, because here in Baltimore the simple formality of counting the ballot is infrequently dispensed with when it best suits the purposes of "Sonny" Mahon, as witness the discoveries made by Thomas F. McNulty, the "sweet singer of the Democratic party;" and there is a well-grounded belief that Mr. Gorman won his own nomination in much the same way as Mr. Hughes (McNulty's opponent) won his.

But if Mr. Lee has any idea that he is going to deliver even a small percentage of his excellent following in the recent Democratic primary over to "Sonny" Mahon's candidate, then he is not the man of good judgment the people think he is, nor the sagacious politician he is credited with being. As a matter of fact, Hon. Blair Lee made a mis-fire when he pledged his own support and that of his friends to Mr. Gorman and the machine. Those Democrats who followed Senator Lee's standard in the late primary followed the principles of the Lee doctrine rather than the man himself, so that, no matter what attitude Mr. Lee may now take with respect to Mr. Gorman, his progenitor, Mahon, and the others of the Democratic bosses, the Democrats who lined up against them in the primary are just as much opposed to the gang and their methods today as they were on August 29th, and probably more so, since they have seen how dogmatic they have been and how consistently they have kept and are keeping the Lee following from getting too near the front in party affairs.

Blair Lee's supporters in the counties have not so soon forgotten Mr. Gorman's public record—expounded to them with so much earnestness and so much eloquence by Senator Lee himself in those days when they cast their lots with him and pledged themselves, with him, "to die, but never surrender." They know that he is the same Gorman who spent the public money with amazing extravagance during the last session of the Legislature when he was President of the Senate; the same Gorman who opposed the primary election law, impeded the passage of the public utilities bill; the same Gorman who denounced everybody and everything not in accord with the plans and policies laid down for his own personal and political aggrandizement; the same Gorman who was denounced by the press of the whole State for his wanton disregard for beneficial legislation and economy, and for his insistent energy in behalf of every political scheme that would aid the bosses and strengthen the machine; that he is the same Gorman who, because of his persistent and arbitrary antagonism toward every movement and every measure for the good of the people of the State, "was on the very brink of being removed from his high office as President of the Senate—an act which would have brought disgrace upon the people of Maryland," a proceeding in which Hon. Blair Lee, as a member of the Senate, threatened and instituted, and only relented upon Mr. Gorman's promise to "be good."

The people of Maryland, including the loyal followers and supporters of Senator Lee, know that this is the same Gorman who bitterly, aye, viciously, fought and opposed every proposition that came up in the last Legislature which he now pledges himself to advocate and support, with an enthusiasm born of a desire to perpetuate ring rule in Maryland as well as in Baltimore City through the medium of Mahon and the bosses by his election as Governor; and under these circumstances, whatever may have been their friendship for Senator Lee, they will not allow that gentleman to stultify them and the principles for which they fought together by meekly submitting to the dictation of "Sonny" Mahon, and toss their caps high in air at every sound and mention of his name.

It is hard to conceive that a man of Blair Lee's positive opinions and independent action would so readily cast his principles and policies aside by supporting Mr. Gorman under all the circumstances; but even if such a disappointment should come to pass, his admirable leadership is not potent enough to force his thousands of followers amongst the sturdy yeomanry of Maryland to so far forget themselves and the reforms for which they stand—to forget their duty to their State and to themselves.

The management of the Garrett County Telephone Company, in order to greatly improve the service, has a force of men at work erecting new poles and equipping them with cross arms to accommodate a number of new through wires running from Oakland to points north of town. With this arrangement in working order no unnecessary delay is anticipated in the dispatch of messages as subscribers will not be forced to wait for a line, the new arrangement providing a number of through lines as heretofore but one wire was in service. The new equipment will be completely installed within the present month.

Money

By Dr. Frank Crane

Since the dawn of preaching we preachers have been threatening rich men with our right fist—and extending to them our left palm. It is hardly to be wondered at that we find difficulty in being taken seriously.

And our advice has been so confusing that we have not had much effect. For now we exhort the youth to all the virtues, giving as an inducement the assurance that thus they will be enabled to get on; and now again we turn to those that have gotten on and warn them of the danger of riches. It might as well be asked, if riches be dangerous, why acquire them; and if virtues lead to riches, are they really worth cultivating?

It may be well, therefore, to set down a few common sense facts in re riches and the relation of the same to the moral values.

In the first place, money is simply the token or sign of our common human wants. It means power, power over others, power to make our personality felt. No wonder we want it.

Again it means liberty. Poverty is a curse. It ties the hands. It binds the mind. It narrows the soul. One who has to sweat ten hours a day for bread has no time nor strength left to develop the higher part of himself.

Money means also a full life. We can gratify our cravings, whether they be for beer or art, for Paris gowns or Wagner music. With money we have a chance to grow; without it we are stunted.

Money, therefore, is simply concentrated—we might say canned—human value.

It naturally follows that it is good or bad, never of itself, but only as giving opportunity to its possessor. Here, then, we have the moral gist of the whole matter: money is simply—opportunity.

It unlocks the door and bids the cramped and chafing passion go and do its will. It liberates desire. Hence it simply emphasizes a man. If he is good he can now be better, having more scope; if bad he can, and probably will, be worse. If idle and useless, he becomes a living fountain of idleness and uselessness, poisoning others.

So, money is like any other gift; as beauty, which adds power to the person; or genius, which multiplies the efficiency of the mind and hand; or position, for kinship magnifies a common man to heroic proportions, in his influence on other men.

Now, the sole relation of morals to power of any kind is this: that the moral sense adds to power—responsibility.

The root of any genuine moral feeling is altruism. Given any desire, it becomes moral as it takes a direction toward the welfare of other people; it is immoral exactly in proportion as it disregards others and looks only to self.

Wicked people, therefore, are those who live, think, and do for self alone; and that whether poor or rich. Whoever says, "I would like to be rich, for I could do so much good with my money," should examine himself and ask what good he is doing with the little he has. It's all a matter of relation. If one is not helpful and liberal on $40 a month, he would not be so on $4,000 a month.

In the ultimate realm of morals there are no commandments; there is only one test—do I live for myself or for others; am I altruistic or egocentric.

The dawdling smart set, flitting from bridge to matinee, from theater to bedizened restaurant, from the club to the horse race, are wicked; but no wickeder than the better poor who want to lead such a life, and who curse their lot because their selfishness is bound and chained.

To the real man, therefore, riches means nothing at all, as to his character; it simply means an opening to give vent to his character. And a clear-eyed soul, that sees and realizes what responsibility means, is never eager for power and opportunity. It is easier to be good in moderate means than in riches for the principal reason that it is easier to bear a small than a great load of responsibility. "It is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven," just because a rich man to be moral must be great. And, unfortunately, great souls are scarce among great fortunes.

The greatness of Jesus was not in his wisdom, magnetism, nor ethical perception, but in the fact that he was utterly altruistic; that is, he used all his powers not to advance himself but to help others. His tormentors unwittingly told the truth, and stated unknowingly his very secret, when, as he hung on the cross, they wagged their heads at him and cried:

"He saved others; himself he cannot save!"

Working for Eternity.

Never mind where your work is. Never mind whether it be visible or not. Never mind whether your name is associated with it. You may never see the issues of your toils. You are working for eternity. If you cannot see results here in the hot working day, the cool evening hours are drawing near, when you may rest from your labors, and then they may follow you. So do your duty, and trust God to give the seed you sow, "a body as it hath pleased him."—Dr. Alexander Maclaren.

Temperance

UPAS TREE OF INTEMPERANCE

Why It Flourishes While Other Vices Yield to Reform—Men Labor Under Fatal Delusion.

How shall we explain the fact that the power of public opinion has proved so much more effective in the struggle against the spread of the gambling vice and the social evil than in the crusade aaginst the curse of the alcohol habit? The explanation can certainly not be found in the lack of persistent effort. Without the tenth part of the energy and the moral enthusiasm devoted to the promotion of temperance, gambling, lotteries and the traffic in obscene literature have been reduced to a practical minimum. Gaming, in its worst form, enjoyed for generations the protection of civilized governments in Europe and America, the interests of the gambler were protected by the inveteracy of the vice and the lavish expenditure of money bribes, and yet we see that in less than a quarter of a century the public gambling hells of Christendom have been reduced to a den maintaining a precarious existence in a small principality of the Italian peninsula.

The only logical explanation can be found in the circumstance that those vices have been generally recognized as unqualified evils, while a large proportion of our fellow men still labor under the fatal delusion of the belief that, within certain limits, a taste for intoxicating beverages can be indulged with impunity, writes Felix L. Oswald, M. D., in the Union Signal. They persist in calming their own misgivings with the belief in the harmlessness of moderate drinking, and of the "moilder stimulants," and confess the evils of intemperance only in the sense of an admission that all excess is injurious. "The fact that stimulants can be swallowed in health endangering overdoses," they argue, "does not justify the plan to lessen that danger by anti-liquor laws. We might as well prevent the sale of meat and sugar, because a surfeit of meat pies and pastry may result in dyspepsia. Be temperate in all things, and defend the palladium of personal liberty."

And too many of our brethren encourage those delusions by still ascribing intemperance to the "temptations of unrestrained appetite," and the "passions of unregenerate nature." The dread of chronic alcoholism may deter many young men from the perilous first steps on the road to ruin, and the grim logic of experience may induce a few half confirmed drunkards to renounce their vice in time, but we can never hope to get a stroke at the root of the upas tree till we can enforce the general recognition of the truth, that the alcohol habit in all its forms is a wholly abnormal passion as distinct from a natural appetite as poison from wholesome food; that the indulgence of that passion, even in the slightest degree, is resisted by the veto of a sanitary instinct which can never be outraged with impunity, and that the apparent exhilaration following the gratification of a long perverted appetite is invariably followed by that depressing reaction which makes every poison vice a losing game and inexorably defeats the attempts to attain a surplus of happiness by the influence of unnatural stimulants. In other words, we must deprive the rum seller of a factitious moral support by opening the eyes of his victims to the fact that the alcohol vice is an unqualified evil. We must convince the dupes of the stimulant habit that our protest is not directed against an enjoyment injurious only in case of excess, but against an unnatural vice, incompatible with the interests of health and happiness, and moreover constantly tending to assume the ruinous form of a progressive and at last irresistible passion.

We must try to make "moderate" tippling as odious as "moderate" theft and "moderate" polygamy. We cannot afford to waste our time in combating the superficial errors of the alcohol dupes, while we ignore the radical mistake at the bottom of their delusion. We must learn to direct our efforts against the hidden germs of a poison plant which has for ages resisted our attacks upon its exuberant branches.

Interfered With Duty.

A constable who had recently joined a Rechabite Tent sent in his resignation, giving his reason that being a Rechabite he could no longer carry out his duties. The commissioner said: "Why, that does not interfere with your duties as a constable." "Yes, sir, it does," said the man, "for if I saw a drunken man in the street I could not arrest him, because I have to refrain from touching anything containing intoxicating liquors.

111-Year-Old Abstainer.

A Missouri correspondent reports the recent death of Daniel Bartlett, a highly respected citizen of Pettis county, at the somewhat advanced age of one hundred and eleven years. He states that Mr. Bartlett, a strong temperance advocate for years, was also a lifelong total abstainer.

Advocates Abstinence.

I could wish to make the advocates of abstinence realize that their duty is but half discharged by their personal abstinence from drink. I would have them vote as they feel, and act as they will have voted.—Horace Greeley.

"Liberty Bell" Shape

Photograph by Hummel, from Underwood & Underwood.

THIS piquante and patriotic article of headwear in both comfortable and becoming. It is the first of the fall fashions to reach these shores from France, where it was especially designed for the "Les Belles filles Americanes."

The shape of the hat clearly resembles that of the historic liberty bell. The material is a rich brown plush, and the willow plume is white above, shading off into a hue matching that of the body of the hat. It is one of the season's favorites.

BAG FOR DRESSES OR HATS

Makes for Comfort in Traveling, and Also Preserves the Articles Enclosed.

A scheme which a girl will find a great comfort in any place where she has insufficient closet space is a bag to hold her hat or her dress. In traveling it is well to take one or more of these bags, and in a camp they are almost indispensable. A girl can very quickly make all she wants of them, and if she wants to economize space they can be made of silkoline, which folds up into the smallest kind of a package, is light in weight and very inexpensive.

For a hat, make a bag three-quarters of a yard deep and half a yard wide, with a drawing string at the top. The bag is hung up by this string and the hat is kept free from dust and out of the way. This measurement is for a hat of ordinary size; if your hat is an unusually large one the bag must be larger.

For a dress the bag should be about five inches longer than the dress itself, the width being a little more than enough to slide the dress in easily. When camping it is best to put one's traveling dress and hat into these bags and leave them there, for they are seldom wanted until one is ready to leave. In making the bags for camping there are some advantages in using cretonne instead of silkoline. Being so much thicker, it keeps out the dampness better, and it is often damp enough in a tent to have a rather disastrous effect on a hat.

SIMPLE AND ATTRACTIVE

This simple waist is of marquisette or voile trimmed with a beautiful lace or embroidery and fastening at the side with buttons and loops.

The sleeves, cut in one piece with the body of the waist, are trimmed to correspond.

To Pull Bastings.

Few persons know that an ordinary orangewood stick, such as is used for the nails, is the best instrument for removing bastings. A scissors when used is very apt to cut or tear the garment. Procure the stick at any drug store.

SHOES FOR LONG TRAMPS

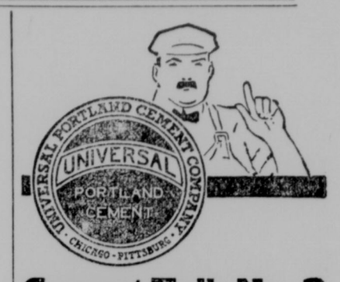
Highly Important Part of Equipment When a Girl Contemplates "Roughing It."

Girls who have had little experience in outdoor life often do some foolish things when they begin to try this form of enjoyment. One way in which many of them interfere with their own comfort is by going on a tramp with the wrong kind of shoes.

A girl who has played tennis and found the soft, rubber soled shoes comfortable will think that they will surely help her to enjoy a tramp; but they are the last thing to wear for a long walk, as these girls have found to their cost. They come home with their feet aching and the calves of the legs tired out from the lack of the spring that is given by heels. Walking with a flat, heelless shoes on a rough road is extremely trying, and one can feel every stone through the soft rubber soles; and these tired feet and legs will feel even worse the next day.

Quite as bad as the tennis shoes are low shoes with thin soles and high heels. These tire the feet and may sprain the ankles. The only shoes that are really satisfactory for "roughing it" are strong high shoes with thick soles. The strongest ankles need support in rough walking, and it is often wet in the woods. The girl who has once tried the two ways of tramping will never again be persuaded to wear low or thin shoes.

Paris Bridesmaid Gowns.



A shepherdess effect was shown in four bridesmaid gowns recently turned out by Paris makers. The underslips were of a thin white silk trimmed with scattered wreaths, about the size of a saucer, of tiny pink roses. Over these fell tunics of pale blue chiffon, which mellowed the flowers until they were the dimmest blush. The broad hats were wreathed with the posies held by a vast butterfly of thin white lace, and there were small knots of the buds on the blue slippers.

Suit Coats.

Suit jackets for autumn and winter will remain close fitting about the hips and hold to the straight line form. At present there is no arbitrary decree regarding the length. Models considerably shorter than the 26-inch length, and somewhat longer also, are among the new models. But the length mentioned is a happy medium. The feeling is that with the approach of winter the tendency will be to lengthen the jacket, with perhaps a revision to the short effects again in the spring.

Hunter Green.

As the season advances the vogue for emerald green noticeable for some months past appears to be on the decline, hunter green, a softer, more pleasing tone, being substituted. Scarfs of hunter green satin are draped around the crowns of outing hats of Panama and peanut braid and gracefully looped at one side. Scarfs of striped and checked silk, such as may be found at the neckwear shops, are also utilized as drapery for outing hats.

Cement Talk No. 2

Portland Cement does not come from Portland, Maine, or Portland, Oregon, and it was not first made at either of these places. It is called Portland because it was given this name by the Englishman who first made it. He called it Portland because he thought it resembled certain natural deposits on the Isle of Portland in England. Portland Cement is the fine powder produced by pulverizing the clinker resulting from the burning together of various materials of proper chemical composition. In the case of Universal Portland Cement, these raw materials are blast furnace slag and pure limestone. There are many brands of Portland Cement on the market, produced by different manufacturers. Universal is one of the best known and highest grade Portland Cements. You can always tell it by the name Universal and the blue trade mark printed on each sack. Forty million sacks of Universal are made and used yearly in this country. If you have any concrete work to do, you will make no mistake by using Universal Portland Cement. Universal is for sale by representative dealers everywhere.

"Yes, madam."

"Out of the ground?"

"Just as they are now. They were cleaned up a bit, but they were found about as you see them."

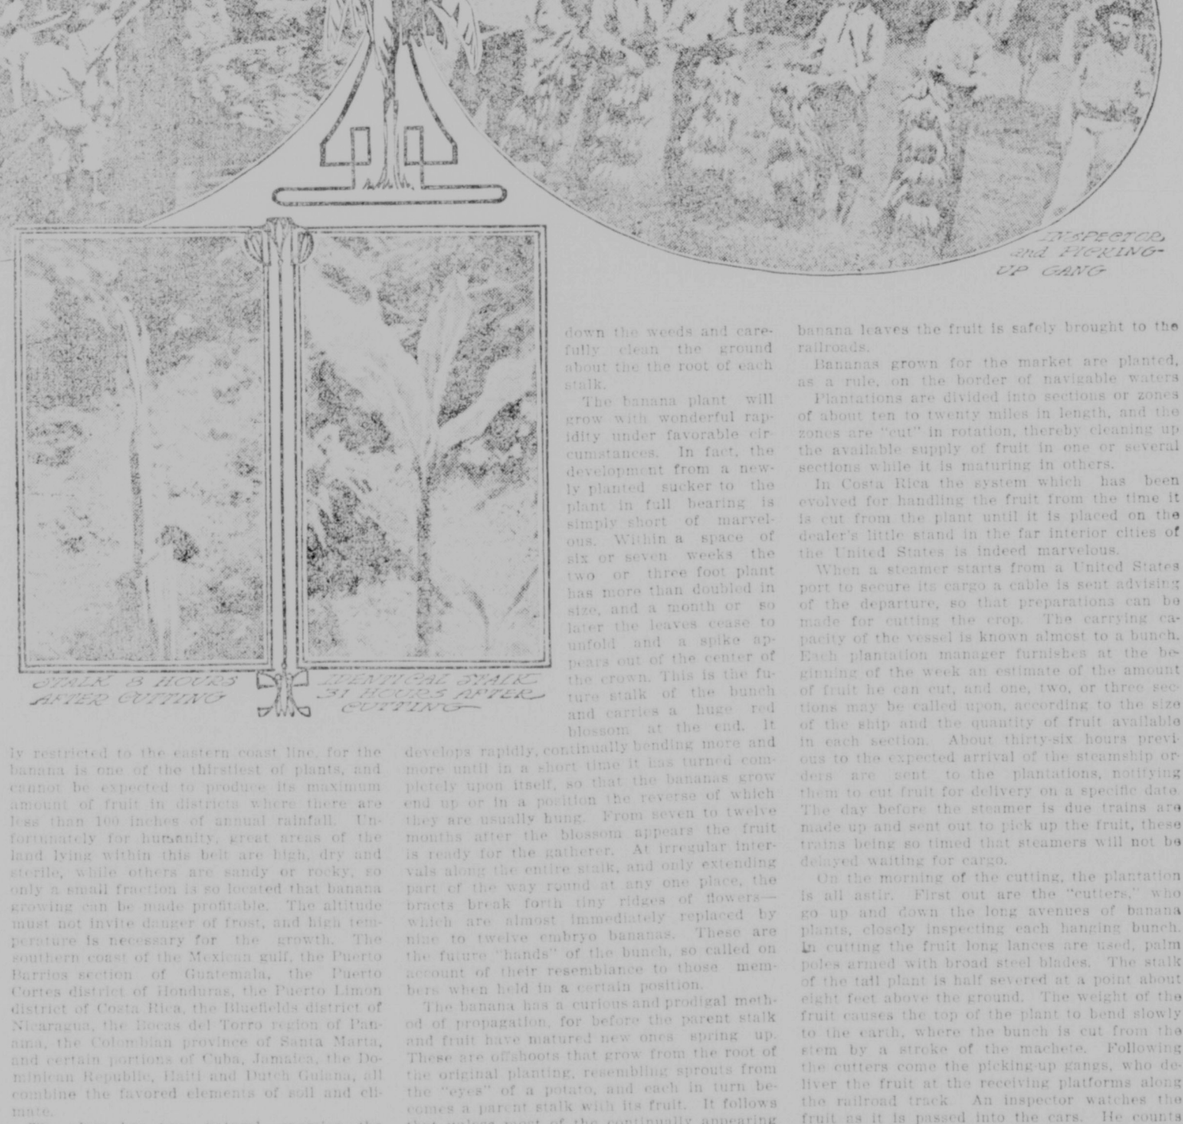
The BANANA and its RELATIVES

by FRANKLIN ADAMS



CUTTING BANANAS IN COSTA RICA

IF you did not eat three dozen bananas last year, you did not have your share. Over 40,000,000 bunches, or more than 3,000,000,000 bananas, were imported into the United States in 1910. The immensity of this shipment can be more readily grasped by the statement that it would cover an area 20 feet wide, reaching from New York to San Francisco, or, placed end to end, would extend thirteen times around the earth at the equator. The "slip" in the peels would launch the ships of the world. The wholesale value of the 1910 importation, at point of export, was over $12,500,000, while in all probability the consuming public of the United States expended over $35,000,000 for this delectable fruit.

During the past ten years the number of bananas consumed in the United States has more than doubled, and the increased tropical acreage under cultivation assures even more startling figures for the next decade. Many European countries are importing large quantities of bananas; last year Great Britain consumed over $8,000,000 worth, Germany, over $1,000,000, and France, $500,000.

With the world's decreasing food supply, and the wheat crop at a standstill, the banana comes forward as an important factor in saving the day. One acre with little labor will annually produce 17,000 pounds of bananas, or more than one and one-third times as much food substance as an acre of corn, two and one-third times as much as oats, almost three times as much per acre as wheat and potatoes, and four times as much as rye. The chemical composition of bananas and potatoes is almost identical.

STALK 8 HOURS AFTER CUTTING

VERTICAL STALK 31 HOURS AFTER CUTTING

Forty years ago there were very few people in this country who could boast of having seen a bunch of bananas. The fruit was practically unknown. Now, in even the most remote country store, this "pride of the tropics" is a familiar sight.

Despite the fact that millions of bunches are consumed, they belong almost wholly to one member of the family, the common yellow Guineo.

Scientists have recognized and classified as many as 40 different species, ranging from the ornamental groups that do not develop fruit, to the giant bananas, the Platano of the Spaniards.

The red banana is not common in the American markets. In the United States it is used only to "dress" fancy baskets of fruit, but in the tropical countries it is quite a favorite. The individual banana is large, but the stalk does not carry as many "hands" as the yellow varieties, so as it does not bring as large a price to the grower and wholesaler, its extensive cultivation is not encouraged.

Banana culture is one of the oldest of industries. It has been known since the origin of the human race. Long before the dawn of history in the old world, perhaps long before the old world rose from the waters, man lived on the fruit of the Musas. The banana was generally considered a native of southern Asia, and to have been carried into America by Europeans, until Humboldt threw doubt upon its purely Asiatic origin, quoting early authors who asserted that the banana was cultivated in America long before the conquest. It is claimed that at the time of the Incas in Peru, bananas formed one of the staple foods of the natives of the warm and temperate regions of the Montana. In spite of the uncertainty as to just which country may claim the fruit as indigenous, all tropical lands assert their right to it.

The first importation of bananas to the United States occurred in 1804, when the schooner Reynard, on a voyage from Cuba, brought into New York, as a commercial venture, a consignment of 30 bunches; but the real beginning of the trade dates back to 1866, when Mr. Charles Frank undertook the importation of fruit from Colon to New York. Previous to that venture small cargoes consisting mainly of the red banana had been received at irregular intervals from Cuba. In 1870, Captain Baker, an owner of a Cape Cod schooner, took a charter to carry gold miners and machinery 300 miles up the Orinoco river in Venezuela. After discharging his cargo, Captain Baker ran into Jamaica to secure some cocoanuts as ballast to New York, carrying a few bunches of bananas on the deck as an experiment. The result promised a great future for the industry on that island, which has been fulfilled, the exports last year reaching $4,000,000.

On the American continent, bananas are successfully grown through 50 degrees of latitude, from Tampico, Mexico, 25 degrees north, to Asuncion in Paraguay, in the Tropic of Capricorn, 25 degrees south—a belt over 3,000 miles in width. Cultivation of the fruit is practically restricted to the eastern coast line, for the banana is one of the thirstiest of plants, and cannot be expected to produce its maximum amount of fruit in districts where there are less than 100 inches of annual rainfall. Unfortunately for humanity, great areas of the land lying within this belt are high, dry and sterile, while others are sandy or rocky, so only a small fraction is so located that banana growing can be made profitable. The altitude must not invite danger of frost, and high temperature is necessary for the growth. The southern coast of the Mexican gulf, the Puerto Barrios section of Guatemala, the Puerto Cortes district of Honduras, the Puerto Limon district of Costa Rica, the Bluefields district of Nicaragua, the Bocas del Torro region of Panama, the Colombian province of Santa Marta, and certain portions of Cuba, Jamaica, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Dutch Guiana, all combine the favored elements of soil and climate.

The plant has two natural enemies—the gopher and the wind storm—but against almost all other tropical conditions its hardihood is remarkable.

It is a matter of common observation that the banana is absolutely seedless, cultivation through innumerable generations having led to a vegetable method of propagation. Some of the primitive seed-bearing varieties are still said to exist in isolated regions of the far east.

The first step toward cultivation is the clearing of the land. Into the tangle of shrubs and vines and the thick snarl of tropical vegetation the laborer comes with an ax and "machete" and cuts low everything but the giant trees. When all of the small timber and brush has been felled planting is commenced.

Young shoots are obtained from a plantation already in bearing and these are placed in rows about 12 feet apart. When the planting is finished, the only labor necessary is to keep down the weeds and carefully clean the ground about the the root of each stalk.

The banana plant will grow with wonderful rapidity under favorable circumstances. In fact, the development from a newly planted sucker to the plant in full bearing is simply short of marvelous. Within a space of six or seven weeks the two or three foot plant has more than doubled in size, and a month or so later the leaves cease to unfold and a spike appears out of the center of the crown. This is the future stalk of the bunch and carries a huge red blossom at the end. It develops rapidly, continually bending more and more until in a short time it has turned completely upon itself, so that the bananas grow end up or in a position the reverse of which they are usually hung. From seven to twelve months after the blossom appears the fruit is ready for the gatherer. At irregular intervals along the entire stalk, and only extending part of the way round at any one place, the bracts break forth tiny ridges of flowers—which are almost immediately replaced by nine to twelve embryo bananas. These are the future "hands" of the bunch, so called on account of their resemblance to those members when held in a certain position.

The banana has a curious and prodigal method of propagation, for before the parent stalk and fruit have matured new ones spring up. These are offshoots that grow from the root of the original planting, resembling sprouts from the "eyes" of a potato, and each in turn becomes a parent stalk with its fruit. It follows that unless most of the continually appearing new plants are cut out (which is the practice) the first stalk in a few years will become the center of a miniature jungle. The plants grow to a height of from fifteen to thirty-five feet, spreading in all directions, until the soil is overburdened with an enormous mass of stalk and leaf growth, and stunted fruit is produced. In planting for the market about 200 hills are allowed to the acre. Sometimes the number can be safely increased to 225, in which case there will be 500 stalks. However, after one year all of these stalks do not produce a marketable bunch of bananas, and the average yield is not over 300 full bunches to the acre per annum.

Perry, the well-known authority on bananas, estimates that a grower can produce a bunch for from ten to fifteen cents, which will have a market value of 30 cents. The cost of producing after the first crop is confined to cultivating and harvesting, which may be done for from $10 to $20 per acre yearly. The net profit, however, averages about $50 per acre in the various banana producing sections. The banana often grows in combination with other products. In some cases it is used as a shade for young coffee plants.

A great many people are of the opinion that the banana would be much better if it was allowed to ripen on the plant, but this is not the case. Such fruit is strong in flavor, does not mature to perfection, and the skin breaks, attracting numerous insects, while the weight of the bunch itself becomes too great for the plant, either one or both coming to the ground. The bunches are cut when the fruit is one-half to three-quarters matured, though still green and as hard as nails. It continues to feed from the cut stalk, which contains a great amount of sap, until fully ripe. Should the cutting occur too soon, however, the fruit, although turning yellow, will never attain the perfect flavor.

With the cutting of the bunch ends the life of the plant, for it bears but once and is usually cut down to obtain the fruit, or succumbs a few days later to the cleaning process, which is merely the bringing of a spent piece to the ground. Cutting the fruit itself involves the only careful labor on the banana plantation, as the bunches weigh from fifty to sixty pounds, and even slight knocks are followed by bruised spots, under which the fruit quickly ripens and decays. However, by the liberal use of dried banana leaves the fruit is safely brought to the railroads.

Bananas grown for the market are planted, as a rule, on the border of navigable waters.

Plantations are divided into sections or zones of about ten to twenty miles in length, and the zones are "cut" in rotation, thereby cleaning up the available supply of fruit in one or several sections while it is maturing in others.

In Costa Rica the system which has been evolved for handling the fruit from the time it is cut from the plant until it is placed on the dealer's little stand in the far interior cities of the United States is indeed marvelous.

When a steamer starts from a United States port to secure its cargo a cable is sent advising of the departure, so that preparations can be made for cutting the crop. The carrying capacity of the vessel is known almost to a bunch. Each plantation manager furnishes at the beginning of the week an estimate of the amount of fruit he can cut, and one, two, or three sections may be called upon, according to the size of the ship and the quantity of fruit available in each section. About thirty-six hours previous to the expected arrival of the steamship orders are sent to the plantations, notifying them to cut fruit for delivery on a specific date. The day before the steamer is due trains are made up and sent out to pick up the fruit, these trains being so timed that steamers will not be delayed waiting for cargo.

On the morning of the cutting, the plantation is all astir. First out are the "cutters," who go up and down the long avenues of banana plants, closely inspecting each hanging bunch. In cutting the fruit long lances are used, palm poles armed with broad steel blades. The stalk of the tall plant is half severed at a point about eight feet above the ground. The weight of the fruit causes the top of the plant to bend slowly to the earth, where the bunch is cut from the stem by a stroke of the machete. Following the cutters come the picking-up gangs, who deliver the fruit at the receiving platforms along the railroad track. An inspector watches the fruit as it is passed into the cars. He counts and grades each bunch, rejecting those that show signs of ripening and those that are undersized or bruised.

After cargoes are discharged in the United States, solid trains of banana cars run as "specials" every day in the week from New York, Baltimore and New Orleans to all of the large cities of the country. Carloads are even shipped to Calgary, Canada, over 2,000 miles from New Orleans.

The front ventilators of the forward cars of these trains, and the rear ventilators of the last cars, are connected by means of canvas tubes run into a main trunk chute. A powerful exhaust draws off the heat thrown out by the fruit in its ripening process, and the fans circulate cold air through every car in the train. During the winter months the operation is reversed, and fruit in transit during very cold weather is warmed while proceeding to its destination.

INFLAMMATION AND PAIN

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Creston, Iowa.—"I was troubled for a long time with inflammation, pains in my side, sick headaches and nervousness. I had taken so many medicines that I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. A friend told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to health. I have no more pain, my nerves are stronger and I can do my own work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me after everything else had failed, and I recommend it to other suffering women." —MRS. WM. SEALS 605 W. Howard St., Creston, Iowa.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She will treat your letter as strictly confidential. For 20 years she has been helping sick women in this way, free of charge. Don't hesitate—write at once.

In Strict Obedience.

Master Gregory Graham, aged three, had been having an ocean bath, and breaking away from his older sister he ran all dripping wet to the door of the living room, where Mrs. Graham was entertaining a caller from the fashionable hotel.

"Why, Greg," his mother greeted him, "you mustn't come in here like that, dear. Go straight upstairs and take off your bathing suit first."

A few minutes later Mrs. Graham turned toward the door in curiosity as to what sight there had sent her visitor's eyebrows up so high, and in the same moment her son's cheerful voice rang out:

"I took it off, mother, like you told me to. I'm coming in now for some cake."

The Young Idea.

There are two kinds of joints, the hinges and the ball-bearing.

Reflex action is the inside eye and ear. Reflex action controls things that we do not have to think about, as talking.

Had we no skin, our clothes would cause us endless agony.

The stomach is the trunk of our body. The stomach contains the liver. The stomach is south of the lungs, west of the liver. It has three coats. Without the stomach we should die, therefore God chose the stomach to digest our food.—Woman's Home Companion.

Birds of a Feather.

"What's the bill for fixing my motor car?" asked the strange patron.

"It figures up to $110, sir," replies the garage man.

"Whew! I'll have to give you a check. I left all my money in my drug store."

"Why, are you a druggist?"

"Yes."

"Oh, in that case the bill will be a dollar and a quarter. We fellows ought to stand together."

GET POWER.
The Supply Comes From Food.

If we get power from food why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by use of skillfully selected food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

Poor fuel makes a poor fire and a poor fire is not a good steam producer.

"From not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach troubles," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heartburn and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton, and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I have kept up its use ever since. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed.

"All my unpleasant symptoms, the heartburn, the inflated feeling which gave me so much pain disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 pounds, my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts food did it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A ten days' trial will show anyone some facts about food.

MARYLAND NEEDS A RADICAL CHANGE

Government of the people, by the people, may be, and often is, a mere pretense. When the election laws of any state have been so juggled that all manner of unfairness and trickery may be accomplished under them, or when a political oligarchy has gained such ascendancy that it dictates the nominations of the party, then it is preposterous to speak of the government that results as being of the people, by the people, for the people, says the Baltimore American. Such a government is, as as every comprehending observer very well knows, of the machine, by the machine and for the machine. When such a condition as that just referred to has been evolved in the electoral system in any state, the one and only open way of salvation is in a peaceful political revolution—in other words, the placing of the control of public affairs under entirely different party management. That is the one and only way of escape for the people of Maryland from a machine-ruled party that has intrenched itself in power by an unscrupulous juggling of the electoral machinery.

Each party has made certain conventional promises of what it will undertake to do in case the people of the state intrust with the power of making and unmaking laws and administering the statutes But party promises must always be judged in the light of the past performances. The Democratic platform, for instance, promises to reduce legislative expenses by the elimination of the padded payroll scheme. In the legislature of 1910 the Republican members of both branches were energetic and persistent in their attempts to prevent the padded-payroll fraud, but they were outvoted. The legislature was overwhelmingly Democratic in both branches. A party that promises economy in the glittering generalities of its platform and then shows such a contemptuous disregard of those promises to pass out from the state treasury $75,000 as a free gift to about 150 people who had performed no service whatever to the state—are the people going to take the renewed economy promises of such a party at par? Can the oligarchy that rules the Democratic party in this state fool all the people all the time?

The Democratic legislature of 1910 passed a primary election law which, as it applied to the counties, permitted ballots to be marked anywhere and then to be taken into the polling room and voted. Plainly enough, this feature of the law threw it wide open to the perpetration of bribery and corruption, and in spite of the quick get-together performance of the two wings of the Democratic party, and in spite of the strenuous hush-up tactics that have been employed, the rumblings of the crooked doings at the Democratic primaries, in the city and in many of the counties, have not yet ceased to reverberate. But as to this abortive primary election law, the last Democratic platform declares that the principles which it embodies "must be preserved and rigidly enforced and the Democratic party of this state is hereby pledged to do so." As to the Wilson trick-ballot, the last Democratic platform has not one word to say; the Democratic leaders are standing upon that scandalous perversion of the state's electoral system. What the people of this state have reason to expect if the next Assembly is Democratic is that the provisions of the trick-ballot law will be extended so as to include additional counties and possibly Baltimore city.

A fair and honest electoral system will never be provided for this state by a legislature and a governor representative of the Democratic party as that party is now controlled. Fair election laws, primary and general, can only be obtained by intrusting the performance of this service to the Republican party—by the election of the Republican candate for governor and a Republican legislature. The Democratic machine has been growing continuously bolder and more defiant of public opinion in this city and throughout the state. Juggling the electoral system has been a favorite performance of Democratic legislatures, and there will be more juggling if the Democrats win next November.

KITZMILLER.

Trouble began promptly at the high school on Monday morning.

"O were you ne'er a schoolboy
And did you never train,
And feel that swelling of the heart
You ne'er can feel again?"

Our young friend, Mr. O. V. Fortney, has just returned from an extended visit to Youngstown, Ohio. Olin was recently raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason in Hiram Lodge No. 103, at Westernport, where the six other Kitzmiller members hold membership.

Messrs. A. J. Pritts, Will Kight, Ed. Aronhalt, W. H. Patton and Walter Simpson left Monday evening for a week's hunting and fishing on the South Branch. It is a jolly bunch, and if the weather is favorable they will doubtless have a good time.

The splendid new and commodious storeroom of Messrs. Chas. M. Wilson & Brother on Bridge street is receiving its finishing touches and will be occupied in about two weeks. At its formal opening a large invoice of new goods, such as general stores usually carry, will be displayed.

Messrs. Conlon Brothers, who recently purchased the market house of Nethkin & Pritts, on Main street, are doing an ever increasing business in meats, butter, eggs and other good things to eat. They are "live wires" and are daily growing in popularity.

The Rosenbloom storeroom on Bridge street, will be vacated about October 1st, and will be immediately reoccupied by Messrs. Kronofsky, of Davis, as a general store. The manager, Mr. Max Bennett, and his amiable and popular assistant, Miss Percy Harvey, carry with them the best wishes of their many friends for future success and prosperity.

Hon. J. Elbert Chappell and Arjuna have returned from a fortnight's outing at Falls, in Grant county, where, with propitious weather and other favorable environment, the saying of "man made the town but God made the country" was duly and indelibly impressed upon their minds. They embrace this means of acknowledging their obligations to Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Bowman, Ex-Sheriff Lewis, Mr. L. Marshall, Mr. Walter Kline, Mr. James S. Tucker and Miss Nellie Tucker for courtesies extended.

Mr. George J. Pool and Mrs. Gertrude E. Pool, (widow of the late Clever Pool), were married in the parlors of the Browning Hotel, at Oakland, by Rev. E. Manges, on Monday evening, September 11th, 1911.

"Hear the mellow wedding bells,
Golden bells!
What a world of happiness their harmony foretells!
Through the bamly air of night
How they ring out their delight!
From the molten golden notes,
All in tune,
What a liquid ditty floats
To the turtle dove that listens, while she gloats
On the moon!
Oh, from out the sounding cells
What a gush of euphony voluminously wells!
How it swells!
How it dwells
On the future! How it tells
Of the rapture that impels
To the swinging and the ringing
Of the bells, bells, bells,
Of the bells, bells, bells, bells,
Bells, bells, bells,—
To the rhyming and the chiming of the bells."

The wedding guests were all of Kitzmiller, as follows: Mrs. D. E. Rafter, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Kitzmiller, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Rafter, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Pew, and Mr. Roy O. Rafter.

The high contracting parties returned to Kitzmiller on the following day and received the hearty congratulations of their numerous friends.

Previous to her first marriage the bride was a Miss Lang, a native of Dorsetshire, England, and she taught school for a number of terms at Mt. Lake Park and Bayard, where, as well as here, she was highly esteemed for her many good qualities of head and heart.

Mr. George Pool, the happy groom, is pretty well known throughout Garrett county, and will be better known when he becomes high sheriff a few years hence. George is a fine business man, a bright Mason and a popular member of other secret orders; and, best of all, he is a winter-time friend.

Resolutions Adopted by Garrett County Sunday School Convention.

The following preamble and resolution were adopted by the delegates at the session of the Garrett County Sunday School Convention held last Tuesday and Wednesday in the Oakland Presbyterian church and are published by request of the members of the convention:

WHEREAS, The Sunday School is such an important part of the church's work accomplishing as it does the religious education of our youths, and being the source from which the church draws 75 per cent of her membership; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the reorganization of Garrett County be effected at once, also the various districts of the County, so that the organization may be complete and up to the required standard for first class Sabbath school work.

Second. That since money will be necessary to carry on this work, in paying expert instructors who come among us, and in meeting other legitimate expenses, we request each school in the county to make a contribution some time during the year toward defraying such expenses.

Third. That we request a convention to be held early in the coming year, May and June being preferable months for such convention, in each district of the county and that these conventions be held prior to the County Convention.

Fourth. That since a strennous effort will be made in the coming session of the State Legislature to give the state a wide open Sabbath, we desire to put the stamp of our unqualified disapproval upon all such efforts, and respectfully urge our delegates not to countenance or endorse these movements which are hostile to the social, temporal and religious interests of the commonwealth.

Fifth. That since the Temperance reform moves on with ever increasing force and is constantly gaining new territory and making new friends for the cause. And since the Temperance situation in Garrett County is at the present time at a critical stage, the outlook being splendid for the early overthrow of the traffic in our midst; that since the traffic in intoxicating liquors has assumed such proportions in Oakland as to become an intolerable nuisance; and since the continuance of the saloon at the county seat is inexcusable and uncalled for, being an insult to the entire citizenship of Garrett county, and a menace to the lives, property, character and good names of all the citizens, we, the Garrett County Sunday School Association in session this 13th day of September, 1911, in Oakland, Maryland, do hereby declare our approval of any and all honest efforts made to abate the liquor traffic in the entire state and nation.

We further declare that we most heartily endorse the state wide local option bill to be presented at the next session of the state legislature and respectfully request and urge our local representatives in that body to use all the influence within their power to secure the passage of said bill. And further, it is our deliberate opinion that should the state wide bill not be passed, there should be a special legislation whereby Garrett county be given an opportunity to say by vote whether or not the liquor traffic shall continue within her borders.

Resolved, That we thank the people of Oakland Presbyterian Church for the use of their Church building, the people of Oakland for their hospitality, and all who in any way contributed to the success of the convention.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. SARAH GIESSMAN.

The announcement of the death of Mrs. Sarah Giessman, wife of Mr. George Giessman of Oakland, which occurred this morning at 3.20 o'clock, came when her friends had every reason to expect her speedy and complete recovery from an illness which attacked her some months ago, but complications of a serious nature set up a few days ago which baffled the skill of her physicians, her death ensuing as above stated. Mrs. Giessman is survived by a family of five sons and her husband. She was a sincere Christian; a member of the Oakland Lutheran church for many years and a woman of many sterling qualities. Funeral arrangements at the time this paper went to press had not been announced.

SYNOPSIS.

David Amber, starting for a duck-shooting visit with his friend, Quain, comes upon a young lady equestrian who has been dismounted by her horse becoming frightened at the sudden appearance in the road of a burly Hindu. He declares he is Behari Lal Chatterji, "The appointed mouthpiece of the Bell," addresses Amber as a man of high rank and presents a mysterious little bronze box, "The Token," into his hand, disappears in the wood. The girl calls Amber by name. He in turn addresses her as Miss Sophie Farrell, daughter of Col. Farrell of the British diplomatic service in India and visiting the Quains. Several nights later the Quain home is burglarized and the bronze box stolen. Amber and Quain go hunting on an island and become lost and Amber is left marooned. He wanders about, finally reaches a cabin and recognizes as its occupant an old friend named Rutton, whom he last met in England, and who appears to be in hiding. When Miss Farrell is mentioned Rutton is strangely agitated. Chatterji appears and summons Rutton to a meeting of a mysterious body. Rutton seizes a revolver and dashes after Chatterji. He returns wildly excited, says he has killed the Hindu, takes poison, and when dying asks Amber to go to India on a mysterious errand. Amber decides to leave at once for India. On the way he sends a letter to Mr. Labertouche, a scientific friend in Calcutta, by a quicker route. Upon arriving he finds a note awaiting him. It directs Amber to meet his friend at a certain place. The latter tells him he knows his mission is to get Miss Farrell out of the country. Amber attempts to dispose of the Token to a money-lender, is mistaken for Rutton and barely escapes being mobbed. A message from Labertouche causes him to start for Darjeeling, on the way he meets Miss Farrell, and at their journey's end asks her to become his wife. A Hindu conducts Amber to a secret place.

CHAPTER XIV. (Continued)

"Well, then, what do you want? Why have you brought me here?"

"Why didst thou come? There was no force used: thou didst come of thine own will—thine own will, which is the will of the Body, hazoor!"

"Oh, damnation! Why d'you insist on beating round the bush forever? You know well why I came. Now, what do you want?"

"My lord, I move, it seems, in the ways of error. A little time ago the words of the Voice were made known to thee in a far land; thou didst answer, coming to this country. A few days agone I myself did repeat to you the message of the Bell; thou didst swear thou wouldst not answer, yet art thou here in Kuttarpur. Am I to be blamed for taking this for a sign of thy repentance? . . . Hazoor, the Body is patient, the Will benignant and long-suffering. Still is the Gateway open."

"Is that what you wanted to tell me, Saligh Singh?"

"What else? Am I to believe thee a madman, weary of life, that thou shouldst venture hither with a heart hardened against the Will of the Body? I seek but to serve thee in thus daring thy displeasure. Why shouldst thou come to Bharuta at all if thou dost not intend to undergo the Ordeal of the Gateway? Am I a fool or—I say it in all respect, my lord—art thou?"

"From the look of things, I fancy the epithet fits us both Saligh Singh. You refuse to take my word for it that I know nothing of your infamous Gateway and have no intention of ever approaching it, that I have not a drop of Indian blood in me and am in no way related to or connected with Har Dyal Rutton, who is dead—"

"I may not believe what I know to be untrue."

"You'll have to learn to recognize the truth, I'm afraid. For the final time I tell you that I am David Amber, a citizen of the United States of America, traveling in India on purely personal business."

The Rajput inclined his head submissively. "Then is my duty all but done, hazoor. Thrice hath the warning been given thee. There be still four-and-twenty hours in which, it may be, thou shalt learn to see clearly. My lord, I ask of thee a single favor. Wilt thou follow me?" He motioned toward the arched entrance to the passageway.

"Follow thee?" Amber at length dropped into Urdu, unconsciously adopting the easier form of communication now that, he felt, the issue between them was plain, that the Rajput labored under no further misunderstanding as to the reason of his presence in Khandawar. "Whither?"

"There is that which I must show thee."

"What?"

"My life be forfeit if thou dost not return unharmed to the resthouse ere sunrise. Wilt thou come?"

"To what end, Saligh Singh?"

"Furthermore," the Rajput persisted stubbornly, his head lifted in pride and his nostrils dilated a little with scorn—"furthermore I offer thee the word of a Rajput. Thou art my guest, since thou wilt have it so. No harm shall come to thee, upon my honor."

Curiosity triumphed. Amber knew that he had exacted the most honored pledge known in Rajputana. His apprehensions were at rest; nothing could touch him now—until he had returned to the bungalow. Then, he divined, it was to be open war—himself and Labertouche pitted against the strength of the greatest conspiracy known in India since the days of '57. But for the present, no pledge of any sort had been exacted of him.

"So be it," he assented on impulse. "I follow."

With no other word Saligh Singh turned and strode down the corridor.

CHAPTER XV.

From a High Place.

The passageway was long and dark and given to sudden curves and angles, penetrating, it seemed, the very bowels of the Raj Mahal. It ended unexpectedly in a low arch through which the two men passed into an open courtyard, apparently given over entirely to stables. Despite the lateness of the hour it was tenanted by several wideawake syces, dancing attendance upon a pair of blooded stallions of the stud royal, who saddled, bridled and hooded, pawed and champed impatiently in the center of the yard, making it echo with the ringing of iron on stone and the jingling of their silver curb-chains.

"Thou canst see, hazoor, that all is prepared!"

"For what?"

A second arch gave upon a corridor which led upwards and presently changed into a steep flight of steps, of ancient stone worn smooth and grooved with the traffic of generations of naked feet. At the top they turned aside and passed through a heavy door which Saligh Singh unlocked with a private key, into a vast, vacant room, with a lofty ceiling supported by huge, unwieldy pillars of stone, sculptured with all the loves and wars of Hindu mythology. At one end the fitful, eerie flare of a great bronze brazier revealed the huge proportions of an ivory throne, gorgeous with gems and cloth of gold, standing upon a dais and flanked by two motionless figures which at first sight Amber took to be pieces of statuary. But they quickened, saluting with a single movement and a flash of steel, as the maharana drew nearer, and so proved themselves troopers of the state, standing guard with naked swords.

"There is no need, perhaps, to tell thee, hazoor," Saligh Singh muttered, bending to Amber's ear, "that sitting upon this throne, in this Hall of Audience, for generations thy forefathers ruled this land, making and administering its laws, meting out justice, honored of all men—and served, my lord, for generations by my forebears, the faithful stewards of thy house; even as I would prove faithful."

"Interesting," Amber interrupted, brusquely, "if true. Is this what you wanted to show me?"

"Nay, hazoor, not this alone. Come."

The rajput led him out of the hall by way of a small doorway behind the throne, and after a little turning and twisting through tortuous passages they began to ascend again, and so went on up, ever upwards, the flight of steps broken by other corridors, other apartments, other galleries and gardens, until at length they emerged into a garden laid out in the very topmost court of all—the loftiest spot in all Kuttarpur.

It was a very beautiful garden, a jungle of exotic plants and shrubs threaded by narrow walks that led to secluded nooks and unsuspected pleasaunces, and lighted by low-swung festoons of dim lamps, many-colored.

"My lord," said the maharana, pausing, "if thou wilt wait here for a little, permitting me to excuse myself—?"

"All right," Amber told him tolerantly. "Run along."

Saligh Singh quietly effaced himself, and the American watched him go with an inward chuckle. "I presume I'll have to pay for my impudence in the end," he thought; "but it's costing Saligh Singh a good deal to hold himself in." He moved away from the cistern, idling down a path in a direction opposite that taken by Saligh Singh.

An abrupt turn brought him to the outer wall, and he stopped to gaze, leaning upon the low marble balustrade.

Amber turned away to rejoin Saligh Singh by the cistern. But the rajput was not there; and, presently, another path tempting him to unlawful exploration, he yielded and sauntered aimlessly away. A sudden corner cloaked with foliage brought him to a little open space, a patch of lawn over which a canopy had been raised. Beneath this, a woman sat alone. He halted, thunderstruck.

Simultaneously, with a soft swish of draperies, a clash of jeweled bracelets, dull and musical, and a flash of coruscating color, the woman stood before him, young, slender, graceful, garbed in indescribable splendor—and veiled.

For the space of three long breaths the Virginian hesitated, unspeakably amazed. Though she were veiled, it were deep dishonor for a woman of a rajput's household to be seen by a stranger. It seemed inexplicable that Saligh Singh should have unwittingly left him in any place where he might encounter an inmate of the zenana. Yet the maharana must have known . . . Amber made an irresolute movement, as if to go. But it was too late.

With a murmur, inaudible, and a swift, infinitely alluring gesture, the woman swept the veil away from her face, and looked him squarely in the eyes. She moved toward him slowly, swaying, as graceful as a fawn, more beautiful than any woman he had ever known. His breath caught in his throat, for sheer wonder at this incomparable loveliness.

Before he could collect his wits she had made him captive—had without warning cast herself upon her knees before him and imprisoned both his hands, burying her face in their palms. He felt her lips hot upon his flesh, and then—wonder of wonders!—tears from those divine eyes streaming through his fingers.

The shock of it brought him to his senses. Pitiful, dumfounded, horrified, he glared wildly about him, seeking some avenue of escape. There was no one watching; he thanked heaven for that, while the cold sweat started out upon his forehead. But still at his feet the woman rocked, softly sobbing, her fair shoulders gently agitated, and still she defied his gentle efforts to free his hands, holding them in a grasp he might not break without hurting her. He found his tongue eventually.

"Don't!" he pleaded, desperately. "My dear, you mustn't. For pity's sake don't sob like that! What under the sun's the trouble? Don't please! . . . Good Lord! what am I to do with this lovely lunatic?"

Though in time the fiercest paroxysm of her passion passed and her sobs diminished in violence, she clung heavily to him and made no resistance when he lifted her in his arms. The error was fatal; he had designed to get her on her feet and then stand away. But no sooner had he raised her and succeeded in disengaging his hands, than soft, round arms were clasped tightly about his neck and her face—if possible, more ravishing in tears than when first he had seen it—pillowed on his breast. And for the first time she spoke coherently.

"Aie!" she wailed, tremulously. "Aie! Now is the cup of my happiness full to brimming, now that thou hast returned to me at last, O my lord! Well-nigh had I ceased to hope for thee, O beloved; well-nigh had this heart of mine grown cold within my bosom, that had no nourishment save hope, save hope! Day and night I have watched for thy coming for many years, praying that thou shouldst return to me ere this frail prettiness of mine, that made thee love me long ago, so fade that thy heart should turn to other women. O my husband!"

"Husband! Great—heavens! Look here, my dear, hadn't you better come to your senses and let me go before—"

"Let thee go, Lalji, ere what? Ere any come to disturb us? Nay, but who should come between husband and wife in the first hour of their reunion after many years of separation? Is it not known—does not all Khandawar know how I have waited for thee, almost thy widow ere thy wife, all this weary time? . . . Or is it that thy heart hath forgotten thy child-bride? Am I scorned, O my lord—I, Naraini? Is there no love in thy bosom to leap in response to the love of thee that is my life?"

She released him and whirled a pace or two away, draperies swirling, jewels scintillating cold fire in hopeless emulation of the radiance of her tear-gemmed eyes.

"Naraini?" stammered Amber, recalling what he had heard of the woman. "Naraini!"

"Aye, my lord, thy wedded wife!" The rounded little chin went up a trifle and her eyes gleamed angrily. "Am I no longer thy Naraini, then? Or, wouldst thou deny that thou art Har Dyal, my king and my beloved? Hast thou indeed forgotten the child that was given thee for wife when thy father reigned in Khandawar, and thou wert but a boy—a boy of ten, the Maharaj Har Dyal? Hast thou forgotten the little maid they brought thee from the north, Lalji!—the maiden who had grown to womanhood ere thy return from thy travels to take up thy father's crown? . . . Ale! Thou canst never forget, beloved; though years and the multitude of faces have come between us as a veil, thou dost remember—even as thou didst remember when the message of the Bell came to thee across the great black waters, and thou didst learn that the days of thy exile were numbered, that the hour approached when again thou shouldst sit in the place of thy fathers and rule the world as once they ruled it."

A denial stuck in Amber's throat. The words would not come, nor would they, he believed, have served his purpose could he have commanded them. If he had found no argument wherewith to persuade Saligh Singh, he found none wherewith to refute the claim of this golden-faced woman who recognized him for her husband. He was wholly dismayed and aghast. But while he lingered in indecision, staring in the woman's face, her look of petulance was replaced by one of divine forgiveness and compassion. And she gave him no time to think or to avoid her; in a twinkling she had thrown herself upon him again, was in his arms and crushing her lips upon his.

"Nay," she murmured, "but I did wrong thee, beloved! Perchance," she told him, archly, "thou didst not think to see me so soon, or in this garden? Perchance surprise hath robbed thee of thy wits—and thy tongue as well, O wordless one? Or thou art overcome with joy, as I am overcome, and smitten dumb by it, as I am not? Aho, Lalji! was ever a woman at loss for words to voice her happiness?" And nestling to him she laughed quietly, with a note as tender and sweet as the cooing of a wood-dove to its mate.

"Nay, but there is a mistake." He recovered the power of speech tardily, and would have put her from him; but she held tight to him. "I am not thy husband, nor yet a rajput. I come from America, the far land where thy husband died. . . . Nay, it doth pain me to hurt thee so, Ranee, but the mistake is not of my making, and it hath been carried too far. Thy husband died in my presence—"

"It is so, then!" she cut him short. And his arms were suddenly empty, to his huge relief. "Indeed, they had warned me that thou wouldst tell this story and deny me—why, I know not, unless it be that thou art unworthy of thy lineage, a coward and a weakling!" Her small foot stamped angrily and on every limb of her round body bracelets and anklets clashed and shimmered. "And so thou hast returned only to forswear me and thy kingdom, O thou of little spirit!" The scarlet lips curled and the eyes grew cold and hard with contempt. "If that be so, tell me, why hast thou returned at all? To die? For that thou must surely come to, if it be in thy mind to defy the behests of the Voice, thou king without a kingdom! . . . Why, then, art thou here, rather than running to hide in some far place, thinking to escape with thy worthless life—worthless even to thee, who art too craven to make a man's use of it—from the Vengeance of the Body? . . . Dost think I am to be tricked and hoodwinked—I, in whose heart thine image hath been enshrined these many weary years?"

"I neither think, nor know, nor greatly care, Ranee," Amber interposed, wearily. "Doubtless I deserve thine anger and scorn, since I am not he who thou wouldst have me be. If death must be my portion for this offense, for that I resemble Har Dyal Rutton . . . then it is written that I am to die. My business here in Khandawar hath concern neither with thee, nor with the state, nor yet with the Gateway of Swords—of the very name of which I am weary. . . . Now," with his mouth settled in lines of unmistakable resolve, "I will go; nor do I think that there be any here to stop me."

He wheeled about, prepared to fight his way out of the palace, if need be. Indeed, it was in his mind that a death there were as easy as an hour after sunrise; for he had little doubt but that he was to die if he remained obdurate, and the hospitality of the rajput would cease to protect him the moment he set foot upon the marble bund of his bungalow.

But the woman sprang after him and caught his arm. "Of thy pity," she begged, breathlessly, "hold for a space until I have taken thought. . . . Thou knowest that if what thou hast told me be the truth, then am I widow before my time—widowed and doomed!"

"Doomed?"

"Aye!" And there was real terror in her eyes and voice. "Doomed to sati. For, since I am a widow—since thou dost maintain thou art not my husband—then my face hath been looked upon by a man not of mine own people, and I am dishonored. Fire alone can cleanse me of that defilement—the pyre and the death by flame!"

"Good God! you don't mean that! Surely that custom has perished!"

"Thou shouldst know that it dieth not. What to us women in whose bodies runs the blood of royalty, is an edict of your English government? What the Sirkar itself to us in Khandawar?" She laughed bitterly. "I am Rohilla, a daughter of kings; my dishonor may be purged only by flame. Arre! that I should live to meet with such a fate—I, Naraini, to perish in the flower of my beauty. . . . For I am beautiful, am I not?" She dropped the veil which instinctively she had caught across her face, and met his gaze with childish coquetry, torn though she seemed to be by fear and disappointment.

"Thou art assuredly most beautiful, Ranee," Amber told her, with a break in his voice, very compassionate. And he spoke simple truth. "Of thy kind there is none more lovely in the world. . . ."

"There was tenderness then in your tone, my lord!" she caught him up quickly. "Is there no mercy in thy heart for me? . . . Who is this woman across the seas who hath won thy love? . . . Aye, even that I know—that thou dost love this fair daughter of the English. Didst thou not lose the picture of her that was taken with the magic box of the sahibs? . . . Is it for her sake that thou dost deny me, O my husband? Is she more fair than I, are her lips more sweet?"

"I am not thy husband," he declared vehemently, appalled by her reversion to that delusion. "Till this hour I have never seen thee; nor is the sahiba of any concern to thee. Let me go, please."

But she had him fast and he could not have shaken her off but with violence. He had been a strong man indeed who had not been melted to tenderness by her beauty and her distress. She lifted her glorious face to him, pleading, insistent, and played upon him with her voice of gold. "Yet a moment gone thou didst tell me I was greatly gifted with beauty. Have I changed in thine eyes, O my king? Canst thou look upon this poor beauty and hear me tell thee of my love—and indeed I am thine, altogether thine, Lalji!—and harden thy heart against me? . . . What though it be as thou hast said? What though thou art of a truth not of the house of Rutton, nor yet a rajput? Let us say that this is so, however hard it be to credit; even so, am I not reward enough for thy renunciation?"

"I know not thy meaning, Ranee. I—"

"Come, then, and I will show thee, my king. Come thou with me. . . . Nay, why shouldst thou falter? There is naught for thee to fear—save me." She tugged at his hand and laughed low, in a voice that sang like smitten glasses. "Come, beloved!"

Unwillingly, he humored her. This could not last long. . . . The woman led, half dragged him to the northern boundary of the garden, where they entered a little turret builded out from the walls over an abyss fully three hundred feet in depth. And here, standing upon the verge of the parapet, with naught but a foot-high coping between her and the frightful fall, utterly fearless and unutterably lovely, Naraini flung out a bare, jeweled arm in an eloquent gestupe.

Engineer's Brave Act.

Tom Shaunsey was running a hoisting engine in a Nevada mine, where three hundred men were employed. One day, just after the twelve o'clock shift had gone down into the mine and were well away from the main shaft at work, it was suddenly discovered that the hoisting works were on fire. The building was old and dry, and burned like tinder, and, notwithstanding all efforts to quench it, it burned so fast that it seemed as if the men in the mine were doomed to suffocation. The heat in the hoisting works drove out every one but Tom Shaunsey, who stood by the engine, with the lever in his hand, steadily watching the cable as it ran through the pulleys, with a speed never known before. The men yelled to Tom to come out, but he only replied with a wave of his disengaged hand, until the last cage-load of miners was hauled to the surface. At the same time part of the roof fell in; but Tom was got out, with his right arm terribly burned and nearly choked. To say that the miners were grateful would be superfluous, and between them and the mining company the brave engineer was handsomely rewarded.

CURED BABY BOY OF SEVERE ECZEMA

An Illinois Mother's Case.

The following is what she says: "I cannot speak too highly of Resinol Ointment and Soap. They cured my baby boy of Eczema. He had a very severe case. Numerous other remedies had been tried and failed to do any good. I would not be without them in the house."

The first application will relieve the itching and irritation in skin diseases, and stop the pain in burns or scalds. Chafing, Sunburn, Poison Ivy eruptions are often cured by an overnight application.

LAWYER CURED OF ECZEMA

"While attending school at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1882, I became afflicted with boils, which lasted for about two years, when the affliction assumed the form of an eczema on my face, the lower part of my face being inflamed most of the time. There would be water-blisters rise up and open, and wherever the water would touch it would burn, and cause another one to rise. After the blister would open, the place would scab over, and would burn and itch so as to be almost unbearable at times. In this way the sores would spread from one place to another, back and forth over the whole of my upper lip and chin, and at times the whole lower part of my face would be a solid sore. This condition continued for four or five years, without getting any better, and in fact got worse all the time, so much so that my wife became alarmed lest it prove fatal.

"During all this time of boils and eczema, I doctored with the best physicians of this part of the country, but to no avail. Finally I decided to try Cuticura Remedies, which I did, taking the Cuticura Resolvent, applying the Cuticura Ointment to the sores, and using the Cuticura Soap for washing. In a very short time I began to notice improvement, and continued to use the Cuticura Remedies until I was well again, and have not had a recurrence of the trouble since, which is over twenty years. I have recommended Cuticura Remedies to others ever since, and have great faith in them as remedies for skin diseases." (Signed) A. C. Brandon, Attorney-at-Law, Greenville, O., Jan. 17, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 3 K, Boston.

STRANGE THINGS FOUND IN VARIOUS PORTIONS OF THE EARTH

Pipes for King's Breakfast

Nearly every morning, while King George is taking his breakfast at about eight o'clock, his majesty's piper, Mr. Forsyth, plays the bagpipes under the windows of the royal apartments at Buckingham palace, marching up and down the while. Both the king and queen are fond of the pipes and Mr. Forsyth is permanently attached to the royal household staff. The pipes he uses belong to the king and are mounted in silver.

CRADLE ALWAYS IS HANDY

In the Caucasus the mothers of infants always carry cradles strapped to their backs, in addition to carrying the babies, and whenever the little ones become sleepy, the cradles are placed on the ground and the babies are rocked to sleep, there and then.

HE CAN TWIST BIG SPIKES.

Michael Mansor, a confectioner of Wooster, O., although well along in years, has just discovered that he has wonderful strength in his hands. Mansor watched a street fakir doing feats with nails. He tried some of them and was astounded on finding how easily he could twist and bend nails. Then he tried the largest steel spikes and these he was able to bend and twist with apparent ease. Mansor made a chain of the spikes to show what he could do with his hands. A strange part of Mansor's discoverey is that although he has seen tricks of the sort performed he never before thought of trying to imitate any of the performances.

WORLD'S BIGGEST BABY.

In James Adolph Cody, two years and three months old, Mount Airy, Ga., boasts the biggest baby in the world. James now weighs 122 pounds and is growwing every day. The coming giant already stands 40 inches, measures 36 inches round the waist, and takes a 12-inch collar. James sleeps well, is perfectly healthy and very strong. His appetite is more like a grown person's than a baby's. For breakfast he will eat three or four large biscuits, with bacon, gravy, butter and syrup, two glasses of buttermilk and if allowed will drink two cups of coffee. For dinner he will eat a big plate of greens or vegetables with boiled bacon, corn bread biscpits, a whole pie if he can get it, and two glasses of buttermilk. He eats again between dinner and supper, and his supper is in keeping with breakfast and dinner.

DUMB MAN SPEAKS.

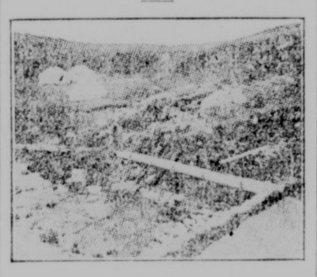
An unusual case was that of Harry Wiltze, a dumb patient, in a New Haven hospital, who greeted the visiting physician the other morning with "Hello, Doc!" It was the first word he had spoken for nine months, and the first sane utterance in many years. An operation was performed on the patient, a section of his skull which had come in contact with the brain being removed, with the result just recorded. There is every indication that the remarkable operation will be perfectly successful.

TWICE BURIED BUT ALIVE

Supposed to have been ground to death beneath a freight train at Newburyport, and to have been twice buried, once in the potter's field and again in Swampscott, after his body had been so positively identified that an insurance policy on his life was paid, Raymond Smith is back at his former home in Lynn, Mass.

BEATING DRUM HIS HOBBY

Simon E. Bernheimer, a millionaire brewer of New York, died recently just as he was exultantly and delightedly in the exercise of his lifelong hobby—beating a bass drum. It was an odd revelation that a man of great wealth and large affairs had found his keenest enjoyment in acting as a musician in a band. Bernheimer has spent thousands of dollars in the support of a musical association for the mere privilege of wielding the big baton with its huge leather ball against the side of a booming drum. He had joined a Masonic order in order to get an opportunity to play the bass drum as a substitute in the band, attending rehearsals devotedly in the hope that some night the regular bass drummer would be absent and he would get a chance. And when he did get it the other night he attacked the instrument with such vim and was so highly excited withal at the opportunity that had come to him that he brought on a stroke of apoplexy that killed him.



BOY'S REMARKABLE ESCAPE

A seven-year-old boy, Walter Gustavage, had a thrilling experience at Girardville, Pa., one day lately. A chum dared him to jump over the mouth of an air shaft at one of the colliery mines, and on making the attempt he miscalculated the distance and went whirling down the chute 470 feet into an excavation. He escaped with nothing more than a few bruises. When the boy disappeared into the opening his companion spread an alarm and rescuers were lowered into the hole with ropes, but could get no response to their calls. An hour later when those on the surface had given up the boy for dead, a loader boss appeared on the surface with the lad in his arms. He found him on a gangway platform crying from fright, but practically unhurt.

NOW THE ELECTRIC CARPET.

The latest electric invention is the electric carpet for heating rooms. It was originated in Paris. The under side of the new carpet consists of a network of steel wires through which the current is equally distributed in all directions. It is said that the cost of the new form of heating will be less than that of any known system; indeed it is estimated that a room fitted with one of these carpets can be heated at a total cost of a penny an hour.

SCOTLAND HAS A KLONDIKE

Scotland now has a little Klondike all its own, but there has been no rush of gold-seekers because it is all on the property of the duke of Sutherland. Considerable gold has been found in the Suisgill burn, a typical Scottish stream flowing amidst wild and barren country, and the duke has established a mining camp with a score of laborers under the charge of an experienced miner from the real Klondike. Placer methods are being employed.

Triumph of Topiary Art

The topiary art—that of clipping and trimming trees and shrubs into regular or fantastic shapes—has been practiced in England for centuries, and nowhere, perhaps, can be seen better examples of it than at Leven's Hall in Westmoreland. In California and some parts of the south there are fine epcimens of topiary work, and the Hunnewell estate at Wellesley, Mass., is famous for it.

The Kitchen Cabinet

POSSESSIONS are not always by any means a source of happiness. Very often they are a discomfort and an annoyance.

PLAN NOW FOR CHRISTMAS.

There are very few of us who are always remembered at holiday time with things that they really want. We all know the horror of "smiling and being a villain," trying to be pleased over some gift, from a dear friend, that is absolutely useless to us and often worse than that, a perfect annoyance.

Probably the people who need this advice will not read this, and the long-suffering ones will.

Would it not be wise to study this problem early and try to give to people whose tastes are not easily satisfied something edible, which they can at least dispose of without feeling like a criminal?

This is the season of canning and preserving; why not add a few extra glasses and jars to the store for Christmas gifts?

Such a gift may be made as dainty and attractive as one's taste and purse permits. The pretty little baskets to pack such gifts in are always welcome and they can be passed on with similar gifts.

One little woman makes many tiny glasses of jelly of different flavors, labeling and packing a half dozen for each invalid friend.

Tomato Soy.—Peel and chop a peck of ripe tomatoes, put over the fire with half a cup of whole cloves, half a cup of allspice, one cup of salt, one tablespoonful of pepper, three red peppers chopped, five onions also chopped. Cook for one hour; add a quart of vinegar and bottle.

Beet Relish.—Take a quart of cabbage chopped, a quart of boiled beets chopped fine, two cups of sugar, a tablespoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of pepper, half a teaspoon of red pepper, a cup of grated horseradish and vingar enough to mix well and make of a smooth consistency. Can cold. Very nice for meats.

Gingered Pears.—Take ten ripe pears, six pounds of sugar, two lemons, a pound of ginger (candied) and water enough to cook. Slice the pears quite thin, and chop the ginger in small pieces; take the juice of two lemons and the rind of one. Cook slowly one hour. This is especially nice served with ice cream.

THOUGH expensive food be provided, if there be too much sameness, the stomach rebels, the system starves. Variety is the spice of life.
—Dukes.

VARIETY IN MENUS.

The one great bugbear of menu making is sameness. The endeavor of the housewife to produce attractive meals with a certain allowance and have variety, means some thoughtful planning. She who has an unlimited pocketbook need have little worry, but to the majority of women the problem of making ends meet and serving attractive, appetizing and nourishing food is a daily question.

Everything is high this year, even the plebian potato is too exclusive for everyday use. We must learn to use rice and hominy instead. The old proverb which tells us that "there is no loss without some gain" is proven to us, as we learn to substitute many foods for these which we have always considered indispensable.

The great criticism made of Americans, and justly, is that we eat too much. Our meals should be simpler, better cooked and served. The idea that it is necessary to have from five to six vegetables at a meal is extravagant; two is plenty and three a luxury.

Emergency Biscuit.—Sift together four times two cups of flour and four teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a half a teaspoon of salt. Rub in four tablespoonfuls of butter or less, add three-fourths of a cup of cold milk and drop by teaspoonfuls on a buttered pan. Bake in a hot oven twelve to fifteen minutes.

Rice Pudding.—Boil a cup of rice in a pint of water until dry, then add a quart of milk and cook until thick. To the yolks of three eggs add six tablespoonfuls of sugar and the grated rind of a lemon; cook ten minutes with the rice, then cover with the beaten whites of the eggs, to which six tablespoonfuls of sugar has been added, with the juice of a lemon. Brown and serve when cold.

Mayor Speer of Denver was talking about a bill of which he disapproved.

"Why, a bill like that," he said, "would soon put the city in the condition of the Cinnaminson Scimitar.

"The foreman of the Scimitar's composing room said to the proprietor one day:

"'We need a drawer, boss, to put these blocks in.'

"'We haven't got a drawer that's not in use,' said the editor-proprietor. Then he paused and added, 'Except the cash drawer. You might as well take that.'"

IS MILLENNIAL DAWNISM OF GOD?

"There shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect."—Matthew 24:24.

Is Millennial Dawnism of God? When I ask this question and answer it negatively I do not want to be understood as saying that there are no true teachings at all in it. The Millennial Dawnites, or to call them after their leader, Russellites, teach some truths that are acknowledged by all Christians—enough to blind the eyes of many devout and well meaning men and women to the subtle poison which lies hidden like an adder's sting. I will not condemn them as wilful perverters of the truth, for I believe that many of them think they are right in their views and disseminate them because they think it is their duty to do so. The fact that they think they are right does not make them right. Many a person has believed a lie. Many members of this sect can be esteemed highly for their sterling qualities of heart and brain, but even the best people with the best intentions sometimes make mistakes. It is my purpose in this sermon to point out to you what I consider to be errors and false teachings which will endanger your eternal salvation, and also to show you that he who claims to be their specially enlightened teacher and leader is a false prophet and not worthy of your confidence.

1. He is a false prophet—

1. Because he contradicts himself.

In volume one, Studies in the Scriptures, page 186, at the bottom of the page he makes this statement: Nowhere in the Scriptures is it stated that the angels are immortal, nor that mankind restored will be immortal. On the contrary, immortality is ascribed only to the divine nature—orginally to Jehovah only; subsequently to our Lord Jesus in his present highly exalted condition; and finally by promise to the Church, the body of Christ, when glorified with him." Probably when you read that passage you did not notice that he says in the first place that mankind when restored will not be immortal and then in the same paragraph says that the Church, the body of Christ, which is composed of men, will be immortal. It is hard to understand how they can be mortal and immortal at the same time. He also says on page 197 of the same volume: "It should be remembered that we are not actually spirit beings until the resurrection, though from the time we receive the spirit of adoption we are reconed as such. When we become spirit beings actually, that is, when we are born of the spirit, we will no longer be fleshy beings. He says in the first place that we are not spirit beings until the resurrection and then follows this statement by saying that we become spirit beings when we are born of the spirit—that is, when we are converted and accepted of God. Such statements as these are confusing, to say the least.

2. He is a false prophet because his prophecies have not been fulfilled. Jeremiah 28:9 reads: "The prophet that prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that Jehovah hath truly sent him." Let us apply this test to Mr. Russell. On page 364, volume 3, Studies in the Scriptures, we read: A trouble, chiefly upon the Church may be expected about 1910, A. D." He wrote this, I think, in 1881. Has anyone heard of that trouble materalizing? Instead of trouble the Churches have experienced a greater degree of prosperity than at any time in their history. Instead of the great tribulations beginning then and reaching the height of its severity in 1914 it looks like the era of peace spoken of by the prophets, when men will beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks, is about to be ushered in. For since the world began such good feeling has not existed between the nations. Instead of 1910 being the beginning of strife and unrest it was the beginning of the movement for arbitration between this country and several of the European nations, and the various peace societies reported a greater interest in their work than at any time in their history.

He says in dozens of places that Christ's second advent took place in 1874. When he is asked for proof he evades the question by saying it was a secret coming and quotes this passage of Scripture to prove his assertion, Luke 12:39, "If the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through." He says that this means that the thief would come secretly and not expectedly. The next verse tells us that He was to come unexpectedly—"Be ye therefore ready also; for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not." That is, when He is not expected. He says that He came secretly. Mark 13:26 says: "And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory." Acts 1:11 says: "Ye men of Gallilee, why stand ye looking up into heaven? this Jesus who was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven." The ascension was not invisible nor secret and if these words of the angels mean anything they mean that his second coming will be as public as his ascension.

Russell claims that Christ will come publicly in 1914. I hope he may, but what do the Scriptures say about fixing a date for his coming? Matthew 24:39 says: "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Matthew 24.42 says: "Watch therefore, for ye know not at what hour your Lord doth come." Is there any question as to which knew the most about his second coming, our Lord or Russell? On page 305, volume 3, Russell says: "The setting up of that kingdom has actually been in progress since the year 1878; and there is the resurrection of all dead in Christ was due; and that therefore, since that date, not only is our Lord and head invisibly present in the world, but all these holy messengers are also with him." On page 234 he says: "And since the resurrection of the church must occur sometime during this end or 'harvest' period, we hold that it is a most reasonable inference, and one in perfect harmony with the Lord's plan, that in the spring of 1878 all the holy apostles and other 'overcomers' of the gospel age who slept in Jesus were raised spirit beings like their Lord and Master."

The Scriptures teach that at the coming of Christ the dead in Christ will rise first and that those who remain and are alive at his coming will be changed, and all together, including the risen dead, will be caught up to meet him in the air. Note the following passages: 1 Thessalonians 4:13-17, "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others, which have no hope. For if we believe that Christ died and rose again even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (or precede) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are still alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall be be ever with the Lord." 1 Cor. 15:51-52. "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." He claims that the risen dead and Christ are invisible. If this were so he would yet have to account for the fact that not a living being on the face of the earth, as far as anyone knows (and I think such a thing would have become known) was changed and caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and he also has to account for his own presence on earth if he were a follower of the Lord at that date. Why was not he caught up?

Therefore the conclusion must be that his prophecy failed and that the resurrection did not take place at the time he said it did, and that such being the case he is, according to Scripture, stamped as a false prophet. On page 171 of volumne 2, Studies in the Scriptures, he says in reply to one who is asking about these things, "He must not expect to have passages of Scripture pointed out in which these matters and dates are plainly written." And yet he expects us to believe him on his bare word!

II DOCTRINES.

1. They deny that Jesus was divine between his birth and resurrection.

On page 134, volume 1, after speaking of the exaltation of men to the divine nature he says: "If the same reward should be given them that was given to our Lord Jesus, namely to partake of a new nature, the divine, and to be highly exalted above the angels and principalities and powers, and every name that is named—next to Jehovah." This passage implies that at one time Jesus did not have the divine nature. On page 172 of the same book he explicity states that Jesus was at one time not divine in the following words: "The Son of God became a man." On page 179 he says: "When Jesus was in the flesh he was a perfect human being; previous to that he was a perfect spiritual being; and since his resurrection he is a perfect spiritual being of the highest or divine order. It was not until the time of his consecration even unto death, as typified in his baptism, at thirty years of age, but he received the earnest of his inheritance of the divine nature." On page 180 he goes on to say: "Thus we see that in Jesus there was no mixture of natures, but that twice he experienced a change of nature; first from spirit to human; afterwards, from human to the highest order of the spiritual nature, the divine; and in each case one was given up for the other."

I maintain that there was never a time when Jesus was not divine, was not God. And that there never was a time and never will be a time when man is divine, is God. Psalm 2:7 says: "I will tell thee of the decree; Jehovah said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." If he is the Son of God he must always be of the same nature as God. Isaiah 7:14 is also explicit on this matter. "A virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." The name Immanuel is composed of three Hebrew words, im-manu-el—God with us, or to literally translate it, with us God. Leaving out all other proof of his divinity after his birth and before his death the word of Jesus himself is sufficient, for his word is truth. He says in John 10:30: "I and my Father are one." To deny this statement is to deny the divinity of God himself or to brand our Lord as a willful deceiver. Russell apparently seeks to divide the Godhead and have two separate and distinct Gods and not to recognize the unity of the Father and the Son. He would have Jesus a separate God from his Father or bring the Father down to the level of man. He is not the first that has tried to do this. In the days of John the Apostle, men tried to rob Jesus of his divinity. It was for this reason that John wrote his gospel to prove that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. He says in the first chapter and first verse "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God and the Word was God." To literally translate this passage from the original Greek it reads as follows: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God and God was the Word." Not a God was the Word, as Wilson has it

GOD IS RESPONSIBLE INDIRECTLY FOR THE PRESENT REIGN OF SIN AND DEATH

Pastor Russell Tells a Spell-Bound Audience Why God Permits Sin and Calamities, What Purposes They Are Serving and How Eventually They Will Accomplish Good For Men and Angels and Bring Glory to God.

PASTOR RUSSELL

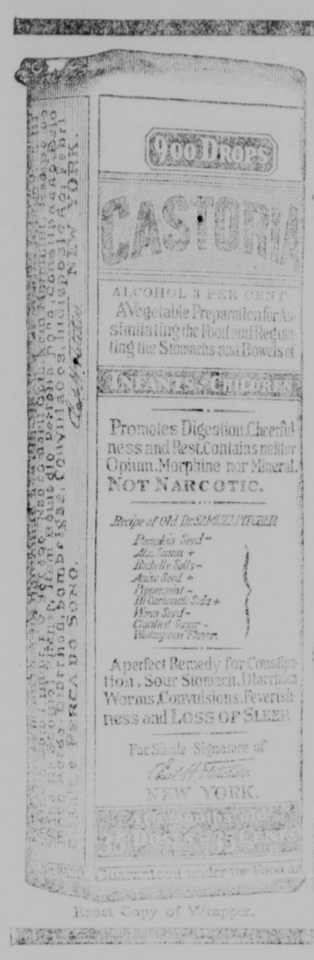
Springfield, Mass., Sept. 17th.—Both of Pastor Russell's discourses here today were heard with close attention by large audiences. One was on the "Hereafter;" the other, which we report, was on the Divine Permission of Evil, from the text, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight" (Luke x, 21).

Pastor Russell declared that only those who, through the Bible, get at least a glimpse of the glorious outworking of the Divine Plan, understand God's reasons for permitting the reign of sin and death, of sorrow and pain, which has prevailed amongst mankind for six thousand years. The Almighty, he said, designs to teach great lessons to angels and to men. Hence the Divine dealing with mankind has been very different from His dealing with angels. The holy angels, being perfect, have known no sin, no death penalty, no sorrow, sickness or pain. They might have had some conception of Divine Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power, but could never have really understood their great Creator, had it not been for His dealings with humanity—His permission of sin and death among Adam's posterity.

Cost of Sin to Man.

Not only was Divine Love manifested in providing a Redeemer, but Divine Justice was exemplified in rewarding that Redeemer with the highest glory—"far above angels, principalities and powers." Additionally, God's love has been seeking out the loyal of mankind, the saintly few, to be the Bride of Christ—to be associated with the Redeemer in His glorious Kingdom, which is shortly to bless and uplift the race of Adam from sin, from meanness, weakness and death.

When we think of the aggregate of sin, sorrow, pain, the calamity of death, for six thousand years, the picture is truly awful; but we should remember that this has been distributed, here a little and there a little, amongst the twenty thousand millions of our race, one-half of whom, perhaps, have died in infancy. Few have lived to three score years and ten. I believe that even the most sorrowful lives known to the world have had compensatory seasons of pleasure, joy, happiness. I believe that only a few have died regretting that they had been born; and I am sure that with a proper understanding of Divine future provision they would not regret their birth, with its attachments of sorrow.



Pastor Russell believes that human restitution, during Messiah's reign of a thousand years, will, in some respects, bring to the willing and obedient greater joy, greater blessing, greater appreciation of perfection and righteousness than if they had not known imperfection and sin.

Thus mankind will really lose nothing by the Divine permission of evil, but, on the contrary, will, by the increased knowledge gained through the reign of death and evil, learn lessons which will be of advantage to them to all eternity.

Divine Power Revealed.

As the penalty of death reveals Divine Justice, and as the redemption from that penalty reveals Divine Love, so the recovery of mankind from death will reveal Divine Power, as nothing else could reveal it. Pastor Russell declared that the power which God promised to exercise in the resurrection of the Church to the spirit plane, and in the resurrection of the world to the human plane of being, will surpass any power ever exhibited in the past. To create the world, the angels and all things is truly a wonderful manifestation of Divine Power; but to recreate man, after he has gone back to dust, is something still more wonderful. In restoring man's soul or being, his intellect, his thoughts, Divine power will be exemplified in a manner and to a degree which is beyond human conception. When we remember the billions of earth's dead, and all their diversified experiences, which were impressed upon their memories, the power to accomplish the full Restitution of that which was lost is so infinite as to be incomprehensible, though we fully believe the promise.

The grand finale, Pastor Russell declared, will be the revelation to angels and to men of the much diversified wisdom of God. The wisdom which foresaw the end from the beginning, and which has been regulating the affairs of mankind to a fore-ordained end, and which will ultimately bring order out of confusion, surpasses anything that angels or men have ever dreamed of on the part of their Creator. The Scriptures say, "True and righteous are Thy ways, Lord God Almighty; for all the nations shall come and worship before Thee when Thy righteous dealings shall be made manifest" (Revelation xv, 4).

OUR BALTIMORE LETTER.

Politics Freely Discussed By Our Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, MD., Oct. 4, 1911.

There has been some favorable comment upon Mr. Gorman's speech on being notified of his nomination for Governor by the Democrats of this State, delivered at his home, Fairview, in Howard county, last week, but a great deal of it has been what would be enelegantly called "slush." Only those who are hide-bound partisans of Mr. Gorman's and the organization wing of the Democrotic party have been sincere in their applause, while much of the rest of it has emanated from sources which, because of their previous estimate of Mr. Gorman's official conduct, give ample evidence of strong effort and a woeful lack of genuine earnestness. Mr. Gorman's utterances on this occasion, however, were in some respects notable; remarkable, we may say, and those who are opposing him in his candidacy will have sufficient regard for the proprieties to be just and fair with him in their criticism of his more trenchant passages.

Mr. Gorman seems to have elicited the most enthusiasm by his frankness in declaring himself to be a politician; in openly going on record as being an organization Democrat; by promising to appoint men to office who are "regular," provided they are found to be competent; expressing his emphatic disapproval of fraudulent practices in elections, and in promising economy in future legislative expenses and in administering State government. By some of Mr. Gorman's hysterical admirers these have made up what they are pleased to term "the keynote" of the campaign.

Withdrawing for the moment from the din and confusion consequent upon the McNulty charges and the Grand Jury's exposures of bare-faced election frauds in Baltimore City—removing from our minds this and all else calculated to prejudice and warp the voters' otherwise calm and reasonable judgment, or sway their accepted well-balanced mental poise, let us see how puerile these candid bids for public confidence really are.

To begin with, Mr. Gorman's confession that he is a politician entitles him to no commendations unless he be able to convince the public that he is better than the average politician—that he is not "a politician who is in politics for graft, or to serve his special friends, or ends, or interests, or who tries to fool the public." Unless Mr. Gorman can satisfy the electorate of Maryland that he is or has been a statesman as well as a politician, there is nothing in his admission that will appeal to them successfully. The confession of a traverser at the bar does not entitle him to an acquittal however "frank" that confession may be, except he repent the past and set his face toward a new and higher life. Mr. Gorman, it will be seen from his own statement, does neither. "I make no apologies for my political creed or my political past," says Mr. Gorman with equal "frankness," and those who know something of both his "political creed" and his "political past" will hardly accept Mr. Gorman as just the right and proper stripe of politicians to be made Governor of Maryland.

As for Mr. Gorman's succeeding statement, that he is "an organization Democrat," together with his attempt to show what a good and upright organization the Democratic party in Maryland is possessed of, we are content to pass it over without comment, except to suggest that Mr. Gorman's estimate of a satisfactory political organization does not wholly coincide with more recent judicial apprisals. And in this connection, it will be well within Mr. Gorman's prerogatives as Governor to appoint "regulars" to fill the offices under him, in accordance with his declared determination.

Coming down to Mr. Gorman's utterances concerning "fraudulent practices in elections," which he emphatically disapproves, (he says so himself), it is noteworthy that as a member of the Maryland Senate Mr. Gorman demanded the introduction of the very sections of the Corrupt Practices Act which he now promises to modify and amend in order to strengthen that law; that his opposition to the State-wide Primary Bill was so persistent that when he found he could not prevent its enactment, he had his own county, Howard, exempted from its operation; and he proposed legislation, which, if enacted into law, would have placed the selection of all election officials, Republican as well as Democratic in the hands of one party, and that, of course, his own.

And Mr. Gorman's other splendid declaration for economical expenditures in legislative expenses and in the administration of the governmental affairs of the State, is so at variance with his acts and achievements that no one—not even his most intimate friends—will be able to accept this campaign promise off-hand. It it a matter of public knowledge and legislative record that through the efforts and by the acts of Senator Gorman thousands of dollars, it has been charged, were improperly and wrongfully diverted into the pockets of political heelers and henchmen as a reward for services rendered to the political bosses—the same bosses, be it remembered, who are at the moment wriggling beneath the luminous glare of the Dobson Grand Jury's searchlight.

Thus we might proceed throughout the whole length of Democratic Gubernatorial candidate's acceptance speech, bristling as it does with choice heroics, picturesque platitudes and empty volubility. Naturally enough, those who find so much to commend in Mr. Gorman's acceptance address refer only to those pronouncements which are especially intended for display and thus finely drawn for the purpose of parade rather than fulfilment. His over-zealous friends in the effervescence of their approval do not point to his declarations in their entirety, preferring rather to observe a discreet, if suspicious, silence with respect to certain statements, and to withhold any explanation or opinion whatever as to other more trite specifications.

And in all the circumstances, surrounding the Democratic candidate for Governor it is no doubt quite as well for Mr. Gorman that they should do so.

As we have said, Mr. Gorman's acceptance speech is a most remarkable production.

SUPERINTENDENT REED'S REPORT

Made Last Night to the M. E. Conference In Session at Charleston.

Last night at the session of the M. E. Conference at Charleston, W. Va., Superintendent W. D. Reed, of the Oakland District, submitted his annual report, as follows:

Dear Fathers and Brethren.

In presenting this our second annual report, it is with graditude to Almighty God, the Giver of all good, the source of all blessings and the Great Head of the Church. The year has been full of incessant toil, yet one of great victories for the Church.

First we are glad to report how graciously the Lord hath visited His people, and opened the door of salvation, poured upon the peoples "refreshings from the Lord;" visited the saints, confirmed and strengthened believers, and redeemed hundreds of souls. The revival fire spread from charge to charge, until from October to August, a mighty tidal wave of Salvation spread to the four corners of the district, and more than 1700 souls were converted, which resulted in 1192 accessions to the church and after deducting all losses the pastors reports will show a net increase in membership of 754. To God thro His Son Jesus Christ be all the glory.

The Sunday Schools in some instances have more than doubled in average attendance, while the district show an increase of nearly 50 per cent. and we know of no place within the bounds of the district where another school is needed.

Last year we report d 36 Epworth Leagues and this year 42, or an increase of 6. A profitable and helpful District convention was held at Rowlesburg under efficient presidency of Mr. H. V. Leighton. The leagues of this district were never in better working condition than at present.

The pastors are finding them helpful and influential factors in the Church life.

The Benevolences of the district will show a marked healthy increase over any previous year. Last year two charges stood in class ONE while this year there will be Twelve or an increase of 600 per cent. For Home and Foreign Missions alone there will be an increase of more than $400. Pastors have carefully looked after this interest of the church, and as a result, charges that have never before reported "all in full" will do so this time.

We are glad to report a handsome increase over last year for pastoral support. While we reported last year a net increase of $2089, the records show a net increase of $2172 thereby lowering the deficiency of the previous year; and with this good record behind us, we faced the future somewhat fearful lest the increase again might be small, but to our happy surprise when the record was written we had another handsome increase of $2255, making a total of $4344 in two years. We are sorry there will as usual be some deficiencies, but we have every reason to believe these will be less in the aggregate than last year. Therefore we are elated to know the $4344 represents a net gain to the district for pastoral support.

As the time draws near when we shall have a vote on the Prohibition Amendment, it will not come amiss to speak of our present victories. With the single exception of the town of Oakland, Md., the Oakland district legally is as dry as the Great Sahara Desert. Recently the County of Tucker was added to the dry column. Listen to the roll call, Preston, Mineral, Grant, Pendleton, Randolph, Tucker and all of Garrett with the single exception, and before this calendar year closes there will be no exception for the three delegates from Garrett are pledged to statutory Prohibition for the County. And when again you call the roll in November 1912, on the Amendment, you will find the preachers and peoples of these counties among the stalwarts, and we believe every county and every precinct will roll up a commanding majority in favor of the Amendment.

We serve notice now that any man desiring to come to Oakland district must pass a satisfactory examination in orthodoxy and willing to "spend and be spent" until Prohibition shall be written in the constitution of West Virginia.

While the year has been full of sunshine and victory, nevertheless, God in His wise Providence permitted the rider of the Pale Horse to enter the homes of many of our people, and four times did he halt at the door of the parsonages.

The appointments had scarcely been read when without warning and unexpectedly Brother and Sister Woodruff were suddenly bowed in greif in the loss of their son, W. H. Woodruff, who was taken in the full strength and vigor of young manhood.

Again, in the course of a few weeks, that sainted man of God and former Presiding Elder of this district, the Rev. N. L. Baumgardner, was also suddenly called to walk under the shadow of bereavement in the lost of his boy, who too was summoned away in youth.

After ten days of careful and prayful watching, on May 16th, 1911, Brother and Sister Idleman gave back to God little Core Freeland, aged nearly 8 years. He came, cheered and brightened the home, went back leaving a vacant place but father and mother richer in heart life.

A little more than one year ago the Rev. and Mrs. A. S. Arnett went to Deer Park, Md., seeking the best climatic conditions for the health of Mrs. Arnett, but on Monday, May 29th, 1911, she passed within the veil. She was a daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Jno. S. Laughlin and was married to Rev. A. S. Arnett October 12, 1903. She was in poor health for almost two years fighting a losing fight with tuberculosis. She was a graduate of the Western Maryland College and a fluent writer on many subjects, an ideal preacher's wife. She knew death was near, spoke cheerfully and without fear to her pastor, the Rev. D. L. Reid, of the future; after bidding all good bye, she stepped out into the invisible future, with faith and confidence in Him who said "I will come again and receive you unto myself."

Wilson Chapel on the Pendleton charge, P. W. Shrader pastor, was dedicated early in the conference year by the district superintendent free from all indebtedness. This church was made possible by a gift of $100 by Chas. Wilson's Sunday school class of Cameron, W. Va. Another church on the Memorial Plan, also the gift of Cameron, W. Va., is in process of building on the same charge.

At Blaine, R. C. Weidler, pastor, a modern brick costing nearly $7000 was dedicated by Drs. Doney and Westfall. So soon is this handsome church home to small too accommodate the congregation of this rapidly growing center.

A new church at Jenningston, on the Hendricks charge, J. E. Wells, pastor, costing $2100 was dedicated by Dr. H. D. Clark August 20th, free from all indebtedness. Also the parsonage remodelled and partly furnished at a cost of $2000. This is now one of the handsomest and most comfortable homes in the conference.

August 6th Dr. Carl G. Doney dedicated a new church on the Circleville charge, free from all debt. Here also a new 6-room parsonage is ready for the new preacher. Two new churches and a new parsonage in two years is a record for which the pastor, W. H. Plum, should be justly proud.

Job, on the Horton charge, J. L. Marquess, pastor, is ready for dedication, and at Howesville on the Howesville charge, Z. F. Shahan, pastor, a new church is taking the place of the old one.

Thro the influence of Bro. Idleman Mrs. Honline, of Gormania, gave the church one of the best located homes in the town for a parsonage. This property is worth $2200.

A district home for the Superintendent has been purchased in the city of Oakland at a cost of $4500. This is a well located 10 roomed house, furnished with all modern conveniences.

Recently, Mr. Francis Heermans, one of the substantial men in our Kingwood church, gave the Trustees a check for $2000 as a permanent Endowment to the church.

Too much credit cannot be given the faithful, loyal and earnest men of the Oakland District; great preachers, faithful pastors, remarkable financiers, soul stirring evangelists, mighty men of God. No Superintendent can fail with the co-operation of such men.

Secret of True National Greatness

By Rev. JAMES P. MARTIN
Pastor of Hyde Park Presbyterian Church, Denver, Colo.

The enduring story of America is not yet fulfilled. The anniversary of a national birthday leads us to reflect upon the state of things. Calm judgment would lead us to see many defects and crudities in this passing era. Our history as a nation, our wondrous tales of fabulous wealth and unique physical advancement, parallels and resembles an individual who, hastening to get wealth and power and to be master of applying science to industry, has left vulnerable points in his own education; is like the man who, gathering generously, is spending equally prodigally. We have grown big so fast that we have become awe-stricken at our own size.

We might well sit at British feet and learn. We are confused of face at the thought of poverty and squalor, when our German friends are approaching the problems so wisely. We are shameless because of our conceit and arrogance in our daily contact with men, but "the little brown man" of the east is thoughtful here and might teach us maners. What shall we say of child labor; factory life in general; mining horrors; congestion in city life; ravages of disease? We surely cannot count ourselves as perfect, nor to have even attained unto our high calling.

We need right now, less of pyrotechnics, whether as fireworks or vain idle bubbling from some so-called patriot the measure of whose patriotism is determined by the length of time and rapidity of accumulation in feeding at the public crib.

To my mind we need most to reflect soberly and deliberately as individuals every day the country over. The first thinking should be not of what other men ought to do, or of what investigating committees may discover, and so on, but of what each one as a citizen of ordinary capacity and intelligence can accomplish as he forms that part of the national entity confined within the limits of home or neighborhood, town or city in which he lives and votes. The true, sincere dedication of a patriot's own self to country after serious concern for its needs, may accomplish our Utopian dreams and effect results that shall stand forever.

That such dedication may be of profit and glory, each one has a stern duty incumbent upon him. He must make the most possible of himself and project himself far into the mass of the body politic. That brings me to the theme of the morning. The secret lies right here. To have a great nation, let each individual make himself wise, strong and self-supporting. We are not saying too much when we reflect that the test of every institution is the promotion of greatness in the individual.

The holy word of God stands for the glory of the individual, saying, "Let every man bear his own burden." Christ's estimate of the individual gives intensity to our thought. While the world is busy trampling men under foot, Christ is busy lifting them up. Christ did not consider external conditions. He went straight to man's soul and stampeded it, "made in God's image."

Midway between selfishness and disaster stands Christ's philosophy, "Let every man bear his own burden," which asks each man to love his fellows and his God and thus become a great individual, gathering wisdom and goodness as he goes forth. In individual excellence we have the key of all problems, the solution of all vexed questions, the clew of every maze.

The secret of the increasing wage comes not so much by shortened hours or laws of regulation as by the excellence of the individual in doubling the quality and quantity of his work. When we will, we can double our wages, as a nation. Too many of us are buying tools of heavy labor when we should be developing intellect. Rely on self. Go early, stay late, give your nights to study, climb, make yourself indispensable, save the waste. Your fondest hope is then not beyond your grasp. The difference in men is not made by unequal laws, but by difference in measuring one's own value.

Which is better, to bring all men down to a common level, or to lift up the lowest to the level of the strongest, wisest and greatest? To return to our scheme, the secret of national greatness lies in personal culture, personal happiness, character and worth. The survival of the fittest is ours here. The boundary between strength and weakness lies there. The strong man wills to be stronger and becomes so. The weak man is content to stay as he is, and so loses his estate.

Give yourselves to preparation for the last grand struggle. Ten years of fitting for one year of sublime living is none too great. Such is time saved.

We need Pauls in our life so that the faith may be spread. We want an ideal nation—ideal in equal rights for all; justice, that none shall suffer; a square deal, with handicaps for none to the advantage of another. The purpose of God in history is to exalt manhood to its place of glory, where all shall be "sons of God." "Behold now are we the sons of God." But are we living as sons or as servants? Let us make ourselves worthy of our high calling by living as God would have us live, for of a truth righteousness exalteth a nation, but "sin is a reproach."

TEMPERANCE NOTES

OUTPUT OF BEER ON DECLINE

Vienna Journal Estimates Decrease at Nearly Million and Half Hectolitres —Important Data.

The world's output of beer during the year 1909 amounted, according to the estimates annually compiled by a Vienna journal, to 300,892,000 hectolitres, as against 304,330,000 in 1908—a decrease of nearly three and a half millions. The hectolitre equals 22 galons, so that, stated in English measure, the 1909 output was rather more than 183,000,000 barrels. When this total comes to be divided among the different nations, America is credited with the largest output—namely, 101,000,000 hectolitres, or over one-third of the whole—America being taken to include the whole continent of North and South America. The output of the United States alone is under 70,000,000 hectolitres. The figures for the German empire are 70,-C90,000 hectolitres, and therefore, occupy first place. The United Kingdom comes third on the list, with 55,887,000 hectolitres. No other country approaches these three. The fourth is taken by Austria-Hungary with 22,009,000 hectolitres, Belgium coming fifth with 16,485,000, and France taking sixth place with 14,228,-000 hectolitres. Russia's output is estimated at 8,600,000, Sweden's at 3,-160,000, Denmark, 2,750,000, Switzerland at 2,510,000, and Holland's at 1,508,000 hectolitres. Italy, Norway, Spain, Roumania, Bulgaria, Greece, Servia and Portugal among European countries follow in the order named with quantities ranging from 460,000 down to 24,000 hectolitres. Australia and New Zealand together produced about 2,400,000, Canada about 1,148,-000, and Natal and Cape Colony together about 136,000 hectolitres. The last named is just half the quantity now brewed in Japan.

The number of breweries is greatest in Germany (14,870), the United Kingdom possessing 4,542, Belgium 3,-379, Rrance 2,776, Austria-Hungary 1,-289, Denmark 287, Sweden 222, Norway 43, Holland, 462, Switzerland, 160, Russia, 320, and the United States about 2,000. In Germany, Bavaria takes first place in regard to consumption per head of the population, which stands at 283 litres, though Salzberg is a good second with 231 litres. Belgium stands third with 223, the United Kingdom following with 133, Denmark with 106, the United States, with about 80, Sweden with 61 and France with 36 litres.

These facts indicating the power and extent of the world traffic in beer furnish important data for study by temperance reformers and students of economics everywhere, but may by no means be regarded as ground for discouragement in the world-wide campaign against the liquor evil since the whole trend of modern times among all nations is set steadfast and overwhelmingly against the tide of intemperance.

ENGLISH WATER WAGON NEAR

The statistics of beer and spirit consumption contained in the latest annual report of the customs and excise commissioners must be gratifying reading to lovers of temperance. Although during 1909-10 the consumption of beer was only 412,000 barrels less than in the previous year—a decline of approximately 1½ per cent.—it makes a total decrease of 3,653,000 barrels in the last decade, every year of which shows a fall in the per capita consumption. For every fifty glasses of beer drunk by John Bull in 1900-01 he consumed only forty-one last year.

The annual drop in the consumption of spirits is much more remarkable, amounting in 1909-10 to as much as 33 1-3 per cent.—one glass out of every three. In the ten years the quantity of spirits drunk at home has fallen from 45,402,600 to 26,008,200 gallons, a decline of 43 per cent.; while the consumption per head had fallen over 47 per cent.—one glass of spirits in 1909-1910 approximately taking the place of two in 1900-01.

Effects of Education.

An encampment of citizen soldiers was recently held in Wales, and at its close the following encouraging report was made: "Not a single case of drunkenness was reported, not a single man was brought before the officers, and not a single man was seen to be under the influence of drink. It is notable also that, judging by the proportion of men who preferred to be supplied with mineral waters to beer or other intoxicants at meals, more than 60 per cent of the men are abstainers." Certainly the education of the people respecting the injurious effects of alcohol is beginning to tell.

Stop Whisky Business.

Edison, the great inventor, says: "Art will be increased and distributed as we emerge more and more from the dog stage. Society will have to stop this whisky business, which is like throwing sand in the bearings of a steam engine."

Photograph by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

A FAMOUS Parisian coiffeur artist is the author of this head adornment, which, by the way, will be worn by several of the beauties in a forthcoming American production. The band is of green velvet with a long, dull gold fringe. It is very effective where the wearer is possessed of classic features. According to fashion reports, it will be very popular this winter, though not suitable to all.

FOR SMALL GIRL.

This pretty dress is made up in Shantung in a light shade of blue. The full bodice has a little square yoke embroidered with shades of brown, green or blue silk, the waistband and cuffs being embroidered to match.

The full gathered skirt has two tucks made above the hem; it is sewn to the same band as bodice, and both fasten at back.

Material required. Three yards thirty-four inches wide.

Effective Dress.

A simple but effective dress worn recently by a young girl is a broad striped blue and white cotton, made with a tunic bound with blue, a narrow belt embroidered with currant-tinted chenille, a full bodice, pretty well hidden by an old-fashioned embroidered white muslin collar, covering the shoulders, and made in front with plaited ends of the same embroidered muslin, the white hat having an upstanding crown, white and blue tulips set up against it.

Matting Rugs.

When purchasing matting get several yards extra, with which to make summer rugs. You can cut this extra piece into desired lengths and finish them neatly on the edges by pulling out the straws to the depth of several inches and tying up the threads.

These rugs protect the floor covering quite as well as heavier ones and have the advantage of being without fuzz and easily cleaned.

Motor Bonnets.

New motor bonnets are made up entirely of wide and narrow plaited frills. These are put on a thin gauze foundation which is stiffened with wire. The frills are often made of black and white ribbon and held in place around the middle of the bonnet by a two-inch band of black velvet. Green is a favorite color for summer and stone gray has proved a serviceable one.

RIBBONS MAY BE WASHED

And, as Most Mothers Will Agree, There Is Considerable Economy in the Plan.

When there are several schoolgirl daughters in the family the expenditure on hair ribbons becomes quite a considerable item. Fastidious mothers who declare that ribbons never look well when washed should try the following method:

Make a mixture of three ounces of soft soap, three tablespoonsful of honey, to a teacupful of gin and water.

The ribbon is placed on a board and scrubbed with the mixture. It is then rinsed by dipping several times in clean, cold water, and not squeezed out, but hung over a line to drip, then put between cloths and ironed by drawing the ribbons from under the iron. This prevents creasing and a stringy appearance at finish. The iron should be kept still with pressure upon it.

White ribbons will not turn yellow when washed if the water is warm instead of hot, and the soap used a fine white quality. Rinse in three waters, the last being a strong blue.

Hang in the sun until half dry, then press under clean muslin with a warm iron.

GOOD TO LEAVE HAIR ALONE

Rarely Does It Pay to Seek to Improve on What Nature Has Ordained.

After all, I would advise no one to change the color of the hair, though it be as black as Erebus. Nature gives each face the framework most suitable to it. She never needs correction on that point.

Why not dress the hair to suit the face, no matter what is the prevailing fashion?

Hair should be allowed to grow gray naturally. All dyes destroy the beauty and color of the hair. Let us gracefully accept the snowy locks of age. They harmonize with the face which has been changed by time and sorrow. Many faces are softened and beautified by white hair. It is more graceful and dignified not to attempt to repair the ravages of time.—Exchange.

Street Dresses Featured.

Dresses of blue serge can practically be considered staple merchandise, as they are usually in good demand for general wear, says the Drygoods Economist. This season they will be especially favored and are being featured with bright-colored trimmings and white. The blue and white combination has been particularly popular in Paris, and manufacturers who have several models showing the white or blue and white trimmings anticipate they will take well with the trade, judging from the orders already placed.

The Frill Jabot.

One of the latest novelties from Paris is the frill jabot of plaited muslin, in which a plaited piece of material about twelve inches long is caught together in the center with a strip of muslin and pinned at the front of the lace collar, forming a semi circle or spreading fan-shaped jabot. Another new jabot which is very similar has the lower edges graduated by being cut obliquely. This is made of marquisette with insertions and edgings of valenciennes or cluny lace between which a hint of color is introduced.

PROFIT IN SHEEP

Feeder Sheep and Lambs Are Now Cheap.

GOOD MONEY IN PROSPECT

A Self-Evident Proposition.

Good growing stock of any kind that is selling below the cost of production is always a safe investment, if the purchaser is prepared to take good care of it.

He who buys and develops such stock is almost certain to make a good profit in doing so, because production will not long continue at a loss, while consumption of staples must go on steadily.

Not many others are buying such stock, or else it would not be selling so cheaply, and it follows logically and consistently that when it has been grown and finished for market, there will then be a comparative scarcity of such finished stock and such good prices will be realized for it that a handsome profit will result from the deal.

This reasoning is self-evident, and applies with especial emphasis to the present situation in feeder sheep and lambs.

Last year's conditions are now reversed. Then nearly everybody was crazy to feed sheep and lambs, and an immense number were sold and shipped to the country at about the highest prices on record. This together with an enormous corn crop of high feeding value, a world of perfectly cured roughage and a splendid winter feeding season were factors that combined to produce a heavy supply of fat sheep and lambs for market during the early part of this year, while retailers of meats held up prices to consumers, so that consumption was limited, with the natural and logical result of low prices and feeders' losses in most instances.

In consequence of last year's unprofitable experience and present scarcity of grass and hay, most farmers and many professional feeders of sheep and lambs are now avoiding the market, and very few are being shipped to the country, while prices are the lowest since 1904. In fact, feeder sheep and lambs are selling on the market today for less than the cost of production.

These facts mean that early next year there will be a scarcity of fat sheep and lambs at market, and comparatively high prices will prevail. Those who have the nerve to go contrary to the crowd and invest in good, thin but thrifty feeder sheep and lambs at the present low price, will have no cause to regret their enterprising independence when they come to market them in finished condition.

The concensus of opinion of the best minds in the trade is that since both prices for feeding stock and prospects for fat stock are much better than they were last year, therefore the opportunities for profit are correspondingly better. In fact, the whole situation is the reverse of last year.

Now is the time to buy, because range conditions are such that most of the sheep and lambs will come to market from the range regions ready for slaughter, while fewer of the feeder classes will be marketed during the remainder of this year, and the supply will not equal the probable Fall demand, so that prices are likely to be materially higher in October and November.

He Knew Jim.

Jim had made an unsuccessful attempt to conquer the world and came back to the Tennessee town dirty, worn out and hungry.

"Uncle John," he said melodramatically, "I came home to die."

"No, dod gast you," said unsympathetic Uncle John, "you came home to eat."—Success Magazine.

Two Things at Once.

Everything on the table should be thoroughly clean and sterilized. Hewitt's Easy Task Laundry soap is a cleanser and sterilizer. It not only thoroughly cleans cut glass, crockery, table ware, but it paralyzes germs and microbes and sends them down the sink spout with the suds. Ask your grocer for a nickel cake of Hewitt's Easy Task, the White Kind.

Wifely Sarcasm.

"I hear they are wearing nothing but old clothes at Plunkville-under-the Peak. That's the place for you to go, wife."

"Yes. I can take seven trunks of old clothes. If old clothes are the racket, I can make a splurge.

WOMAN LOVELIEST AT FORTY

AS EXPLAINED BY CAROLINE OTERO TO STERLING HEILIG

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.

"THE WOMAN OF FORTY IS POSITIVELY LOVELIEST".

"I CAN DANCE THE TRAGEDIENNE; I AM FORTY-ONE"

"WOMAN is loveliest at forty!"

The speaker herself seemed never lovelier than when admitting forty-one years past. For twenty years Paris has called her The Beautiful Otero; and she is still at the height of fortune as the most famous Spanish dancer and the most bejeweled professional beauty of the gay French capital. She explained herself:

"I refer to fine women. In health and the enjoyment of rational luxuries, they need only two things to triumph in the charm of their full flowering—will to keep in condition, and mastery of that pathetic disdain which tempts them to stand back in the shadow."

She rose and paced the room with catlike grace. She snatched a man's hat from the table, cocked it over her eye, flung the end of a cloak over her shoulder, and struck an attitude.

"I have our value impressed on me ever in the Spanish dance," she said. "The grand dance of the flamenca! What a dance, monsieur, what a drama! It is the whole of woman's life in three acts: desire, seduction, tragic triumph. Never has dramatic work expressed femininity with the grace, mystery and intensity of those three scenes. Now, look you, in the south of Spain they say it takes eight years to form a flamenca. Perfection is unattainable; because this exhausting dance—twelve minutes!—show me a danseuse of the opera who will accept a variation of twelve minutes—contains three roles that are unconnected: the ingenue, the amoureuse, and the tragedienne. One ought to be sixteen years old to dance the first—and forty to dance the end of the drama, in which Rubia, magnificent at fifty, fixed the tradition."

"Madame," I asked, "is it possible that you are old enough to dance that third act?"

"I am forty-one," she laughed. "I had made two trips to the United States before I settled in Paris in 1891; and I was just of age when starting out. If I am not worn like some great flamencas, it is thanks to the life of Paris. Those who remain in Spain use themselves up, monsieur. It is a magnificent public, but it fatigues the artiste. In Paris, the good people interest themselves as much in my jewels and accept what I give them. So I have been able to live reasonably. Luxury is good for a woman of self-control. Those soft creatures who lie around and overeat, I have no patience with them! I have always had unconscious training from my work, though I owe much to the Turkish bath. . . ."

"The Hammam?" I asked.

"No, no; I have a sweat-box in my apartment fitted with fifty electric-light bulbs. I often take it four times a week when not dancing, followed with a tepid douche, turning cold. There is an apparatus to frighten young beauties, monsieur!"

Certainly a remarkable woman. On the stage, from Copenhagen to Vienna, from London to Rome, she is known, always and above all, as a beauty. She sings after a fashion. She has made successful ventures into pantomime. And now, at forty, she has made herself an actress of merit, appearing in emotional roles on the great Paris stage. Now, also, at forty, she continues to pose for the best selling beauty photographs on the European market. After her comes Lina Cavalieri, with no third in their class. Other beauties sell as well in certain successful poses; but Otero and Cavalieri never cease posing.

"Women of forty!" exclaimed Otero. "What pathetic disdain, what proud anticipation, what unhappy acquiescence, hastening out to meet fate more than half-way, cause so many to ignore their splendor and even wander into self-doubt! Loveliness is a living thing made of beauty, charm, grace—physical attractions, yes—and also the maniere de s'en servir! The way to use them! Here is the triumph of the woman of forty—when she gladly lets herself loose!"

"Why not?" I murmured, fascinated by one who certainly lets herself loose. She continued gaily:

"Why, the intuitions of the very young man are unerring in this matter. The youth of seventeen, with senses painfully fresh and keen, begins with a grande passion for the woman of forty. Instinct tells him that she is the loveliest. The thing is traditional, from Harry Esmond down to Porter Charlton. And Joseph even; how did she get that coat? We laugh. Laughter is a sudden glory—over human mischance. The youth himself refuses to arrive at charming forty beside a woman of sixty-three; yet his first untroubled judgment was to award the apple where it belongs."

"The man of forty evidently. . ." I began.

"The worst enemy of the woman of forty is the man of forty," persisted Otero. "She is the mirror in which he dreads to see the shadow of his own degeneracy—forgetting that his wear and tear of ten years past have not been hers. So the man of forty marries the girl of twenty-three. In spite of his wear and tear, she finds in the charm of the full man her profound satisfaction—without looking ahead. Why look ahead? In Paris we see daily men of forty making inexperienced young fellows appear foolish. For example, I will cite 'the best loved man of Paris,' over whose elegant person five hat-pin duels have been fought in the past three years—the latest on the Biarritz boardwalk, between a young matron and a bud of society. He will be forty-two years old next February."

Otero did not cite his name, so I will imitate her wise discretion.

"The man of forty is vain and suspicious," said Otero. "Even when in full possession of his physical and mental perfections, he must punish unoffending loveliness that walks beside him in the path of years. Oh, yes, he makes the woman of forty suffer! The fair creature would be more than human not to resent it. Unspoken malice in her laughing eye causes the fatuous fellow to grit his teeth with hate. And so two perfect creatures, at the flood of all that is best in them, too often turn their backs upon each other, leaving opportunity open to less prejudiced hearts and heads—to girls with their intuitions, and to men of fifty purged of petty vanity!"

Even so, women of forty rule Paris. Madame Otero collects portrait photographs. Scattering a package of foremost Paris beauties on the table, she called off their ages for me. I was surprised.

"Who thinks of their ages?" she said. "Some were not so beautiful when younger. Look at this one . . . and this . . . Here is a lady with an almost insignificant nose; and her eyes were never much until she had them tattooed where actresses pencil. Here is one with not a perfect feature, yet her physique and temperament are delightful. And this other, without the noble spirit breathing through her look, would she not be almost plain?"

She said true; yet I had passed all as charming. All have beauty reputation. When a woman like this gives away her sisters it is edifying. Otero showed me how one splendid creature fought for years against a double chin and conquered; how another began bony; how another has learned to dissimulate a trumpet nose.

"Stop!" I exclaimed. "You will make me think that all young women are full of defects!"

"They are," said Otero. "What is time for but to correct them? Scatter the photographs and look again. You will find them beauties now in any case! They are radiant. They have learned their power!"

It was even so. There were flashes of ecstasy, gleams of delight, eyes that spoke soul awakenings, lips parted in mystery. There were coy faces, faces that asked baffling questions, confidential faces, high, courageous faces, faces that breathed sweet, sad reverie.

"All kinds of faces, except wooden twenty-year-old faces, hein?" laughed the subtle Spaniard. "A Paris photographer has given me a partial reason why their faces are lovelier at forty. It is because they have been photographed so much."

"The effort to resemble one's best picture?" I mused.

"All that, in general; but he claims a particular influence of self-suggestion. We come to resemble our best photographs by gentle degrees, unconsciously, when they follow each other in a long, changing series."

"Living up to last week's photograph makes next week's photograph still handsomer," I said. "A hundred photographs completes the cure."

"He was a photographer, of course, and gave the entire credit to his art," replied Otero. "Perhaps the secret is encouragement. How often we have seen plain women bloom out. We women guess the secret cause—the transfigured one is happy in love. She has been encouraged."

"Oh, well then," I said, "any way to encourage oneself! . . ."

"That's it! Beauty is a habit!" exclaimed Otero. "It is the habit of those who have started encouraged! Let the woman of forty merely conceal her age, and the trick is half won. I know of nothing so eloquent of her superior loveliness."

"Let her arrive unknown in a community and confess thirty-one years. The other women will give her thirty-six on principle. And all the men, suspicious of their women's frankness in such matters, will be sure that she is a delicious creature of possibly thirty-four, grand maximum, of unusual tact, poise, suppleness, quoi? all kinds of graces of unknown but obviously superior surroundings!"

"We see it every day," I said. "Fine women have the age they look."

"No, no, the woman of forty is positively loveliest," replied the lovely specialist. "We must distinguish. Physical loveliness is one thing, academical perfection of form another. Paris painters of voluptuous subjects—nymphs rolling green lawns, bacchantes sprawling in pagan festivals, courts of Neptune sunning on golden sands—have always been reproached by their uncompromising brethren for 'doing chic' because they wilfully age their models. To attain the acme of sensual beauty, they enlarge rotundities, exaggerate curves, tend toward the corset waist—bete noire of purists and delight of gods and men—and arrive at an unearthly charm by giving the nymph of eighteen a whole set of outlines that she ought not have for fifteen years. What is this but glorifying by 'chic' the beauty of forty—whom these painters seldom obtain as model, because there is always some man to prevent it!"

"Also," I said, "they must pretend their nymphs are eighteen—for the man of forty."

"Betises!" laughed Otero. "In times past overweening plumpness may have been a danger to the lazy and self-indulgent—even at eighteen; but the modern fine woman changes little between thirty-five and forty-five. As for academical purity of line, none but uncompromising painters and sculptors want it—to give purity of sentiment; and it is lost, not at forty, but at twenty-four. The episode of Eberlein is classical. Struck by the pure beauty of a twenty-five-year-old model, the famous sculptor noted down minutely, numerously, all her exact measurements in order to reproduce such a perfect anatomy in marble. Four weeks later, in verifying the measurements before an incredulous confrere, he was astonished to discover that not a single one concorded; the academically perfect anatomy had budged all along the line—toward the voluptuous beauty prized by common mortals!"

"And the maniere de s'en servir!" I mused.

"I accuse not only the young girl's green acidity, her forming body, sleeping temperament, and crudity of mind," summed up Otero. "In northern lands, the sleeping parts may get the sand out of their eyes by twenty-five; but, even then, years pass in looking round and wondering what this world may mean. So, at thirty, the average young woman, loaded down with natural arrogance and ideas that have been imposed upon her, tranquilizes a growing disquiet by repeating to herself: 'I am a young thing!' Up to thirty-five the satisfaction of ruling may have been her chief profit. Now she wakes completely to the pulsing life of things, knows herself and—dismayed by sense of loss—plunges avidly, or else—"

"—Or else, discouraged, sinks back, murmuring: 'I am an old thing!'" I finished the sentence for her.

"That's it," laughed Otero. "If she grows panic-stricken, she enters the 'terrible quarantaine' indeed. They may be the 'terrible forties' or the 'splendid forties,' as she makes them, as her world permits her, or as she dominates it, with happy insouciance brushing aside every obstacle and flinging herself into the harmonies of an instrument finally attuned. Then she is truly terrible—terrible to younger, undecided women whom she mocks and bamboozles, borrowing their admirers from them out of pure lightheartedness; terrible to men, on whom she avenges the neglect of years to come!"

Treasure From the Sea.

Boys that live at Pine Brook, N. J., did not know that there was a buried treasure near at hand or they might have gone hunting for it.

Two fishermen found it. A strong line, much larger than you have ever used unless you have gone fishing for whale or something of that sort, was caught in the bottom of the river. The men tugged on it and found that it gave a little, and just then an automobile came along the road. The men asked the automobile man to give them a little assistance, and they tied the line to the rear axle and let the car pull on it. The line strained and slowly moved out of the water, drawing with it a wrecked canoe full of mud and stones. In the canoe was found a heavy chest, which was removed by the men and loaded into the car, and then the driver and fishermen went on to town. There they displayed the find, and the chest was recognized as the silverware box belonging to a hotel. The box had been stolen in 1904, and no trace of the robbers had been found.

Diary of a Fly-Killer.

Monday—My attention was called last night to a statement that house flies are bearers of disease and should be destroyed as soon as possible. I began my crusade against them this morning. It was a little discouraging, because there was only one fly in the house and it was quite agile. It escaped me. I broke two vases and a photograph frame.

Tuesday—I nearly killed three flies this afternoon, but the lamp got in the way. It was a $7 lamp.

Wednesday—I saw a fly on the outside of the fly screen and raised the screen so I could hit it. Seventeen flies flew in. I missed it.

Thursday—There was a sluggish looking fly on the window with closed wings. I stole toward it cautiously, but it flew up just as I let the blow fall. Then I knew it wasn't a fly. It was a wasp. My nose began to swell at once.

Friday—My nose is a sight. Drat the flies.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Don't Expect Kindness.

There are six sorts of people at whose hands you need not expect much kindness. The narrow minded think of nobody but themselves, the lazy are too indifferent, the busy have not time to think, the rich disregard appeals for kindness, the poor have neither spirit nor ability, and the good natured fool is not capable of serving you.—Home Notes.

WHAT a different speech Mr. Gorman could have made at Fairview in accepting the nomination, if he only had known.

AND Mr. Gorman promises to appoint "regulars" to office when he shall have been elected Governor. Aye, when he shall have been elected.

PERHAPS the Democratic bosses wanted an extra session of the Legislature to enable them to get one more grab at the State treasury before they all go to the penitentiary.

THAT was a pretty scheme to take the fraud investigation in Baltimore City out of the hands of the Grand Jury and turn it over to "Sonny" Mahon's Legislature.

DON'T imagine a little thing like a Grand Jury investigation will put the Mahon machine out of business, Mr. Voter. This upheaval in Baltimore City will only serve to make the gang change their tactics and be more careful. They will be harder than ever to catch if they are permitted to win this election.

THE CROOKEDNESS OF BALTIMORE POLITICS AND POLITICIANS

Almost before the politicians had caught their breath, and certainly while the masses of the people throughout the State are yet gasping from the shock of the enormity and flagrance of the election frauds being unearthed by the Grand Jury in Baltimore City—while everybody else is still dizzy and numb from the effects of the awful disclosures the Democratic bosses are already assiduously cudgeling their brains to evolve some scheme whereby they vainly hope at one fell swoop—a single masterstroke—to appear in the dual role of investigator and investigated; of surgeon and patient; of crook-grabber and crook.

These political gamesters are losing no time in attempting to save from the wreck as much as is possible of the old machine and to speedily rehabilitate it or construct a new one, as the circumstances and the exigencies may later determine to be the more expedient. First we had Mr. Gorman stand up in the attitude of a lone and solitary political purist and ballot reformer knocking at the door demanding that the Grand Jury investigate the McNulty charges of fraud in the primary, two days after the Grand Inquest had entered its probe, and even while the crooked election officials and their friends were hustling for bail in anticipation of the presentments and arrests which followed—a ridiculous proceeding to be originated by a reputable and erstwhile enterprising newspaper, now generally condemned for its reckless zeal and discredited by its gross inconsistency.

Next we saw Mr. Gorman himself, thro a dazzling and aweinspiring array of Baltimore's sagest counsellors, petitioning the court to allow him to do divers certain things, all of which, Judge Duffy informed us in his adverse ruling, had already been undertaken by the Grand Jury with the notable exception that the appointment of outsiders to assist the inquisitorial body, as requested by Mr. Gorman, (and so held by one of his eminent counsel,) would be highly improper and clearly illegal.

But the crowning effort of the master-minds of the Democratic party—palpably the de luxe of all the products of their tireless energy, their restless anxiety to "do something" that would enable them to get control of the investigation—decidedly the most picturesque and at once the most pernicious plan evoked by these as yet unabashed and unsubdued Democratic bosses, was that which contemplated the calling of an extra session of the Legislature of the state for the purpose of taking the whole matter from the Baltimore Grand Jury and making the General Assembly the absolute and final body of inquiry, investigation and determination.

Imagine the last Democratic Legislature, that body which enlarged the provisions of the iniquitous Wilson Ballot Law and extended its operation to nearly every county in the state; which left all the loop-holes in the State-wide Primary Election Law and the Corrupt Practices Act; which narrowly evaded the passage of Mr. Gorman's law giving the appointment of all the election officers, Republicans as well as Democrats, into the hands of the Democratic party; which did so much for Boss Mahon and his hordes of faithful servitors; with its record of laws making ballot juggling and all manner of corruptiou possible—imagine the Legislature with the trail it has left behind it "investigating" these frauds and crimes that smell high to Heaven, and imagine what the result of that "investigation" would have been.

Thanks to an already outraged and exasperated public the bare suggestion of such a brazen proceeding created such a storm of vehement disapproval that sent its promoters back scurrying to their holes.

The next great danger lies in letting the Democrats get control of the coming Legislature.

They will not, if the people do their full duty on the 7th of November.

Meantime, the bosses are casting about for some new plot to defeat the will of the people and the ends of justice "to save the party."

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

One of the largest pumpkins that ever came under our observation is on exhibition in the show window of Leighton & Harvey, Loch Lynn. It was grown by Mr. C. M. Calhoun, near here and weighs 83 pounds and measures five feet and one inch in circumference. It is of the King of the Mammoth variety.

A number of families have or will leave for their winter homes this week. We note the following. Mr. L. P. Carr and family, to Fairmont; Mr. John L. Ruhl and family, to Clarksburg; Mrs. Hank and daughter to Martinsburg, and Mr. and Mrs. Comerford to Fairmont.

Misses Hattie and Mary Murphy and brother Harry have moved from Mrs. Garthright's cottage in the Park to the Cuppett building in Loch Lynn formerly occupied by the postoffice.

Mrs. Bush Hardesty has removed her millinery store from her residence to the room formerly occupied by Mr. Kesner as a restaurant. Mrs. H. has secured the services of Miss Martha Carmichael and is now prepared with a full line of the latest fall and winter styles in millinery.

Revs. P. Z. Musgrave and H. E. Friend and Mr. H. N. Cuppett left yesterday morning for Charleston, W. Va., to attend the annual M. E. conference. Dr. Charles E. Shelton will also be at the conference. Rev. Musgrave will most likely be returned for another year. All claims were met in full for this charge.

Supervisor Cuppett has been at work on the streets repairing the damage caused by the heavy rains of the past six weeks.

Mrs. A. R. Sperry came to the Park Monday morning and is superintending the packing of her household goods for shipment to her new home at Harper's Ferry. Mrs. H. expects to leave here tomorrow, to the regret of a large circle of friends.

Joseph DeHaven is a guest of George F. Frazee, and is also shaking hands with his many friends here.

Loyd C. Dean came up on Monday. He will return to Homestead, Pa., with his family in a few days.

Harvest Home services were held in the Lutheran church here Sunday night. The church was tastefully decorated with fruit, flowers, grain, etc., and made a very pretty appearance. The sermon was a fine one, and listened to by all attending. The text was from the Psalms, "My cup runneth over." The choir rendered some fine selections and quite a large congregation attended, taking into consideration the very wet weather.

Earl Statler went to Johnstown, Pa., last week, and brought back his automobile that had been left there.

J. George Kolb is away plastering at Cove, Md. He spent Sunday at home, returning on Monday.

The band ordered a new bass horn, the old one being of no value any longer.

Rev. Powers preached his farewell sermon Sunday evening previous to his going to Conference. It is hoped he will remain here for another year.

There is talk of the School Board buying the W. W. Savage property that adjoins the school house lot, and, and using it for the high school scholars and the manual training department. The heater in the basement could be used for heating both buildings.

On Saturday evening, October 14th, there will be given at the Opera House here an entertainment by the band, assisted by outside talent. It will be a treat to all attending, and we don't doubt but what there will be a full house, for the people here are proud of this organization and help them when ever they can and now when they need money for a new horn we know they will help by attending. Besides this they will enjoy themselves and fully receive the worth of their money. Don't forget the date, Saturday, Oct. 14th.

C. V. Guard was away last week at Cumberland as a juror in the U. S. Court held there. He returned Saturday.

Leslie Friend has built a fine corn crib at his residence, where he can store the golden grain from his farm.

Mrs. Percy Friend and little daughter are sick. The latter, it is feared, has taken the whooping cough.

Communion services will be held on Sunday evening at the Lutheran church.

On Friday evening last when W. F. East returned from lodge, he was surprised to see his home lighted from top to bottom, and on entering was staggered to find himself surrounded by a host of friends who shouted "surprised" at him, it being his fifty-third anniversary. He had not more than become reconciled to this, when he was again surprised, by the band striking up an inspiring march. After giving a concert they also entered and joined with the others in having a good time. A sumptuous repast was served in the dining room by Mrs. East, assisted by many friends. The presents were numerous and costly and greatly appreciated by Mr. East, although overcome by this very pleasant surprise. The guests were, besides the band boys, Mr. and Mrs F. G. Fox, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Friend, Mr. and Mrs. J. Arthur Chisholm, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Frazee, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kamp Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Reckner, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Holman, Mrs. Annie Ross, Rev. Oscar C. Dean, Miss Lucy Frankhouser, Lee Frankhouser, Walter Ross and Donald Chisholm.

KITZMILLER.

De frost is on de "punkin" and the "punkin's" on de vine.

Fruit and garden truck being plentiful, the average housekeeper is, and has been for sometime, busily engaged in canning, preserving, jelling and making the toothsome "apple sass" for winter consumption.

Baseball has about run its course for the season; but basket ball, foot ball, billiard ball, the fancy ball are to come yet, to say nothing of the snow ball. Oh! Balls.

The West Virginia Conference of the M. E. Church convened at Charleston on Wednesday, the 4th inst., and was attended by the pastor in charge of the church here, of course, who received the usual courtesy of an invitation to return for another year.

The Maryland Opera House is now entertaining good audiences nightly. Manager Dasher has had large experience in the moving picture business, and he is on a circuit that furnishes the most excellent subjects, three reels of which are shown nightly. Mr. Bert Pue furnishes the electric juice from his store "just across the way."

The general store stock of Mr. Gims Fronz, an Italian merchant on the corner of Main and Bridge streets, was sold out by Constable George Pool last Thursday at the instance of wholesale creditors.

The fall season and winter season of "tripping the light fantastic" will soon open under the auspices of "The Young Men's Social Club."

Your correspondent has been requested to give notice that there will be no more game cock contests in Kitzmiller this season. No reason has been assigned, but the guessers are busy.

The fall session of the Blaine Public School was opened auspiciously on Monday by Professor A. L. Lee, who is well and favorably known teacher.

It is understood that our young friend, Max Bennett, late manager of the Rosenbloom store, will be "At Home" in Pittsburg on the 10th instant. By the way, Max, "chemistry" is as good as any other name would be for it, after all.

Kitzmiller merchants are receiviug their fall goods, and Mr. George Coffman thinks the outlook for a brisk business is sufficient to warrant a larger and more varied stock than usual.

Miss Esmeralda Long, of Wolf's Run, over in Mineral county W. Va., walked four miles last Saturday afternoon to attend a country dance. She danced seven sets, walked back home, milked nine cows, prepared supper for twelve mill hands, washed the dishes, slopped the pigs, swept the dining room, scrubbed the kitchen, dressed nine chickens to fry for breakfast, darned four pairs of stockings, read six chapters in the Book of Jeremiah, wound the clock, put the cat out, said her prayers, and got to bed before ten o'clock.

TOWN HAS A FIRE.

Shortly after two o'clock Wednesday morning, the town turned out en masse to witness a fire on Second street—the general store of Mr. J. F. Bishop. A part of the building was occepied by Messrs. Harvey and Moon, who conducted a bowling alley. As to the origin of the fire, the prevailing opinion holds that the frolicksome little cigarette had something to do with it. The bowling alley ran until 12 o'clock, but the store room was closed about 9.30. Insurance on the burned building, which was owned by John Bishop, Jr., $1500; insurance on stock, $2500. There will be no delay about rebuilding.

O. H. S. Notes.

We now have an enrollment of eighty-four pupils: Five Seniors, fourteen Juniors, eighteen Sophomores, thirty-eight Freshmen, and twelve Commercial students. There are still more coming from the rural districts.

Our school has been thoroughly organized. We are now doing the work of a first-c ass high school of the State of Maryland. Heretofore we have not been doing all the work required in the different grades. This made it rather difficult for the principal to classify us. Some of us who had been classed as Sophomores, Juniors and Seniors are doing work in the different grades which we had not had. The Freshmen of this year will do the work actually in the Freshmen grade.

The teachers and students are striving strenuously to establish a high standard of work and create a genuine educational spirit. A fraternal spirit prevails among all of us. We realize that we must all-together-sticking or else we'll hang side-by-each. We will appreciate the sympathetic cooperation of the citizens of Oakland in our effort to do real high school work. We are sure a word to the wise is sufficient.

Seniors are studying German, Caesar, advanced algebra, plane geometry, advanced English, botany and physical geography, domestic science, manual training, civics and bookkeeping. Juniors are studying German, Caesar, plane geometry, physics, English, civics, bookkeeping, domestic science and manual training. Sophomore are studying plane geometry and commercial arithmetic, algebra, zoology and commercial geography, English, history, domestic science, manual training and drawing. Freshmen are studying botany and physical geography, algebra, ancient history, Latin, rhetoric, domestic science, manual training and drawing. The commercial students are studying bookkeeping, commercial law, physics, English, penmanship, spelling, stenography, typewriting, domestic science, manual training and drawing.

The following constitute our corps of teachers: C. Edward Bender, principal; May Arnold, first assistant; Emma Hamill, second assistant; Elizabeth Leary, third assistant; Daisy Hanna, commercial; H. A. Loraditch, manual training.

The students of the different departments would be very glad to have their parents visit the high school and observe the work that is being done.

Some of the rooms are very much crowded, especially the Freshmen room. A lavatory is being installed and general improvements are being made, for which we all are very glad and thankful.

The students and teachers are making the rooms more cheerful by placing flower and foliage plants in the windows. These are to be used in a general way in the study of botany.

We have some brilliant students, with our principal included, for instance:

Professor Bender was a new class, The Freshmores. The Junior class can equal the aviators in coining new words. The latest term used in Caesar being N². E. P. M. P.

A Dastardly Deed.

One of the most dastardly and cowardly acts that has come under the observation of persons traveling along the public roads of Garrett county in recent years, was that perpetrated last Thursday evening by some unknown scoundrel at a point near the Dodge school house when an empty whisky bottle was thrown with terrific violence at Mr. Scott T. Jones' automobile, which was being driven at the time by his son, Mr. Harland L. Jones. Others in the machine beside the Messrs. Jones were Mr. G. A. Fraley and Mr. Joseph E. Harned. The missile struck the side of the car a few inches below the top of the door and was evidently hurled of the driver of the machine. Had it struck him there is every possibility that control of the car would have been lost and that painful or probably fatal injuries would have been sustained by all its occupants.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Baby Irene, a little child six years old, is leading member of the Stinsons Uncle Tom's Cabin Company, for not only is she the brightest miss ever seen in the character of Eva but she is the youngest artist to speak intelligently the lines of her part. She is also a sweet singer and her specialties and character songs wins the hearts nightly of the patrons of this great play. Few, if any companies can boast of a child fitted by nature to so vividly portray the lovable little personage, the sweetest child character ever introduced in a drama of the present or past era. There is not a man, woman or child who does not learn to love this talented baby artist and she is the pet of the ladies nightly.—Empire, Oct 10.

The Republican for Job Printing.

REV. WILLIAMSON AT MEADVILLE

Former Oakland Pastor Greeted By Large Congregation at that City.

The Tribune-Republican, of Meadville, Pa., published last Monday, contained the following relative to Rev. G. R. Williamson and the reception accorded him by the members of the M. E. church of that city, to which appointment he was recently transferred from Oakland:

Rev. G. R. Williamson, of Oakland, Md., the new pastor of the First M. E. Church occupied the pulpit for the first time Sunday morning, and preached to a very large congregation Mr. Williamson was introduced to the congregation by Bishop James M. Thoburn, who spoke briefly.

Before beginning his sermon the new minister said he was glad to be greeted by such a large audience and spoke of the difficulty experienced by a clergyman when he speaks for the first time to a new congregation. He said: "No man can preach at his best when he faces a congregation the first time, and I ask all to reserve judgement until I have had time to be heard." The text selected was from the second chapter of First Corinthians: "For I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." A powerful sermon was preached, and the address was thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience in attendance.

The new paster of the Stone church is a man in the prime of life and comes to Meadville with a fine reputation as a pulpit orator, as well as of a working pastor. He departed Sunday evening for his former charge and will attend the meetings of the West Virginia Conference, from which he comes to the Erie Conference, this week. He expects to bring his family to this City about October 12 and to begin his active ministry the following Sunday, October 15.

Mr. John A. Grant arrived in Oakland from Charlestown, W. Va., last Saturday night, and will remain here some time, having accepted a temporary position in the Offutt store during the absence of Mr. D. E. Offutt, Jr., who is away on a vacation. Mr. Grant's many friends in Oakland would like to see him locate here again and become a permanent resident.

A large number of horses, carriages, automobiles and other things will be sold by Mr. Post, who has been engaged as the auctioneer. Those who desire to list horses or other animals to be sold at this sale should get in touch immediately either with Mr. Brown or Mr. Kelly. The sale will be conducted as others have been under Mr. Kelly's management, all of them having been extremely satisfactory to both buyer and seller. Communicate with either gentlemen at once if you have anything to be sold at this auction.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Messrs. Paul Naylor, Wellington Crane and Ralph Weber returned to Oakland Sunday night from Parkersburg, W. Va., in which city they arrived from Pittsburg Sunday. The trip from Oakland to Pittsburg was made by various modes, some hazardous but all interesting. The start from here was made Monday of last week when the party went overland to Friendsville, taking with them a twenty foot canoe. The boat was placed in the raging waters of the Youghiogheny at Friendsville, and from that point the trip was made to Pittsburgh by the water route, when the party was not engaged in toting the canoe over rocky places in the river and making portages. They succeeded in reaching Pittsburgh, however, without serious mishap, other than being capsized into the water once or twice, and from that point their canoe and camp equipage was shipped to Oakland by rail. The party enjoyed every moment of the outing, camping when night overtook them along the bank of the river.

A Train Wedding.

Mr. Herbert W. Stevens and Miss Agnes P. Spencer of Blaine, were married Monday afternoon on board the Western Maryland train between Harrison and Schell, Rev. R. C. Weidler, of Blaine, performing the ceremony. This unusual procedure was made necessary by Mr. Weidler's departure from Blaine on the same train which brought Mr. Stevens from Keyser with the license.

New Job For Laughlin?

May Be Adjudicated Bankrupt.

By notice published published in this paper today, emanating from the United States District Court at Cumberland, certain creditors of Frank F. Goss have petitioned the court to adjudicate him an involuntary bankrupt, alleging in the petition to the court that that Goss has absconded from the State leaving a large number of debts unpaid and that his whereabouts are unknown to them. The matter will be determined by Judge Rose October 28th.

SYNOPSIS.

David Amber, starting for a duck-shooting visit with his friend, Quain, comes upon a young lady equestrian who has been dismounted by her horse becoming frightened at the sudden appearance in the road of a burly Hindu. He declares he is Behari Lal Chatterji, "The appointed mouthpiece of the Bell," addresses Amber as a man of high rank and pressing a mysterious little bronze box, "The Token," into his hand, disappears in the wood. The girl calls Amber by name. He in turn addresses her as Miss Sophie Farrell, daughter of Col. Farrell of the British diplomatic service in India and visiting the Quains. Several nights later the Quain home is burglarized and the bronze box stolen. Amber and Quain go hunting on an island and become lost and Amber is left marooned. He wanders about, finally reaches a cabin and recognizes as its occupant an old friend named Rutton, whom he last met in England, and who appears to be in hiding. When Miss Farrell is mentioned Rutton is strangely agitated. Chatterji appears and summons Rutton to a meeting of a mysterious body. Rutton seizes a revolver and dashes after Chatterji. He returns wildly excited, says he has killed the Hindu, takes poison, and when dying asks Amber to go to India on a mysterious errand. Amber decides to leave at once for India. On the way he sends a letter to Mr. Labertouche, a scientific friend in Calcutta, by a quicker route. Upon arriving he finds a note awaiting him. It directs Amber to meet his friend at a certain place. The latter tells him he knows his mission is to get Miss Farrell out of the country. Amber attempts to dispose of the Token to a money-lender, is mistaken for Rutton and barely escapes being mobbed. A message from Labertouche causes him to start for Darjeeling; on the way he meets Miss Farrell, and at their journey's end asks her to become his wife. A Hindu conducts Amber to a secret place, and in the presence of a beautiful woman who mistakes him for Rutton. Later Amber is drugged.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Way to Kathiapur.

Gall and wormwood in his mouth, more bitter than remorse, Amber became conscious. Or perhaps it were more truly to say that he struggled out of unconsciousness, dragging his ego back by main will-power from the deep oblivion of drugged slumber. One by one his faculties fought their way past the barrier, until he was fully sentient, save that his memory drowsed. His head was hot and heavy, his eyes burned in their sockets like balls of live charcoal, a dulled buzzing sounded in his ears, his very heart felt sore and numb; he was as one who wakes from evil dreams to the blackness of foreknown despair.

Suddenly he raised himself upon the charpoy and called huskily for the khansamah. Promptly the squat white figure that he remembered appeared in the doorway. "Bring lights," Amber ordered, peremptorily. "Bring lights quickly—and water." And when the man had returned with a lamp, which he put on the table, Amber seized the red earthenware water-jug and drained it greedily. Returning it, empty, to the brown hands, he motioned to the man to wait, while he consulted his watch. It had run down. He thrust it back into his pocket and inquired: "What's o'clock?"

"Eight in the evening, sahib."

Amber gasped and stared. "Eight of the . . . Let me think. Go and bring me food and a brandy-peg—or, hold on! Bring a bottle of soda water and a glass only."

The khansamah withdrew. Amber fell back with his shoulders to the wall and stared unwinking at the lamp. He distinctly remembered undressing before going to bed; he now found himself fully clothed. He felt of his pocket, and found the emerald ring there, instead of in its chamois case. Then it had not been a nightmare!

He had a bottle of brandy which had never been uncorked, in his traveling kit. Rising, he found it and inspected the cork narrowly to make sure it had not been tampered with; then he drew it.

The khansamah returned with the glass and an unopened bottle of Schweppe's, and prepared the drink under eyes that watched him narrowly. While Amber drank he laid a place for him at the table. When he left the room a second time the Virginian produced his automatic pistol and satisfied himself that it remained loaded and in good working order.

In the course of a few minutes the native reappeared with a tray of food and pot of coffee. These arranged, he stood by the chair, ready to serve the guest. Then he found himself looking into the muzzle of Amber's weapon, and became apparently rigid with terror.

"Sahib—!"

"Make no outcry, dog, and tell me no lies, if you value your contemptible life. Why did you drug me—at whose instance?"

"Sahib! . . ."

"Answer me quickly, son of vipers!"

"By Dhola Baksh, hazoor, I am innocent! Another has done these things—he who served you last night, belike, and whose place I have taken."

Now the oaths of India are many and various, so that a new specimen need not be held wonderful. But Amber sat bolt upright, his eyes widening and his jaw dropping. "Dhola——!" he said, and brought his teeth together with an audible click, staring at the khansamah as if he were a recrudescence of prehistoric mammal. He caught a motion of the head and a wave of the hand toward the window, warning him that there might be an eavesdropper lurking without, and rose admirably to the emergency.

"That is a lie, misbegotten son of a one-eyed woman of shame! By the gateway of Kathiapur, that is a lie! Speak, brother of jackals and father of swine, lest my temper overcome me and I make carrion of you!"

"My lord, hear me!" protested the man in an extremity of fright. "These be the words of truth. If otherwise, let my head be forfeit. . . . Early in the morning you returned from the lake, heavy with sleep, and so soundly have you slept since that hour that no effort of mine could rouse you, though many came to the door, making inquiry. I am Ram Lal, a true man, and no trafficker in drugs and potions."

"Even so!" said Amber, ironic. "But if, on taking thought, I find you've lied to me. . . . Go now and hold yourself fortunate in this, that I am not a man of hasty judgment."

"Hazoor!" Like a shadow harried by a wind of night, the khansamah scurried from the room. But on the threshold he paused long enough to lay a significant finger upon his lips and nod toward the table.

From the khansamah's quarters came an occasional clash of crockery and pattering of naked feet. Outside, in the compound, the sepoys were chattering volubly; their words were indistinguishable, but from their constantly increasing animation Amber inferred that they were keenly relishing the topic of discussion. He became sure of this when, at length, his curiosity aroused, he went to the window and peered out between the wooden slats of the blind. The little company was squatting in a circle round the fire, and a bottle was passing from hand to hand.

He turned back, puzzled, to find the khansamah calmly seated at the table and enjoying one of Amber's choicest cigarettes.

"Thank God," he said, with profound emotion, "for a civilized smoke!"

"Labertouche!" cried Amber.

The pseudo-khansamah rose, bowed formally, and shook hands with considerable cordiality. "It's good to see you whole and sound," he said. "I had to wait until Ram Nath's work began to show results. He's out there, you know, keeping the bottle moving. I don't believe those damned sepoys will bother us much, now, but we've got no time at all to spare. Now tell me what you have to tell, omitting nothing of the slightest consequence."

Amber dropped into a chair, and the Englishman sat near to him. "I say, thank God for you, Labertouche! You don't know how I've needed you."

"I can fancy. I've had a ripping time of it myself. Sorry I couldn't communicate with you safely before you left Calcutta. But we've not a minute to waste. Get into your yarn, please; explanations later, if we can afford 'em."

Inhaling with deep enjoyment, he narrowed his dark eyes, listening intently to Amber's concise narrative of his experiences since their parting before the stall of Dhola Baksh in the Machua bazar. Not once was he interrupted by word or sign from Labertouche; and even when the tale was told the latter said nothing, but dropped his gaze abstractedly to the smoldering stump of his cigarette.

"And you?" demanded the Virginian. "Have pity, Labertouche! Can't you see I'm being eaten alive by curiosity?"

Labertouche eyed him blankly for an instant. "Oh!" he said, with an effort freeing his mind from an intense concentration of thought. "I? What's there to tell? I've been at work. That's all. . . . I was jostled off to one side when the row started in the bazar, and so lost you. There was then nothing to do but strike back to the hotel and wait for a clew. You can figure my relief when you dropped out of that ticca-ghari! I gave you the word to go on to Darjeeling, intending to join you en route. But you know why that jaunt never came off. I found out my mistake before morning, wired you, and left Calcutta before you, by the same train that conveyed the maharana of Khandawar. Fortunately enough we had Ram Nath already on the ground, working up another case—I'll tell you about it some time. He's one of our best men—a native, but loyal to the core, and wrapped up in his work. He'd contrived to get a billet as tonga-wallah to the Kuttapur bunia who has the dak-service contract. I myself had arranged to have the telegraph babu here transferred, and myself appointed in his place. So I was able to attach myself to the 'tail' of the maharana without exciting comment. Miss Farrell came by the same train, but Salig Singh was in too great a hurry to get home to pay any attention to her, and I, knowing you'd be along, arranged that tonga accident with Ram Nath. He bribed his brother tonga-wallah to bring it about."

"Thank you," said Amber, from his heart.

Labertouche impatiently waved the interruption aside. "I looked for you at the telegraph office this morning, but of course when you didn't appear I knew something was up. So I concocted a message to you for an excuse, came down, engaged the khansamah in conversation (I think he had some idea I was an agent of the other side) and . . . he is an old man, not very strong. Once indoors, I had little trouble with him. He's now enjoying perfect peace, with a gag to insure it, beneath his own charpoy. Ram Nath happened along opportunely and created a diversion with his gin bottle. That seems to be all, and I'm afraid we mayn't talk much longer. I must be going—and so must you."

He glanced anxiously at his watch—a cheap and showy thing, such as natives delight in. Both men rose.

"You return to the telegraph station, I presume?" said Amber.

"Not at all. It wouldn't be worth my while."

"How's that?"

"The wires haven't been working since ten this morning," said Labertouche, quietly.

Amber steadied himself with the back of his chair. "You mean they've been cut?"

"Something of that sort."

"And that means—"

"That this infernal conspiracy is scheduled to come to a head tonight—as you must have inferred, my dear fellow; this is the last night of your probation. The cutting off of Khandawar from all British India is a bold move and shows Salig Singh's confidence. It means simply: 'Governmental interference not desired. Hands off.' He knows well that we've spies here, that enough has leaked out, unavoidably, to bring an army corps down on his back within twenty-four hours, if he permitted even the most innocent-seeming message to get out of the city."

Amber whistled with dismay. "And you—"

"I'm going to find out for myself what's towards Kathiapur."

"You're going there—alone?"

"Not exactly; I shall have company. A gentleman of the Mohammedan persuasion is going to change places with me for the night. No; he doesn't know it yet, but I have reason to believe that he got an R. S. V. P. for the festive occasion and intends to put in a midnight appearance. So I purpose saving him the trouble. It's only a two-hour ride."

"But the risk!"

Labertouche chuckled grimly. "It's the day's work, my boy. I'm not sure I shan't enjoy it. Besides, I mustn't hang back where my subordinates have not feared to go. We've had a man in Kathiapur since day before yesterday."

"And I? What am I to do?"

"Your place is at Miss Farrell's side. No; you'd be only a hindrance to me. Get that out of your thoughts. Three years ago I found time to make a pretty thorough exploration of Kathiapur, and, being blessed with an excellent memory, I shall be quite at home."

Amber made a gesture of surrender. "Of course you're right," he said. "You're always right, confound you!"

"Exactly," agreed Labertouche, smiling. "I'm only here to help you escape to the residency. Raikes and Colonel Farrell have already been advised to make preparations for a siege or for instant flight, if I give the word. They need you far more than I shall. It would be simple madness for you to venture to Kathiapur tonight. The case is clear enough for you to see the folly of doing anything of the sort."

"It may be clear to your . . ."

"See here," said Labertouche, with pardonable impatience; "I'm presuming that you know enough of Indian history to be aware that the Rutton dynasty in Khandawar is the proudest and noblest in India; it has descended in right line from the sun. There's not a living Hindu but will acknowledge its supremacy, be he however ambitious. That makes it plain, or ought to, why Har Dyal Rutton, the last male of his line, was—and is—considered the natural, the inevitable, leader of the second mutiny. It devolved upon Salig Singh to produce him; Salig Singh promised and—is on the point of failure. I can't say, precisely, what penalty he'll be called upon to pay, but it's safe to assume that it'll be something everlastingly unpleasant. So he's desperate. I can't believe he has deceived himself into taking you for Rutton, but whether or no, he intends by hook or crook to get you through this Gateway affair tonight. He's got to. Now you are—or Rutton is—known to be disloyal to the scheme. Inevitably, then the man who passes through the Gateway in his name is to be quietly eliminated before he can betray anything—in other words, as soon as he has been put through the 'ordeal,' as they call it, for the sake of appearances and the moral effect upon the Hindu race at large. Now I think you understand."

"I think I do, thanks," Amber returned dryly. "You're quite right, as I said before. So I'm off to the residency. But how to get through that guard out there?"

He received no response. In as little time as it took him to step backwards from Amber Labertouche had resumed his temporarily discarded masquerade. Instantaneously it was the khansamah who confronted the Virginian—the native with head and shoulders submissively bended, as one who awaits an order.

Amber, surprised, stared, started to speak, received a sign, and was silent, the excuse for Labertouche's sudden change of attitude being sufficiently apparent in an uproar which had been raised without the least warning in the compound. The advent of a running horse seemed to have been responsible for it, for the clatter of hoofs as the animal was checked abruptly in mid-stride was followed by a clamour of drunken cries, shrieks of alarm, and protests on the part of the sepoys disturbed in the midst of their carouse. Over all this there rang the voice of an Englishman swearing good, round, honest British oaths.

"Stand aside, you hounds!"

Labertouche made no answer, but edged toward the khansamah's quarters.

The din subsided as Farrell gained the veranda. His feet rang heavily on the boards, and a second later he thrust the door violently open and slammed breathlessly into the room, booted, spurred, his keen old face livid, a riding whip dangling from one wrist, a revolver in the other hand.

He wheeled on the threshold and lifted his weapon, then, with a gasp of amazement, dropped it. "By heaven, sir!" he cried, "that's odd! Those damned sepoys tried to prevent my seeing you and now they've cleared out, every mother's son of them!"

Amber stepped to his side; to his own bewilderment, the compound was deserted; there was not a sepoy in sight.

"So much the better," he said, quickly, the first to recover. "What's wrong, sir?"

"Wrong!" Farrell stumbled over to the table and into a chair, panting. "Everything's wrong! What's gone wrong with you, that we haven't been able to find you all day?"

"I've been lying there," Amber told him, nodding to the charpoy, "drugged. What's happened? Is Miss Farrell—"

"Sophia!" The Political lifted his hand to his eyes and let it fall, with an effect of confusion. "In the name of charity tell me you know where she is!"

"You don't mean—"

"She's gone, Amber—gone. She's disappeared, vanished, been spirited away! Don't you understand me? She's been kidnaped!"

In dumb torment, Amber heard a swift, sharp hiss of breath as pregnant with meaning as a spoken word, and turned to meet Labertouche's eyes, and to see that the same thought was in both their minds. Salig Singh had found the way to lure Amber to Kathiapur.

No spoken word was needed; their understanding was implicit on the instant. Indeed, the secret agent dared not speak, lest he be overheard by an eavesdropper and so be the cause of his own betrayal. With a flutter of white garments he slipped noiselessly from the room, and Amber knew instinctively that if they were to meet again that night it would be upon the farther side of the Gateway of Swords. For himself, his path of duty lay clear to the Virginian's vision; like Labertouche's, it was the road to Kathiapur. He had no more doubt that Sophia had been conveyed thither than he had of Farrell's presence before him.

He thought swiftly of Dulla Dad's parting admonition: "You shall find but one way to Kathiapur."

"Well, sir? Well?" Exasperated by his silence the Political sprang to his feet and brought the riding-crop against his leg with a smack like a gun-shot. "Have you nothing to say? Don't you realize what it means when a white woman disappears in this land of devils? Good God! you stand there, doing nothing, saying nothing, like a man with a heart of stone!"

"Speak French," Amber interposed quietly. He continued in that tongue, his tone so steady and imperative that it brought the half-frantic Englishman to his senses. "Speak French. You must know that we're spied upon every instant; every word we speak is overheard, probably. Tell me what happened—how it happened—and keep cool!"

"You're right; I beg your pardon." Farrell collected himself. "There's little enough to go on. . . . You disappointed us this morning. During the day we got word from a secret but trustworthy source to look out for trouble from the native side. Nevertheless, Raikes and I were obliged, by reason of our position, representing Government, to attend the banquet in honor of the coronation tomorrow. We called in young Clarkson—the missionary, you know—to stay in the house during our absence. When we returned the Residency was deserted—only we found Clarkson bound, gagged, and nearly dead of suffocation in a closet. He could tell us nothing—had been set upon from behind. Not a servant remained. . . . But, by the way, your man Doggott came in by the evening dak-tonga."

"Where's Raikes?"

"Gone to the palace to threaten Salig Singh with an army corps."

"You know the telegraph wires are cut?"

"Yes, but how—"

"Never mind how I know—the story's too long. The thing to do is to get troops here without a day's delay."

"But how?"

"Take Raikes, Clarkson, and Doggott and ride like hell to Badshah Junction. Telegraph from there. The four of you ought to be able to fight your way through."

"But, man, my daughter!"

"I know where to find her—or think I do. No matter which, I'll find her and bring her back to you safely, or die trying. You spoke just now of a secret but trustworthy source of information: I work with it this night. I can't mention names—you know why; but that source was in this room ten minutes ago. He's gone after your daughter now. I follow. No—I go alone. It's the only way. I know how you feel about it, but believe me, the thing for you to do is to find some way to summon British troops. Now the quicker you go, the quicker I'm off. I can't—daren't move while you're here."

Farrell eyed him strangely. "I'll go," he said after a pause. "But . . . why can't I—"

"There are just two white men living, Colonel Farrell, who can go where I am going to look for your daughter tonight. I'm one of them. The other is—you know who."

"One of us is mad," said Farrell with conviction. "I think you are."

"Or else I know what I'm talking about. In either event you only hinder me now. Please go."

The Virginian followed him to the doorway. Farrell's horse, a docile, well-trained animal, had come to the edge of the veranda to wait for his master. Otherwise the compound was as empty as the night was quiet. Mounting, the Political waved a silent farewell and spurred off toward the city. Amber passed back through the bungalow to the bund.

He lifted his voice and called: "Ohe, Dulla Dad!"

There came a soft shuffle of feet on the stones behind him, and the stunted, white-clad figure of Dulla Dad stood at his side, making respectful obeisance. "Hazoor!"

"You damned spying scoundrel!" Amber cried, enraged. "You've been waiting there by the window, listening!"

Pearls in Cocoanuts.

Few people know that the cocoanuts of the Malay peninsula sometimes produce pearls that are highly prized by the natives. The stones are not unlike the pearls of the mullusks and are similar in composition to the oyster pearls, having calcium carbonate and a little organic matter. These concretions form just beneath the stem, and a pure white pearl brings a high price, as it is supposed by the natives to possess some kind of a charm. Cases have been known where the cocoanut pearl has been sold as a mollusk product, but such instances are rare.

In Dead Earnest.

The funeral procession was moving along the village street when Uncle Abe Burse stepped out of a store. He hadn't heard the news. "Sho," said Uncle Abe Burse, "who they buryin' today?" "Poor old Tite Harrison," said the storekeeper. "Sho," said Uncle Abe Burse, "Tite Harrison, hey? Is Tite dead?" "You don't think we're rehearsin' with him, do you?" snapped the storekeeper.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Pettit's Eye Salve It's Use Will Quickly End Weak, Sore Eyes

One Cure for Sarcasm.

Bunsen always was sarcastic.

One evening last week when he got home his wife had a new hat to show him. It was some hat. Anybody could have seen that it was the final phrase in female headgear.

But Bunsen started to make remarks. He said it looked as if it had been trimmed by a cross-eyed milliner on an empty stomach. And he made a lot of other disparaging remarks.

Mrs. Bunsen was almost in tears. Bunsen had to go into the other room to have a quiet laugh at her expense.

The next day he had forgotten all about the hat.

The day after that he was reminded of it. Mrs. Bunsen handed him a bill for retrimming that hat—$18.34 it came to.

Bunsen paid it without a murmur, and said the revised edition of the hat was just exactly right. He is not criticizing hats any more.

A Trifle Withered.

In his native tongue no one could have made more graceful speeches than Monsieur Blanc, but when he essayed to compliment in English he was not quite so successful.

"Have I changed in the five years since we met in Paris?" asked the elderly woman who desired above all things to be thought younger, much younger than she was.

"Madame," said the courtier, his hand to his heart, "you look like a rose of 20 years!"—Youth's Companion.

A HIT

What She Gained by Trying Again.

A failure at first makes us esteem final success.

A family in Minnesota that now enjoys Postum would never have known how good it is if the mother had been discouraged by the failure of her first attempt to prepare it. Her son tells the story:

"We had never used Postum till last spring when father brought home a package one evening just to try it. We had heard from our neighbors, and in fact every one who used it, how well they liked it.

"Well, the next morning Mother brewed it about five minutes, just as she had been in the habit of doing with coffee without paying special attention to the directions printed on the package. It looked weak and didn't have a very promising color, but nevertheless father raised his cup with an air of exceptancy. It certainly did give him a great surprise, but I'm afraid it wasn't a very pleasant one, for he put down his cup with a look of disgust.

Mother wasn't discouraged though, and next morning gave it another trial, letting it stand on the stove till boiling began and then letting it boil for fifteen or twenty minutes, and this time we were all so pleased with it that we have used it ever since.

"Father was a confirmed dyspeptic and a cup of coffee was to him like poison. So he never drinks it any more, but drinks Postum regularly. He isn't troubled with dyspepsia now and is actually growing fat, and I'm sure Postum is the cause of it. All the children are allowed to drink it and they are perfect pictures of health." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Things Queer and Curious

Portrait of Persian Lady

Persia has been attracting a great deal of attention lately, and so a portrait of a society beauty of that land will be found of interest. The beauty of the lady, however, must be taken for granted, for Persian women of rank are always very closely veiled when out walking or driving.

ABANDON OLD LIGHTHOUSE

The world famous St. Agnes lighthouse, the oldest lighthouse in existence, the guardian of the Scillies, was finally shut down recently and the light extinguished, after continuous service since 1680, when the present tower was erected by Capt. Hugh Till and Capt. Symon Bayly. Previous to this time an iron cresset burning coal marked the approach to the dangerous channels amid the rocks surrounding the Scillies, so the presence of a lighthouse on this spot extends back even to earlier times than 1680. The Trinity board decided, however, that the old St. Agnes light was too extravagant to work, in spite of the fact that its continuous and faithful service had probably saved many hundreds of ships from getting too near to the dreaded rocks which abound around the island. They have, therefore, erected a modern iron automatic lighthouse on the neighboring island of St. Mary's.

FAMOUS ORANGE TREE

In a garden at Riverdale, Cal., is treasured perhaps the most valuable and noteworthy of trees in the United States. It is the orange tree brought from Brazil in 1874 by the department of agriculture, and from which, by budding, all the navel orange trees in California are descended. To this tree are traced orange groves now valued at millions of dollars and it was the beginning of a great industry giving work to hundreds of thousands of men. Towns and even cities have sprung up from the yield of this tree whose fruit now goes to practically all the great markets of the world.

When the tree was transplanted to its present site, President Roosevelt attended the ceremony. Its first fruit borne thereafter was, in consequence, sent to him, and his letter, acknowledging receipt, was carefully preserved close by, together with a photograph of the replanting of the tree.

HUGE GERMAN HOUSE KEYS

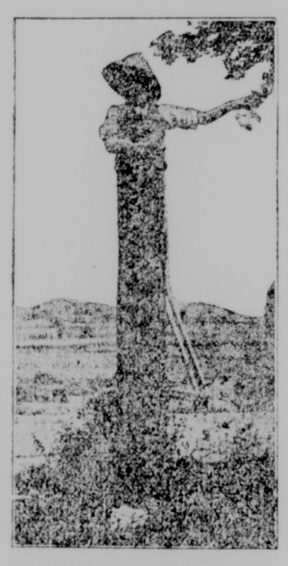
The present German house key could be used as a weapon of attack and defense besides serving its original purpose. It weighs on an average about one-eighth of a pound, and as each person entitled to carry a house and corridor key has nearly a quarter of a pound of soft iron in his pocket it is conservatively estimated that the amount of iron in circulation in Germany in the pockets of the men and in the handbags of the women amounts to 2,695 tons, besides an additional 2,500 tons of keys to interior of German homes.

"GREEN WATER" OF THE NILE

The "green water" of the Nile is quite a different thing from the green water of the ocean. About April 15, the Nile begins its annual rise and a month later the effect is felt at Khartoum. A very curious phenomenon accompanies this increase in the appearance of "green water."

For a long time it was believed that the color came from the swamps of the upper Nile lying isolated and stagnant under the tropical sun and polluting the waters with decaying vegetable matter. With the spring rise this fetid water was supposed to be swept into the streams to make its appearance in Egypt.

Within recent times, however, this theory has been abandoned. Now we are advised the green water is caused by the presence of innumerable numbers of microscopic algae, offensive to the taste and smell. They originate away up in the tributaries and are carried to the Nile, where under the hot sun and in the clear water they increase with amazing rapidity, forming columns from 250 to 500 miles in length.



The weeds continue to grow, die and decay until the turbid flood waters put them to an end, for they cannot exist except in clear water.

Offensive as in some respects the green water is, it is hailed with delight by the Egyptians, since its appearance is a sign of the real flood time and the close of the water famine.

WOODEN LEG AS A BEEHIVE

The only living human beehive, who carries a swarm of trained bees with him everywhere he goes, was on exhibition at the county jail at Cleveland, O., the other day. Mark O. Dennison is the man who owns the bees. The hive is in his wooden leg. Two deputy sheriffs found him sleeping in a park. When they attempted to arrest him he turned the whole swarm of bees upon them, although they are tame and harmless when their owner tells them to be. They are trained to use their stingers only when Dennison considers his peace is threatened. The deputies, after considerable coaxing, got Mark to call off the bees, and one by one they returned to the hive through small holes which act as entrances to the interior of the false leg.

ROOSTER WHIPS A HAWK

Paul E. Gerard of Bowling Green, Ky., went to his farm recently and while walking over his place he saw a chicken hawk fly to the ground and catch a chicken. One of Mr. Gerard's fine game roosters saw its companion in trouble and ran to its assistance, fighting the hawk, which later let go the chicken and saved its life.

LONGEST TRAIN EVER SEEN

A cantaloup train, believed to be the longest the world has ever seen, passed through Tuscon, Ariz., recently from the imperial valley. The train consisted of 130 cars, was one and one-half miles in length, and contained more than 1,000,000 cantaloups.

The Wooly Mule of Poitou

The mules of Poitou have been famous for a long time, and the mule-breeding industry of that district of France has been revived lately by an agricultural society which has instituted shows and a stud book. The Poitou mule is of peculiar appearance owing to his wooly coat.

SECOND BIBLE A NECESSITY

Experienced Minister Knew What He Was Talking About When He Advised Junior.

"Now that you are married," said the experienced minister to the young curate, "you will have to stop using the church Bible for home study. Oh, yes, I know how it is. You get attached to a certain Bible, and can study better with that right under your nose, and would willingly pack it back and forth for the inspiration it affords. I've been through it. Used to do that very thing myself, but after half a dozen veils and a pair of gloves and some little lacey things that I shall not attempt to specify floated down from the pulpit on Sunday mornings in view of the astonished and amused congregation, I accustomed myself to two Bibles. The women folk will put things into the Bible to press. It is a habit you can't break them of, and the first thing you know these feminine knick-knacks go sailing away to humiliate you."

That night the curate turned the pages of his Bible carefully. A veil and a scrap of lace fell out. He sighed. The next day he began to cultivate an affection for a second Bible.

PHYSICIAN SAID ECZEMA CAME FROM TEETHING

"When my little girl was about eight months old, she was taken with a very irritating breaking out, which came on her face, neck and back. When she first came down with it, it came in little watery-like fosters under her eyes, and on her chin, then after a few days it would dry down in scaly, white scabs. In the daytime she was quite worrysome and would dig and scratch her face nearly all the time.

"I consulted our physician and found she was suffering from eczema, which he said came from her teething. I used the ointment he gave me and without any relief at all. Then I wrote for a book on Cuticura, and purchased some Cuticura Soap and Ointment at the drug store. I did as I found directions in the Cuticura Booklet, and when she was one year old, she was entirely cured. Now she is three years and four months, and she has never been troubled with eczema since she was cured by the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. (Signed) Mrs. Freeman Craver, 311 Lewis St., Syracuse, N. Y., May 6, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 2 K, Boston.

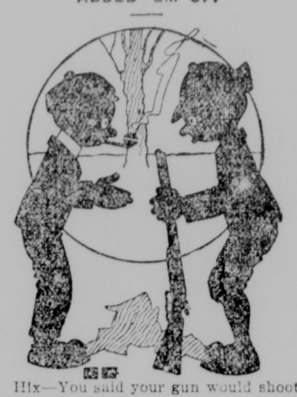
The Trouble With Humor.

E. N. Brown, president of the National Railways of Mexico, discussing in New York a railroader who was always out of work, said: "He is too quick with his tongue—that's his trouble. He has a ready wit that he is too apt to use upon his boss." Then, with a laugh Mr. Brown uttered this epigrammatic and true saying:

"Repartee has lost as many men their jobs as it has made others their reputations."

Don't Bury Your Clothes.

Rag bags are old clothes cemeteries. Half the old clothes are sent there by rubbing and scrubbing them with strong, greasy yellow soap. That makes clothes rot out long before their time.



It's the other way 'round with Hewitt's Easy Task Soap, the original white kind. That sends the dirt flying, and how much longer the clothes last! Five cents a cake, at all grocers.

Forebodings.

Webster had made his great speech in reply to Hayne.

"Some day, I suppose," he mused, "it will devolve upon Henry Cabot Lodge or Winthrop Crane to squelch Ben Tillman, and I'm not so blamed sure they can do it!"

ADDED 'EM UP.

Hix—You said your gun would shoot 900 yards.

Dix—I know I did.

Hix—It's marked to shoot only 450 yards.

Dix—I know, but there are two barrels.

HAVE YOU SUSPECTED YOUR KIDNEYS?

Thousands suffer from backache, headache, dizziness and weariness without suspecting their kidneys.

Henry C. Leonhardt, Liberty St., Sturgeon Bay, Wis., says: "My kidneys were in such bad shape, the kidney secretions passed every few minutes. I doctored with the best physicians and treated with a prominent specialist, but received only temporary relief. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me at once and soon I was permanently cured. I really feel that Doan's Kidney Pills saved my life."

IS MILLENNIAL DAWNISM OF GOD?

make. I Cor. 6:11 says: "Ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." Ephesians 1:7 says: "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sin, according to the riches of his grace." Heb. 9:14, "How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." Many other passages could be quoted to show that only the blood of Jesus Christ can cleanse from sin and that when the cleansing is done it is a completed work. Therefore when the claim is made that Christ did not make a complete sacrifice the truth of the Bible is denied and the assertion of Christ on the cross that it was finished is branded, to speak mildly, as a mistake.

IV. They claim to be divine. That is—claim to have the power of God and to be God.

1. They claim to forgive sins. Page 100 Tabernacle Shadows: "The whole world, purchased by the precious blood (human life) of Christ, will present themselves, for forgiveness of trespasses, to the 'Royal Priesthood' (Russellites, according to his teaching), whose acceptance of their gifts or consecrations will signify forgiveness. * * * * While this ministry of reconciliation belongs in its fullest sense to the next age, when all the sacrifices of atonement will have been completed, yet even now, any member of the 'Royal Priesthood' may say to those who believe and repent, 'Thy sins are forgiven thee'—as did our head, by faith looking forward as he did, to the completion of the sacrifices for sins; moreover, these priests now know the terms and conditions upon which forgiveness is promised, and can speak authoritively when ever they see the terms complied with." Their claim to this power is based on the assertion that if Christ, the head, has the power to forgive sins that they, the body, have the same power. The reasoning is absurd. In the first place it is impossible for anyone to forgive a sin committed against another. When Christ said, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," he did it on the assumption that the sin had been committed against him as God. In the second place, the head has the right to do and can do many things which it is impossible for any other part of the body to do. One might as well say that as the mouth eats the feet shall eat also, or that as the brain thinks that the thumbs should think also. The Scriptures say that each member of the body has its own particular function and cannot and must not infringe on those of the other parts of the body. Read the fourth chapter of Ephesians and you will see that this is true. When Jesus said, as it is recorded in John 20:23, "Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; whosesoever sins ye retain they are retained," as far as we can learn from the context and the after life of the disciples he did not refer to the sins committed against God, but only those committed against themselves. We do not find a single instance of a disciple saying to anyone, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," but on the contrary, Peter is found saying to Simon the Sorcerer in Acts 8:22, "Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee." If Peter had the power to forgive, why did he tell him to pray to God for forgiveness? The statement of Jesus in Matthew 16:24 that he would give the keys of the kingdom of heaven to Peter meant, if I understand the passage correctly, that Jesus entrusted to him and to those who would follow after the preaching of the gospel and the promised that those who accepted it when they preached it should be saved and that those who rejected it should be lost. Or, to state it in another way, that those who were unbound from the fetters of sin through his preaching should be unbound in heaven and that those remained bound, who would not obey the gospel as preached on earth, would not have a second chance, but would remain bound in the world to come. The theory that the disciples had the power to forgive sins in one that can be traced back to the Roman Catholic church and cannot be proven by Scripture.

2. They claim the right to receive offerings and sacrifices as God. On page of Tabernacle Shadows we find the following statement: "The sacrifices offered by the people (Israel—the world) on their own individual account, after the Day of Atonement sacrifices, typified by the general offerings of Israel, belong to the next age, and will then be presented to the glorified, royal priesthood. Nevertheless this has a very slight beginning now; thus the worldly man possessed of wealth is in that sense a steward of God's things, and may now use that mammon and with it make for himself friends, that when this age of Satan's domination is ended, and the reign of Christ commences (in which he shall no longer be a steward), then those whom he thus favored will bless him. If the worldly stewards of wealth are wise, they would use more of their means thus." I used to wonder where Russell got all the money to carry on his propaganda. When I read this passage I found out. He offers to sell salvation or forgiveness to anyone who will pay for it with cold cash. Here is his authority for it. He refers to Matthew 10:42, and if he means it for a quotationhe has it mightily twisted. I will give it he has it. "For whosoever shall give even a cup of cold water unto the least of these priests, because he is such, shall by no means lose his reward when the kingdom of Christ is organized and its rule begins." The passage in the Bible reads: "And whosoever shall give to drink one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward."

3. They call themselves Christ. On page 85 of volume one, Studies of the Scriptures, we read: "The Christ includes all anointed of the Spirit." On page 92 we read: "Our oneness with the Lord Jesus, as members of the Christ, the anointed company, is well illustrated by the figure of the pyramid." This, as you see, almost amounts to pantheism, i. e. That God is in everything and that everything is God, is actual blasphemy. It destroys the individuality of Christ as a person, and instead of being such he becomes a composite being made up of many integral parts each part of which has the same authority as the whole. John the Baptist never said: "Behold the lambs of God that taketh away the sins of the world," but "the lamb of God." There is only one Christ. Not a multitude combined in one. I Cor. 8:6 says: "One Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him."

V. Other false claims.

Claims to be the prophet like unto Moses. Tabernacle Shadows, page 77, "The reconciling of the world unto God, or the bringing of as many of mankind as are willing into full at-one-ment and harmony with God, will be accomplished during the next age, by the Royal Priesthood, the glorified kings and priests, who, typified by Moses, will be the Great Prophet whom the Lord will raise up to teach and govern the people; and if they will not give heed to him they shall be cut off from life." Quite a threat is it not? If you will read Acts 3:19-20 you will see that this prophet like unto Moses was our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Claims to be Elijah. Volume 2, page 252, Studies of the Scriptures: "It is thus seen that the Church in the flesh (the Christ in the flesh, Head and Body) is the Elijah or forerunner of the Church in glory, Jehovah's anointed"—"These constitutes the Elijah." Hear the Scriptures. Matthew 11:13-14, "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. And if ye will receive it, this is Elijah, which was for to come." Mark 9:11-13, "And they asked him, saying, Why say the scribes that Elijah must first come? And he answered and told them, Elijah verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and how it is written of the Son of man, that he must suffer many things; and be set at nought. But I say unto you that Elijah is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him." In Matthew 17:13 in referring to the same conversation it is said: "Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist." There is no mention made of any Millennial Dawnites or Royal Priests.

VI. Conclusive proofs that Millennial Dawnism is not of God.

They are not doing God's work. John 3:16 says, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." Luke 19:10, "For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." John 20:21, "Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father has sent me, even so send I you." Matthew 28:19-20, "All authority is given me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen." In the history of Millennial Dawnism I have never heard of anyone who was ever converted and saved under their teaching. Russell says that the time to preach the gospel to the unsaved ended in 1878. Where did he get his authority for making this statement? Instead of preaching the gospel they devote all their time to upsetting the faith of those who do believe and destroying their usefulness in the organized churches of God. They foster a careless life in this world and thus carry on the work of the devil by teaching that men have a second chance to repent in the life after death. They take away from the sinner the fear of punishment for sin by teaching the buddhist doctrine of Nirvana or annihilation. To recapitlate. They are not preaching the gospel of salvation through the socrifice of Christ and the appropriation of this salvation to the individual through faith. They are not carrying out the commands of Christ in making disciples of all nations, but rather devote their time in seeking to bewilder and unsettle in the faith those who are trying to follow the Lord. They are helping the work of the Devil by teaching people to be careless and not to heed the injunction in Isaiah 51:6, "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near."

In conclusion, friends, I say unto you in the words of Scripture, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."

YOUGHIOGHENY RIVER WILL BE DAMMED

Conservation of Ohio River Tributary To Help Flow in Stream.

The Wheeling Intelligencer of Tuesday contained the following which may be of interest to many Garrett countians, especially those residing along the banks of the Youghiogheny River:

Through the United States Engineer's office yesterday it was learned that the government will this winter close contracts for the improving of the Youghiogheny river from its headwaters to its mouth. The damming of this river will prove of great benefit to the rivermen of this vicinity, for when the low water stage arrives the water held on the tributaries can be let go and float the packets and coal boats out on an artificial flood.

This work will require some years, but will be completed long before the unfinished work on the Ohio is finished. This river empties into the Monongahela, one of the principal sources of the Ohio.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. ELLA SAVEDGE.

One by one the call comes and the weary and tired go home. On Sunday, October 1, Mrs. Ella K. Savedge, the beloved wife of W. R. Savedge departed this life for the life beyond the grave. She passes away in the full assurance of faith having given her heart to God in her young womanhood. She was born in Mifflin Co., Pa., March 22, 1870, and fell asleep October 1, 1911, aged 41 years, 6 months and 9 days. She was converted and joined the Lockport Baptist church at the age of nineteen. She was always true to her faith and not only lived it every day, but left as her last words the admonition to serve the Lord. She left of her own immediate family to mourn her departure her husband, her little son, Harry Milton; a baby boy, Emory Alton and her sister, Mrs. Wm. Sherwood of San Jose, California, who was by her bedside when she died.

God knew that she would be lonely in Heaven without her baby, so on Friday He sent His after it and its little body sleeps in the same casket with that of his mother. He had not tasted any of the bitterness of life having remained on earth just 2 months and 11 days. We extend to the doubly bereaved father and loved ones our sincere sympathy and pray that they may follow their Lord that in the sweet by and by they may meet on that beautiful shore.

C. W. HUDSON.

MRS. CATHARINE PREVOST.

At the home this evening a funeral service will be conducted by Rev. C. W. Hudson, following which the remains will be taken to Reading, Pa., for interment.

MISS BESSIE E. WILT.

Miss Bessie E. Wilt, a daughter of the late Elijah Wilt, near Beckman, this county, died in Keyser, W. Va., Sunday, October 8th, and her remains were interred at the Fitzwater cemetery near North Glade, Tuesday, the 10th inst. Miss Wilt was aged about seventeen years.

ED. RATHBUN BADLY INJURED

Sustained Fractured Collar Bone This Morning When Threshing.

Edward Rathbun, of Loch Lynn Heights, was seriously injured this morning about two o'clock when he was caught between a threshing machine engine and a wagon, Mr. Rathbun sustaining a broken collar bone and other painful injuries.

At the time of the accident he was engaged in hauling grain from a field to the threshing machine and his wagon becoming mired the engine of the threshing outfit was called into service. A pole was placed in front of the engine and against the rear of the wagon and the power applied. The pole breaking allowed the engine to run forward and before Mr. Rathbun could get out of the way he was caught as above stated. His injuries are very painful and he will be incapacitated from work for some weeks.

Married.

ZELLER—BROADWATER—Miss Nell Broadwater, of Grantsville, became the bride of Mr. Gus W. M. Zeller, of Frostburg, Saturday Sept 30, 1911. The wedding occurred at New Castle, Pa., while Mr. Zeller and Miss Broadwater were coincidently taking a trip. Mrs. Zeller is an uncommonly pretty woman, a talented musician and one of Grantsville's most popular young ladies. Mr. Zeller is a son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Zeller, West Union street, Frostburg.

Oakland Has Postal Bank.

Celebrated Anniversary.

Mrs. George E. Bishoff, of near Oakland, celebrated her sixty-sixth anniversary on Saturday when a large number of relatives and friends were present, including Mr. and Mrs Alfred Sisler, of Albright; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sisler, of Terra Alta; Howard Bishoff, of Barnum; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Bishoff, of Hoyes; Mr. and Mrs. George Custer, of Grafton; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Casteel, of Oakland; Mrs. Jennie Miller and children, of Grantsville, and Miss Ophelia Freeland, of Terra Alta. Md.—W. Va. Boundary Line.

Attorney General Isaac Lobe Straus is expected to appear in the Supreme Court of the United States and ask of the court a further delay in filing the report of the commissioners who are preparing the boundary line between Maryland and West Virginia, in accordance with the mandate of the court issued a year ago. A letter was received at the Supreme Court signed by Messrs. Julius K. Monroe, commissioner on the part of West Virginia, William McCullough Brown, commissioner on the part of Maryland and Mr. Samuel S. Gannett, of the United States Geological Survey, explaining that owing to unforseen obstacles the commission had not yet completed the map showing the boundary line in the disputed territory. It is assumed that Mr. Straus will formally lay the commission's request before the court and that the court will extend the time as requested.

O. H. S. Notes.

We have the organization of a literary society on foot and expect to give an entertainment sometime during December, the net proceeds of which are to be used for the benefit of the High School.

Dr. Watkins, of Ada, Ohio, visited the school for a short time Thursday afternoon.

Hellice Rathbun was elected president of the Sophomore class.

Lulu Friend was elected president of the Freshman class.

We have organized a base ball team and on Saturnay, September 30th, we were beaten by the Young Tigers of Oakland 7 to 11. The feature of the game was a home run by Mason, the crack third sacker of the O. H. S.

On Friday after school, Oct. 6th, we again played and beat the Young Tigers to the tune of 10 to 7. The game was called in the eighth inning on account of darkness. The features of this game were the errors made and good batting of both teams. We expect to have another game this week.

I wonder if any one has ever heard of masculine case?

BUCKWHEAT CAKES MAY BE SCARCE

Unfavorable Weather for Harvest will be Cause.

That Garrett county residents may have to curtail their usual annual consumption of the palatable buckwheat cake will not be traceable to a failure of the crop, nor a shortage in the acreage, but solely on account of the unfavorable weather conditions which have prevailed in this section ever since the middle of August, preventing the successful harvesting of the grain, which, according to reports from all parts of the county, is going to waste, simply because there has not been sufficient dry weather to enable the farmers to cut and gather the grain from the fields.

A number of farmers cut the grain two or three weeks ago and it has lain so long that it has begun to sprout, which destroys it for commercial purposes, but it can be fed to stock.

Tomorrow night in the supper room of St. Mark's church a company of fifty or more business men of Oakland, Loch Lynn Heights and Mountain Lake Park will assemble and after partaking of supper plans will be discussed looking forward to the organization of an agricultural society, the printing and distribution of a mass of literature advertising Garrett county not only as a health and summer resort but also as a section presenting great opportunities for the successful production of fruit, grain and vegetables at a minimum of cost and with less labor than is usually devoted to such production in other portions of the country. An effort will also be made to organize a permanent business men's league for the purpose of keeping before the country Garrett county's natural resources and claims as an agricultural and horticultural community. Besides the business men of the places above enumerated a representative of the industrial department of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, which is lending the project every encouragement and has promised hearty cooperation, will be present, as will also President Sylvester of the Maryland Agricultural College, or a representative of that institution.

SOCIAL CRISIS

By Rev Dr. George W. Anderson
Pastor of Union Methodist Episcopal Church, St. Louis.

TEXT—Jacob was a plain man dwelling among the tents; and as a plain man hast thou prevailed.

As men do not pick diamonds from trees, but rather search for them among the barren stones and soil, so God seeks for great leaders, not among the exalted, but from the great mass of common folk. Desiring to start a new race preparatory to Christ's coming, he searched among the common ones of Chaldea until he found Abraham, a worshiper of idols, and sent him forth not only to be the father of the Jewish race, but of the three greatest forms of monotheistic religion the world has ever known. God searched for an emancipator and he found Moses, an alien, born in servitude, and sent him forth to lay the foundatoins of civilization.

Desiring to reveal the power of the strong will and the indomitable ambition, he searched among the open fields until he found Jacob, a plain man, dwelling among tents, and sent him forth as a prince of God.

The story of Jacob is the story of ambition, bad and good, laying hold of every means to meet its end; filled with mingled pathos and joy. As the bad ambition it sends its harvest of sorrow, and as a holy ambition its harbest of joy. In no life is the failure of ungodly ambition and the success of righteous ambition more marked.

Jacob desired to rule, to lift himself out of the common place, to become a prince among men, and failing to realize the difference between right and wrong, brought dismal failure. He believed that birthright gave the power to rule, and unjustly sought to secure one not his own.

At the doorway of a weather-beaten tent he sat one evening, a mere lad. The lengthening shadows were silently wrapping the landscape with haze. Before him burned a blazing fire that laughed at the thickening shadows with defiance, cast its rich glow on his clear-cut features and caused the tent folds to stand out distinct against the dull background.

The atmosphere is fragrant with the stream of cooking porridge, which he idly stirred. He was dreaming of leadership, when out from the shadows came one staggering with weakness and hunger and crying out for food. Here was the age-long problem of supply and demand.

Jacob, being careful, shrewd, farsighted, had provided for a time of need. Esau, careless, indifferent, wandering in disposition had made no such provision. It was strength pitted against weakness. Strength said: "What I have is mine, and if any would seek it, let him pay my price."

There is only one thing that Esau had, his birthright, the very thing that Jacob seeks. And in that hour the voice of ambition says: "Put your price high, young man. Get all you can." And Jacob, looking at his starving brother, said: "I will give you to eat if you will give me your birthright." Faint with wearines and hunger, Esau made the bargain.

With uplifted hands Esau gives to Jacob that which Jacob had no right to own, but possessed solely through the power of capital. Now, Jacob is a shrewd and rich man in the sight of the world. He has deceived his brother, has gotten his brother's blessing and he is the priest of the community.

Behold him several days after fleeing in the darkness from his brother, an exile and empty handed. Why? Because money and power gotten by unrighteous methods never enrich. Behold Jacob in the open fields, with no bed save sand, no pillow save stones, no covering save the open sky, the picture of a thousand characters of history.

Then comes the vision of Jacob, the ladder reaching up to heaven and the angels ascending and descending. Jacob sees that while ungodly ambition brought failure, godly ambition could lift him up to God. The angels ascend and descend; they go up only that they might come down. Ambition should lead a man up, only that, in the heights, he may gain power and strength to come back into the lowly fields and serve his fellow man. He must climb the ladder to God only that he may come back to serve those who need help.

A man becomes a prince, not through birthright, but through service.

Esau came with his armies to catch the fleeing Jacob, but Jacob, having wrestled with the angel, comes to meet his brother with arms extended, not to rule but to serve. And Esau, beholding the change in his brother, leaps from his horse and embraces Jacob. Jacob has now become the prince of his own people, not through ambition to rule, but to serve.

Courage.

It is not moral courage that makes a man face the gallows without a quiver; it is the callousness of sin. This false idea of bravado and courage is leading multitudes of young men to the pit.—Rev. W. H. Geistweit, Baptist, San Diego.

Helping.

When you give help to him who is down and out you project your life. If you cannot help another your life is not worth much.—Rev. W. B. Hinson, Baptist, Portland, Ore.

Temperance

HINT FOR THOUGHTFUL MEN

English Physician, by Simple Experiment, Convinces Scholar of Injurious Effect of Alcohol.

Dr. Richardson, an eminent English physician, by a very simple experiment once convinced an intelligent scholar of the injurious effect of alcohol.

The scholar, an intelligent young man, was singing the praises of what he called the "Ruddy Bumper," saying he could not get through the day without it, and that it gave him strength and health, as well as exhilaration, when Dr. Richardson said to him, "Be good enough to feel my pulse as I am standing here?"

The young man did so, counting its beats carefully, and saying, "its beats 74."

The doctor then sat down in a chair and asked him to count it again. He did so, and said, "it has gone down to 70."

The doctor then lay down on the lounge, and said, "Now count it again."

This the young man did, and in surprise said, "Why, it is only 64; what an extraordinary thing!"

The doctor then said: "When you lie down at night, that is the way nature takes to give your heart rest. You know nothing about it, but your heart, that forever beating organ, is taking a rest, and if you will but reckon it up, you will find that it is a great deal of rest, for in lying down, the heart is doing ten strokes less a minute than before. Multiply that by 60, and it is 600, and multiply that by eight hours, and within a fraction, it is 5,000 strokes different; and as the heart throws some six ounces of blood at every stroke, it makes a difference of some 30,000 ounces of lifting in a single night, or over 684,000 pounds every year! When I lie down at night without any alcohol, then my heart gets rest, and my strength is renewed. But when you take your wine or grog, you do get the rest, for the effect of the alcohol is to increase the number of strokes, and instead of getting the rest which sleep is intended to give, you force the heart to some 15,000 extra strokes in a single night, and the result is, that you rise up in the morning comparatively weak, and unfit for the next day's work till you have taken another drink of the 'ruddy bumper,' which you seem to think is a source of strength and the life of man below."

The young man acknowledged that this must be so. He began to reckon up the figures and found what it was to be lifting up so many ounces so many thousand times, and the result was that he became a total abstinence man, with the greatest benefit to his health, and as he admits, to his enjoyment of life and happiness.

EVIL EFFECTS OF DRINKING

For the Want of Little Self-Sacrifice the Moderate Drinker Imposes Tax on His Fellow Men.

A recent address given by Sir Victor Horsely, the eminent English physician, contains some remarks on the subject of alcoholic drinking which are worthy of general consideration: "The moral conduct of future citizens," he states, "begins in the home. If we consider the things that are done to degrade human life we are brought back to the question of alcohol.

"Self-sacrifice in regard to the so-called luxuries of life begins, as a rule, with a man giving up alcohol. So far as I am concerned, it seems an incredibly small sacrifice to make, but it is not so to many people. The individual who considers honestly what is his duty toward his fellow countrymen must consider this matter from two totally different points of view. He must consider the duty to make himself as fit as possible for his work in the country. He must consider the children. The very question of sick insurance now being dealt with by the government, however remote it may seem to you, is governed by the question of self-sacrifice, for it has clearly been shown that the proportion of sickness among so-called moderate drinkers is greater than among abstainers. For the want of a little self-sacrifice the moderate drinker imposes taxes on his fellow men. Only a few days ago an old, much-loved teacher of my own, Sir A. Pearce Gould, showed that cancer was a disease which attacked those who took alcohol twice as frequently as those who do not. Every day we have evidence of this sort brought before us, showing that total abstinence stands first as a salient element in the making of the nation."

Flat Not Smooth.

To encourage temperance the British admiralty allows 36 cents a month to sailors who forego their daily ration of rum. But, as a sailor who does not wish to drink rum can draw his rations and sell them to other sailors at 80 cents or even more a month, the temperance plan is not so successful as was hoped.

Intemperance Debasing.

There is no vice in nature more debasing and destructive to men than intemperance. It robs them of their reason, reputation, and interest. It renders them unfit for human society. It degrades them below the beasts that perish, and justly exposes them to universal odium and contempt.—Emmons.

Aspiration Hat

Photograph by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

It may be the height or the upward effect of this chic and daring creation that has given it its name, but in either instance the title is appropriate. Here we have the narrow brim and the tall trimming that characterize the fall fashion in millinery. The hat is of black velvet, the brim surmounted and the crown surrounded by a mass of soft curled ostrich from which spring a dense cluster of straight, tall feathers.

FALL HATS FOR CHILDREN

Many Varieties and Styles Are Being Offered—Charming Creation of White Cloth.

Little people are likely to be careless about their clothes, and hats especially are tossed carelessly about, and unless a hat has been held in reserve for a dignified, well-groomed home-coming, mother or nurse may be obliged to go or send to town for this accessory. There are a great many varieties from which to select the early fall chapeau. There are hats of white cloth, of heavy, corded silk, and of suede. A charming white cloth hat has a dome-shaped crown, finished at the bottom with a pleated cloth band. About this is twisted white wool cord, ending in large wool balls. Another style, sure to be becoming, is of rough white cloth, with a band of royal blue velvet, and at the side a tiny round cluster of brilliant red wool berries and green leaves. A delightful color scheme this, and every effective. A style sure to suit the curly-haired girl is of ecru corded silk, with black and cerise satin facing. A short, blunt ecru feather stands up on one side, while a row of flat buttons, made of black satin, with cerise rims, trims the other side.

STYLES IN HAIR DRESSING

Smaller Chapeaux Will Necessitate Radical Changes in the Fashioning of Coiffures.

The gradual revival of the small hat is causing several modifications in the style of our coiffures. The day of piles upon piles of curls has quite passed, and it is even considered good style to wear the hair almost flat, so long as it is not strained back from the face. In fact, there are a few women who have always kept to this fashion of dressing their hair, and there is one big dressmaker, noted for her distinction, who insists upon her models doing the same thing. They part their hair in the middle, take it loosely back from the brow, and gather it into a rather protruding coil on the crown of the head. A tortoise shell pin or two, a silver or jeweled dagger, or some equally rare but simple ornament is the only decoration allowed with this style of coiffure.

In all styles, however, it is now the right thing to avoid ribbons, jeweled bands, tulle and all things which suggest the turban. The only people who will be sorry to see the new fashions in this particular detail of the toilet are the hair dressers, who have been making fortunes out of false hair.

DRESS FOR YOUNG GIRL

This simple dress might be made up in lined or any washing material.

The skirt has slight fullness at the waist, and is trimmed at foot of center back and front by cotton braid, sewn on in half-diamond shapes; two buttons are sewn above this.

The kimono bodice is trimmed the same at neck, waist and on sleeves.

Materials required: Three and one-half yards 36 inches wide, two dozen yards braid, one dozen buttons.

To Clean Kid Gloves.

Take a little sweet milk and a piece of white or brown soap. Fold a clean towel three or four times, spread it over your dress and spread out the glove smoothly upon it. Take a large piece of white flannel, dip it in the milk, then rub it upon the soap and rub the glove downward toward the fingers, holding the wrist of it by the left hand. Continue this process until the glove, if white, looks of a dingy yellow, but, if colored, looks dark and entirely spoiled. Now let it dry and then put it on your hand, and it will be soft, smooth, glossy and clean. Take care, however, to omit no part of the glove in rubbing it and see that all the soiled parts are thoroughly cleaned. This process applies only to white and colored kid gloves. For black gloves that are soiled, turned white and otherwise injured, take a teaspoonful of salad oil, drop a few drops of ink into it, and rub it all over the gloves with the tip of a feather; then let them dry in the sun. White kid boots and slippers can also be cleaned by the first process to look "as good as new," and black kid boots and slippers can be restored to their pristine gloss by the latter method.

Witch Hazel Cream.

The witch hazel cream formula given below is excellent. You will find it a good cream for cleansing. Of course fat is the basis of all tissue-building creams.

One ounce each of white wax and spermaceti, one-quarter pint of oil of almonds.

Melt; pour into a mortar, which has been heated by being immersed some time in boiling water. Very gradually add three ounces of rose water and one ounce of witch hazen and assiduously stir the mixture until an emulsion is formed, and afterward until the mixture is nearly cold.

Most Expensive Hat.

The most expensive hat in the world is said to be a wonderful creation belonging to Princess Miheson Bukharest, one of the richest and most fashionable women in Roumania. The hat, which is worth easily $1,000, is of black tagal straw and is very large. It is lined with silver lace and covered with a number of perfect white ospreys.

The Old Love Possible.

Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, at a garden party at Hampstead, praised the working girl.

"How much nobler," she said, "to work than to marry for money. I know a pretty girl who gave up a good position to marry a man of sixty-eight.

"'I am marrying for love,' she told her chum.

"'And the old fellow,' said the chum, disgustedly, 'is worth $7,000,000!'

"'Yes,' was the reply. 'It's the $7,000,000 I'm in love with.'"

Cause of the Excitement.

The sons of the rich were all enthusiastically following some one down the street.

"What's up?" someone asked.

A rather more accommodating young nabob than the others turned around.

"Do you see that tall fellow up front?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Well," he said, "he's discovered a new way to spend money."

FOOD AGAIN

A Mighty Important Subject to Everyone.

A Boston lady talks entertainingly of food and the changes that can be made in health by some knowledge on that line. She says:

"An injury to my spine in early womanhood left me subject to severe sick headaches which would last three or four days at a time, and a violent course of drugging brought on constipation with all the ills that follow.

"My appetite was always light and uncertain and many kinds of food distressed me.

"I began to eat Grape-Nuts food two or three years ago, because I liked the taste of it, and I kept on because I soon found it was doing me good.

"I eat it regularly at breakfast, frequently at luncheon, and again before going to bed—and have no trouble in 'sleeping on it.' It has relieved my constipation, my headaches have practically ceased, and I am in better physical condition at the age of 63 than I was at 40.

"I give Grape-Nuts credit for restoring my health, if not saving my life, and you can make no claim for it too strong for me to endorse." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek Mich.

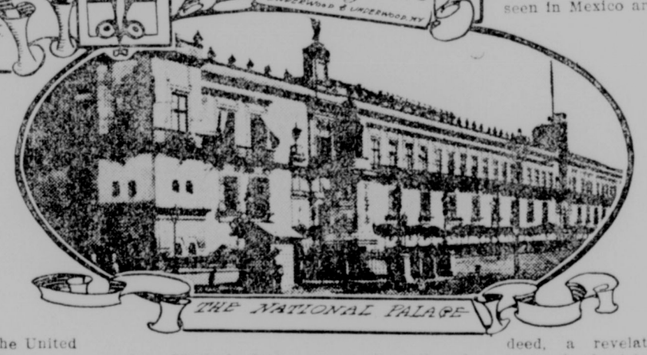
In the Valley of Mexico

by EARLE R. FORREST



MEXICO is a land of enchantment, romance and mystery for most Americans. We, of the northern climates, are likely to look upon it as a country of bull fights, bandits and wild Indians, where the lives of foreigners are not safe, and the principal amusement is stabbing Americans in the back with long-bladed knives. During the last year or two certain magazine articles have caused these ideas to take a firm hold upon our minds, especially since the recent revolution broke out. These pieces are based upon facts, but the truth has been greatly enlarged upon in order to create a demand for such literature and make the production of the authors more salable. However, the traveler in Mexico will find that he is just as safe there as in any other part of the world, providing that he attends to his own affairs; but, on the other hand, if he is looking for trouble he will be accommodated there just as quickly as at home, for the Mexicans are a courteous race and nothing pleases them better than to be obliging to strangers.

One morning in June, several years ago, I arrived in Vera Cruz. This is one of the most ancient cities of the New World, as it was founded by Cortez in 1519. It is historic to the last degree; and it was there that Maximilian first set foot on Mexican soil, while the flags of four great nations—Spain, Mexico, France and the United States—have floated over its ramparts.

Mexico City is full of interesting places. Relics of the conquistadores and of the days of Spanish rule may be seen on every side. History says that about 1325 a band of Aztecs was traveling through the Valley of Mexico. For nearly six hundred years these people had been wanderers on the face of the earth, and during all those centuries they had been searching for the promised land—a place to build a new home. Their priests had taught them that when they saw a royal eagle with a snake in its talons alight upon a prickly pear cactus, that would be a sign that there was the place for them to build a city. And as they were wandering through this valley they beheld a royal eagle, perched upon a cactus, holding a serpent. This is the origin of the Mexican national emblem of today. Accordingly they stopped, for they firmly believed that their long journey was ended. On an island in Lake Texcoco they built a city which they called Tenochtitlan, and this is where the City of Mexico now stands.

Considering the centuries that they had been homeless, the reign of the Aztecs over this fair land was short, for in 1519 Cortez landed in Mexico. Then began one of the most remarkable campaigns in all history. The great conquerer commenced his famous march to the Aztec capital, fighting battle after battle, and defeating hordes of savages. On November 8, 1519, Cortez entered Tenochtitlan with his little army and was welcomed by Montezuma II. The Spaniards collected a great amount of gold and other valuables which they were compelled to leave, for on July 1, 1520, they were driven from the city. However, in August, 1521, they returned, besieged the place, and on the 13th they were again victorious; and the reign of the Aztecs came to an end forever. But the great treasures that had been left behind by the conquerors had disappeared. Cuauhtemoc, the last of the Montezumas, was tortured with fire in an effort to make him disclose the hiding place of the gold; but in this Cortez failed, for the lips of the Aztec remained sealed, and the location of the treasure is a mystery unto this day.

One of the principal points of interest is the Iturbide hotel, located on First San Francisco street, and not far from the Plaza Mayor. This building was erected by the Marquesa de San Mateo Valparaiso, in the eighteenth century, and later became famous as the palace of modern Mexico's first emperor, Augustine de Iturbide. This man was the commander of the viceroy's forces; but he was ambitious, and so he joined the revolutionists, helping them to throw off the yoke of Spain. For this he was crowned emperor of Mexico on July 25, 1822. His reign was short, for he soon became unpopular, and on March 20, 1823, he abdicated and sailed for Europe.

Mexico is a land of churches; and over the ruins of one of the greatest pagan temples of the New World stands a magnificent place of worship of the Christian religion. There, where the great Aztec temple that was destroyed by Cortez once stood, is now the beautiful Cathedral of Mexico. The cost of its construction was about $2,000,000.

The front is surmounted by two beautiful towers, about two hundred feet high, from which an excellent view of the city, with its picturesque domes and great buildings, may be had; while the Valley of Mexico, famed the world over for its beauty, stretches out like a great panorama. The famous Lake Texcoco, the great castle of Chapultepec and the sacred town of Guadalupe seem just beneath your feet. Far away on the him of the valley the great Popocatepetl and Ixtaccihuatl ("he Woman in White"), on the summits of which is the land of eternal snow, rise up above the surrounding country.

The cathedral is never closed. Night and day, summer and winter, its doors are always open, and every one, from the poorest beggar in the land to the richest man, is welcome. There, within the walls of this beautiful palace of religion, they all gather, rich and poor, aristocrat and peon, to receive the bishop's blessing.

On the east side of the Plaza Mayor is the National palace, which was started in 1692. This is the seat of the national government, and within its walls the laws which govern the people of Mexico are made. It is on the grounds where once stood the palace of Axayacatl, an emperor of the Aztecs.

Just beyond the palace, on the Calle de Moneda, is the National museum. This place is a wonderful treasure house of Aztec relics, and nowhere else in the world will such a collection of implements and other remains of this extinct race be found.

Within a few minutes' ride of the Plaza Mayor is the castle of Chapultepec, the White House of Mexico. This building stands upon a huge rock that rises up out of the plain, and it has been the site of the residences of the rulers of Mexico ever since the days of the Aztecs.

The Mexico City of former times was surrounded by Lake Tezcoco, the waters of which were alkaline and unfit for use. Therefore the inhabitants were compelled to obtain their water from springs, and it was carried to the city by means of aqueducts. One of these ran along the road to Chapultepec and terminated at the fountain of El Salto del Agu, near Belem prison.

Portions of this famous old waterway are still standing and may be seen from the street cars. It was constructed of bricks, laid in cement and plastered with the same material. It was very substantial and would have stood a thousand years as well as one.

The region of this ancient waterway is one of the most picturesque parts of the city. Out on the Chapultepec highway, which was built by Maximilian, scores of wood carriers may be seen with enormous loads of firewood, that they have cut in the hills, fastened on their backs. They can carry almost as much as a horse, and they peddle this fuel in the city, where it is used for cooking. Quite frequently burros are seen loaded down, carrying a burden larger than themselves. I have also seen this in towns in New Mexico and Arizona.

One of the most picturesque sights to be seen in Mexico are the queer-looking ox carts. There are great, two-wheeled affairs, drawn by two oxen, sometimes four, and are used in all parts of the republic. Generally the wheels are made out of a solid piece of wood, but sometimes they have spokes. In these vehicles the peons bring their produce to the city, and peddle it along the streets, much the same as do the American truck gardeners.

Many of the plows used in Mexico, and very commonly on the haciendas about the capital, are, indeed, a revelation to Americans. The tongue is about ten feet long and is simply the limb of a tree, generally with a fork at the end. The latter part is about four feet in length and pointed with iron. The whole thing has but one handle and is drawn by a yoke of oxen. With it the natives manage to scrape out a furrow in the ground. The method is exceedingly primitive and picturesque, and is used throughout all parts of the country, modern American plows being a great rarity. In fact, I did not see one in all my travels in the republic.

All of the cities and towns have a public fountain from which any one who desires may obtain water; and every hour of the day one may see the aguadores (water carriers) obtaining their daily supply from these places. Both sexes come; the women generally carry a large earthen jar upon their heads, while many of the men bring burros upon which the pack-saddles holding six or eight vessels. Others bring rudely fashioned wheelbarrows with which to haul away the precious fluid.

At Popotla, a suburb of Mexico City, is La Noche Triste (the Mournful Night Tree), one of the most historic trees in North America, for it is said that the great conqueror, Hernan Cortez, sat under it and wept on the night of July 1, 1520, following the defeat of the Spaniards by the Aztecs and their retreat from the City of Mexico. This ancient tree is well cared for, and is surrounded by an iron fence. It is gnarled and crooked and partly dead, and it is doubtful if it can live many years longer.

A visit to the little town of Guadalupe, about two miles north of the City of Mexico, is one of the most interesting and, probably, the saddest journey in all Mexico. This picturesque village, nestled at the foot of the hill of Tepeyacac, is the shrine of Mexico. There is an interesting legend concerning it, which is as follows: On December 12, 1531, an Indian named Juan Diego was on his way to the church of Santiago to attend mass, when the Virgin Mother descended from the clouds and appeared before the poor peon on the hill of Tepeyacac. She told Juan that she intended to become the Patron Saint of Mexico, and that she wished him to go to the bishop at the Cathedral of Mexico and tell him that she desired to have a church built at the foot of the hill and dedicated to her.

Naturally the bishop did not believe the Indian's story, but when Juan went to him for the third time the prelate told him that he must bring some sign. When he repeated this to the Virgin she told him to go to the top of the hill, which was always barren, and that he would find the ground covered with roses. He was to fill his zarape with the flowers and hasten to the bishop with them. Juan did as he was bidden, and when he spread out the roses before the bishop there, on the inside of his coarse zarape was painted a beautiful picture, another miracle, of the Virgin Mary. This was enough; and one of the finest churches in all Mexico was built at the foot of the hill of Tepeyacac.

This remarkable portrait was placed in a prominent part of the edifice, where it may be seen to this day, enclosed by a beautiful frame, said to be solid gold; and it is known throughout Mexico as "Our Lady of Guadalupe."

On December 12 the festival of "Our Lady of Guadalupe" occurs, and thousands make the long pilgrimage to her shrine. This has taken place since 1752, in which year the Virgin of Guadalupe was officially recognized.

On the hill of Tepeyacac is a little chapel which marks the spot where Juan Diego cut the roses that he took to the bishop. Just back of it is the Guadalupe cemetery, in which some of Mexico's most famous men, among them are Santa Ana, Viceroy Bacarell and Colonel Obergon, are buried.

This edifice is reached by two series of long, winding stairways, which go up the steep hill from opposite sides. About half way up one of these flights are the mast and sails of a ship, made of stone and plastered with cement. How long they have been there no man can say. There is a legend concerning their origin which is as follows: Many, many long years ago, centuries, perhaps, a ship was in a great storm on the Gulf of Mexico. The vessel was in danger of sinking, and so the sailors prayed to the Virgin, and promised her that if she would save them they would take the mast of their ship to her shrine at Guadalupe, and there set it up so that it would remain forever as a monument to her power. The vessel was saved, and true to their vow, the sailors removed the heavy mast and carried it upon their shoulders over the long, weary miles from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, and thence to Guadalupe, where they erected it, the sails set. It was covered with stone and cement in order that it might be preserved for the benefit of future generations; and there it remains to this day, high up on the hill where all may see.

On the spot where the Virgin is supposed to have stood when she appeared to Juan Diego a spring, the waters of which are supposed to cure any ill, gushes forth. Over this fountain a little chapel, one of the most beautiful that I have ever seen, stands. Over the altar is a painting of "Our Lady of Guadalupe" and every day many go to her shrine to worship.

One of the most pathetic scenes that can be imagined takes place in front of the cathedral. Among the passengers of every street car that arrives are the lame, the halt and the blind. Some have to be carried, others are led, while many who are friendless, hobble and drag themselves to this sacred spring to obtain a drink of its magic waters.

No description of this interesting land would be complete without some mention of the picturesque city of Guanajuato. This famous old place was founded by the Spaniards in 1554, and the attraction which brought them there was the rich vein of silver known as Veta Madre (mother vein), which has been worked steadily for over three and a half centuries. The great Valenciana mine, located near the city, has produced about $800,000,000. Mining is carried on in the same primitive manner as in the days of the early Spaniards.

The cemetery and the catacombs are, probably, of more interest to the stranger that any other point in the city. Armed with a permit which the hotel proprietor gave me I climbed the steep hillside streets to the city of the dead, situated upon the summit of one of the mountains.

This cemetery is rather small, and I wondered that there were so few graves in it, but the mystery was soon explained to me. In the walls that enclosed the place are thousands of vaults, just large enough for a coffin. These may be rented for stated periods, but when this time has expired, if the relatives of the deceased do not renew the lease, the remains are taken out and thrown on the bone pile beneath. The crypt is then ready for occupation again. The ground where the graves are located is sold outright.

However, the greatest surprise of all was before me. My guide opened a small door built in some masonry on top of the ground, and a flight of narrow, winding stairs was exposed. These we descended, and they brought us into a long, underground passage, where is one of the most remarkable and gruesome sights in all Mexico. About half of this chamber is occupied by a number of corpses. In that dry climate, flesh will not decay when protected from the weather, and these bodies were so withered and dried up that they looked like leather. The expressions on the faces were horrible in the extreme.

The other end of this chamber is piled full of bones. They are the remains of the poor wretches who had once been laid to rest in the vaults above, and who, after the term for which their friends had paid rent had elapsed, had been removed to this place.

These catacombs are indeed horrible, and a poor place for any one inclined to nervous troubles, for if your nerves are not pretty strong you will see this terrifying place, with its grinning skulls and shriveled mummies, for many a night afterwards.

BUY SHEEP AND LAMBS NOW

But Don't Be a Sheep.

A COMMON EXPERIENCE.

Don't Follow the Crowd.

In chasing the market for profit, the fellows who blindly follow the crowd are generally the ones who get left. The successful man buys when he has the least competition, at the lowest prices and with the greatest margin for profit, which usually brings his selling time during a period of comparative scarcity at market, and he therefore gets higher prices and most always makes a good profit in his dealings.

Here's a Chance for Gain.

The present very low market values of feeding sheep and lambs, being less than the cost of production, offers such an opportunity to those who are prepared to properly care for them.

Feeders Are Selling Cheap.

Well-bred, thin but thrifty lambs of the growing kind can now be bought on the Chicago market for $5.25 to $5.50 per 100 pounds; wethers of similar description, $3.40 to $3.75; yearling wethers, $4.25 to $4.50; yearling breeding ewes, $4.00 to $4.60, and good feeding ewes at $2.50 to $2.85. These prices are about $1.75 lower than a year ago for feeder lambs, and the lowest since 1904. Feeder sheep prices also are unusually low.

Now Is the Time to Buy.

In view of the fact that prices of feeder sheep and lambs are now below the cost of production, and that present prices of lamb and mutton are out of line with all other meats and must therefore soon rise because of the increased consumption invited thereby, the conclusion is inevitable that now is the best time to buy feeder sheep and lambs for all those who are ready to prepare them for market during the early part of next year.

A leading sheep owner and dealer says: "Fat is made pretty cheap on the Fall feed that otherwise would be wasted, and the sheep and lamb feeding proposition from the standpoint of fertility is worthy of most careful consideration."

Red Cross Christmas Seals.

The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis will this year for the first time be national agent for the American Red Cross in handling the sale of Red Cross seals. A new national office has been opened in Washington, and an initial order has been placed for 50,000,000 seals, although it is expected that double that number will be sold. The charge to local agents for the seals will be 12½ per cent. of the gross proceeds, the national agent furnishing the seals and advertising material, and taking back all unsold seals at the end of the season. Postmaster General Hitchcock has approved of the design of the seal. Owing to the fact that many people last year used Red Cross seals for postage, the post office department has given orders that letters or packages bearing seals on the face will not be carried through the mails.

Only a Moose.

"The modern woman isn't a bluff," asserted Mrs. Gobbolink, looking up from her newspaper. "This suffrage movement has more in it than mere ideas. The new woman is brave and fearless. Here is a story of a woman up in Canada who killed a mouse. It seems that she—"

"Impossible!" interjected Mr. Gobbolink. "There must be some mistake—read it again."

Mrs. Gobbolink searched out the paragraph and then blushed vividly. "How stupid of me," she stammered. "I did make a mistake. It wasn't a mouse she killed—nothing but a moose."

A Great Grace.

It is no great matter to associate with the good and gentle, for this is naturally pleasing to all and everyone willingly enjoyeth peace and loveth those best that agree with him. But to be able to live peaceably with hard and perverse persons, or with the disorderly, or with such as go contrary to us, is a great grace, and a most commendable and manly thing.—Thomas a Kempis.

All druggists or send to manufacturers, 50c and $1 a bottle. Spohn Medical Co., Chemists, Goshen, Ind., U. S. A.

Of Course He Cried.

"Jimmy! What on earth are you crying about now?"

"Tommy Jones dreamed last night that he had a whole pie to eat an' I didn't."

The Pure Food Law stopped the sale of hundreds of fraudulant medicines. They could not stand investigation. Hamlins Wizard Oil has stood the test of investigation for nearly sixty years.

And He's Not Alone.

Powell—He has all of the eccentricities of genius without the genius.

THE POLITICAL CROOKS OF MARYLAND.

WHEN reforms become imperative for the public good the first consideration is the ballot. Here in Maryland the privilege of franchise has been so effectively curtailed, the rights of citizenship so persistently encroached upon, and the power of the people thus so seriously impaired in recent years through tampering with the election laws and customs that the enterprising bosses of the Democratic party have found it comparatively easy to turn the voting system to their own base uses and manipulate the ballots to serve their own questionable ends. These deplorable conditions existing as the time for the State campaign drew near made it essential that the people of Maryland should have early opportunity to decide whether they desire a continuation of these fraudulent practices, whether they are willing that the Baltimore City machine gang shall rule in the counties as well, or whether they prefer a return of those conditions which will restore the liberties of the electorate by guaranteeing to every citizen his right to vote, with the additional assurance that his vote will be counted as cast.

If "Honest Election Laws" was not the accepted foremost issue in this campaign before, it certainly has become paramount since the Grand Jury's disclosures of the wholesale frauds perpetrated in the late Democratic primary in Baltimore City. These disclosures have proved beyond peradventure that the existing election laws enacted by Democratic Legislatures make it possible for the unscrupulous heelers and tricksters to employ successfully every form of vote-manipulation which their whim and pleasure may dictate or circumstances make expedient. They have been able to pad the registration lists; stuff the ballot-boxes; vote repeaters in any desired number; falsify the official returns; give the votes cast for one candidate to another of their choice; count out those whom they do not want, and count in those who are the favorites of the machine—if there is any election trick or crime known to the corrupt politician that has not been practiced in the Baltimore City primary it is of very recent issue and has not yet been discovered, for all the old ones were pressed into service and worked to a finish.

And to whom must the people of Maryland look for relief from these shameless bosses and their increasing power? The Democratic party—by electing Mr. Gorman Governor? Mr. Gorman is admittedly the candidate of Mahon, the Baltimore City boss, and John Walter Smith, the whilom "leader" in the State. We are being advised daily by the bulletins and reports from the Grand Jury what part in "honest elections" "Sonny" Mahon plays; and John Walter Smith, as Governor, called together the Maryland Legislature in extra session at a tremendous cost to the taxpayers to pass an election law which would disfranchise a sufficient number of Republican voters to insure Democratic success in the next election which saved the late Mr. Gorman, Sr., from being defeated for the United States Senate; and Smith, more than any other man in the State, is responsible for the first steps leading to the enactment of the nefarious Wilson Law, the wholesale disfranchising provisions of which need no elucidation here.

As for young Mr. Gorman himself, as president of the Maryland Senate in 1910 he became largely instrumental in the expansion of the infamous provisions of this law and in the extension of its operation into nearly every county in the State; he is responsible for the faulty features of the Corrupt Practices Act which the Democratic platform pledges to improve, and his opposition to the State-wide Primary Law was so persistent that he had his own county of Howard exempted from its operation when he found he could not prevent its enactment; and as a further evidence of his disposition to give the people honest election laws, Mr. Gorman in the 1910 session introduced in the Senate, and endeavored diligently to secure the passage of a law, the purpose of which was to place the selection of Republican clerks and judges of election entirely in the hands of the Democratic Election Supervisors.

What are Mr. Gorman's campaign promises worth now, in view of his official acts a little more than one year ago?

Can the good people of Maryland expect anything in the way of election reforms from the Democratic party with the record of its leaders, bosses and candidates so glaringly before them? And on the same ballot with these candidates is the Digges proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States—one of the boldest and most revolutionary attempts of any political party to deprive the citizens of any State of their legal right to vote. Can the Democratic party through such bosses and their candidates satisfy the voters of their sincerity in promising better things? Give them a new lease of power by electing them this year and they will intrench and so fasten themselves upon the whole state through even worse and more arbitrary legislation that to ever remove or dislodge them will be quite impossible.

In 1895 the Republican party promised an honest election law and fair elections and the following session of the Legislature of 1896 their first concern was the fulfillment of that pledge in the enactment of the famous "Election Law of 1896" which was said then, and has been proven since to have been "the best election law Maryland ever had." The Republican party, through its clean and reputable leaders and candidates, will do the same thing this year. They can be relied upon to keep faith with the people.

Can the Democratic party and its candidates be trusted in this emergency?

MR. GORMAN is so solicitous of an untainted nomination that he is willing the people shall pay for an extra session of the Legislature to keep him on the ticket.

THE extra session of the Legislature might "save the Democratic party" in the future by passing a law turning over the selection of Grand Juries to "Sonny" Mahon.

IT didn't cost Gorman near as much to get the nomination with all the primary crookedness as it did Blair Lee for a clean campaign. Now, what became of that $24,000 anyway, gentlemen?

THE Democratic platform pledges its candidates to amend the election laws. And they'll do it. They will amend them in such a manner, however, as to make possible the discovery of their crookedness in elections "never again."

THE functions of the Legislature are to make laws, those of the Grand Jury to ferret out and punish the violators of those laws. But the Maryland Legislature is to be made to do the whole thing.

The heavy rains which have fallen almost daily for some weeks past, has caused much damage to the buckwheat, a large percentage of which is yet in the field.

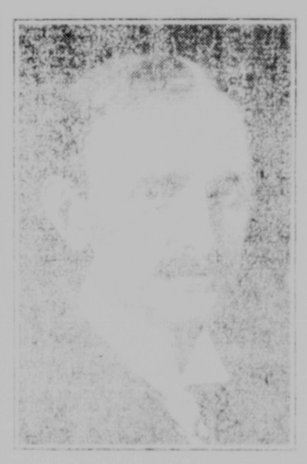
THE REPUBLICAN STANDARD BEARER AND HIS TWO ASSOCIATES UPON THE STATE TICKET

HON. PHILLIPS LEE GOLDSBOROUGH,
Candidate for Governor.

Hon. Phillips Lee Goldsborough, the Republican candidate for Governor of Marvland, and his two associates on the State ticket, Hon. Morris A. Soper, candidate for Attorney General, and Hon. John H. Cunningham, candidate for Comptroller, who are now engaged in a vigorous campaign of the State, are scheduled to pay Garrett county a visit next Wednesday evening, the 18th inst., coming to Oakland in the afternoon on train No. 55, when they will begin the political conquest of Westernmost Maryland, which will assuredly be theirs, and handsomely so, when the ballots are counted after the election on Tuesday, November 7th.

The distinguished visitors to the Glories will be the guests of County Chairman Bond while in the city. They will speak at Nally's Theatre in the evening, and to this meeting everyone is urged to be present.



The candidates will come to Oakland from a two days' campaign tour in Allegany county where they are scheduled to speak in Cumberland, Frostburg and visit points along the line of the C. & P. Railroad, such as Lonaconing Frostburg, Midland, Barton, Westernport and other points.

Chairman Bond has been carrying on a quiet but aggressive campaign favorable to all the candidates. In this he is being assisted by the members of the committee as well as by a number of citizens who are interested in the success of the Republican party at the polls in November. Plans are being made for meetings to be held at nearly every point in the county later during the present month and the first week in November.

For the meeting Wednesday night the Mountain City Band has been engaged to furnish music.

HON. MORRIS A. SOPER,
Candidate for Attorney General.

HON. JOHN H. CUNNINGHAM,
Candidate for Comptroller.

The new concrete sidewalk on Main street is a daisy—for, like the daisy, people tread on it with impunity and muddy feet. During the summer months quite a number of new sidewalks have been laid and others extended. The Mayor and Council have ordered more work along this line and it will doubtless be done before the season of slush, mush, lush, rush and gush sets in.

The Empire Theatre, or nickelodeon, as it is generally called, was re-opened to good business Saturday evening. Manager Burton says he will make things hum this fall and winter and there is every reason to believe he will keep this promise good. The moving picture is a great educator.

As soon as the plumbers can "get in their deadly work," Messrs. Chas. M. Wilson & Brother will occupy their new store building on Bridge street.

The frog pond at the west end of the W. M. depot has been filled up, which marks quite an improvement.

With joy and rapture the air is rend, when "wagon de booze" whirls round the bend.

Almost everybody and his cousin went to the Cumberland fair last Thursday. Some were disappointed, others thought it was good, but all agreed to a "good time a-goin' and a-comin'."

Anent the fire last Wednesday morning, would it not be a good plan to make some defense against possible future events of this kind? A hook and ladder company could readily be organized, or a "bucket brigade" would be of some protection.

The potato crop seems to have been an utter failure in this section, and the price is almost high enough to shake hands with the moon. The acreage is also said to have been comparatively small. In consequence the "Blue Nose Rock" will have to be brought from Michigan presumably.

Mrs. Albert Craver and son Lynwood have returned from a visit with her parents at Deer Park.

Waterworks and a fire department are next in order. Both are much needed and it is not good economy to be without them longer. It is said that "where there's a will, there's a way."

"New goods and lots of 'em," is the way Mr. George Coffman puts it and he means business.

Mr. E. Cranofsky, formerly of Thomas, W. Va., has opened up with a large and varied stock of general merchandise in the building formerly occupied by the Rosenbloom store on Bridge street. Particulars anon.

The faint, but fully defined tones of the joyous wedding bell, is heard in the distance, to be recorded in "our next," perhaps.

Mr. Patrick Mooney, late of Blaine, W. Va., took charge of the Lee hotel at the corner of Main and Second streets, on Monday morning. Pat is well known among the miners of this district and Mrs. Mooney is better known among the hungry crowd that ever infest Blaine and Kitzmiller. They will entertain their friends with lodging and meals and such others as may apply. ARJUNA.

SYNOPSIS.

David Amber, starting for a duck-shooting visit with his friend, Quain, comes upon a young lady equestrian who has been dismounted by her horse becoming frightened at the sudden appearance in the road of a burly Hindu. He declares he is Behari Lal Chatterji, "The appointed mouthpiece of the Bell,' addresses Amber as a man of high rank and pressing a mysterious little bronze box, "The Token," into his hand, disappears in the wood. The girl calls Amber by name. He in turn addresses her as Miss Sophie Farrell, daughter of Col. Farrell of the British diplomatic service in India and visiting the Quains. Several nights later the Quain home is burglarized and the bronze box stolen. Amber and Quain go hunting on an island and become lost and Amber is left marooned. He wanders about, finally reaches a cabin and recognizes as its occupant an old friend named Rutton, whom he last met in England, and who appears to be in hiding. When Miss Farrell is mentioned Rutton is strangely agitated. Chatterji appears and summons Rutton to a meeting of a mysterious body. Rutton seizes a revolver and dashes after Chatterji. He returns wildly excited, says he has killed the Hindu, takes poison, and when dying asks Amber to go to India on a mysterious errand. Amber decides to leave at once for India. On the way he sends a letter to Mr. Labertouche, a scientific friend in Calcutta, by a quicker route. Upon arriving he finds a note awaiting him. It directs Amber to meet his friend at a certain place. The latter tells him he knows his mission is to get Miss Farrell out of the country. Amber attempts to dispose of the Token to a money-lender, is mistaken for Rutton and barely escapes being mobbed. A message from Labertouche causes him to start for Darjeeling, on the way he meets Miss Farrell, and at their journey's end asks her to become his wife. A Hindu conducts Amber to a secret place, and into the presence of a beautiful woman who mistakes him for Rutton. Later Amber is drugged. The Hindus plot rebellion.

CHAPTER XVII. (Continued).

"Hazoor," the native quavered in fright, "it was cold upon the water and you kept me waiting overlong. I landed, seeking shelter from the wind. If your talk was not for mine ears, remember that you used a tongue I did not know."

"So you were listening!" Amber calmed himself. "Never mind. Where's your boat?"

"I thought to hide it in the rushes. If the hazoor will be patient for a little moment . . ." The native dropped down from the bund and disappeared into the reedy tangle of the lake shore. A minute or so later Amber saw the boat shoot out from the shore and swing in a long, graceful curve to the steps of the bund.

"Make haste," he ordered, as he jumped in and took his place. "If I have kept you waiting, as you say, then I am late."

"Nay, there is time to spare." Dulla Dad spun the boat round and away. "I did but think to anticipate your impatience, knowing that you would assuredly come."

"Ah, you knew that, Dulla Dad? How did you know?"

"I, hazoor? Who am I to know aught? . . . Nay, this have I heard"—he paused cunningly: "'You shall find but one way to Kathiapur.'"

Amber, realizing that he had invited this insolence, was fair enough not to resent it, and held his peace until he could no longer be blind to the fact that the native was shaping a course almost exactly away from the Raj Mahal. "What treachery is this, dog?" he demanded. "This is not the way—"

"Be not mistrustful of your slave, hazoor," whined the native. "I do the bidding of those before whose will I am as a leaf in the wind. It is an order that I land you on the bund of the royal summer pavilion, by the northern shore of the lake. There will you find one waiting for you, my lord."

He landed on the steps of the bund and waited for Dulla Dad to join him; but when, hearing a splash of the paddle, he looked round, it was to find that the native had already put a considerable distance between himself and the shore. Amber called after him angrily, and Dulla Dad rested upon his paddle.

"Nay, heaven-born!" he replied. "Here doth my responsibility end. Another will presently appear to be your guide. Go you up to the jungly path leading from the bund."

The Virginian lifted his shoulders indifferently, and ascended to discover a wide footpath running inland between dark walls of shrubbery, but quite deserted. He stopped with a whistle of vexation, peering to right and left. "What the deuce!" he said aloud. "Is this another of their confounded tricks?"

A low and marvelously sweet laugh sounded at his elbow, and he turned with a start and a flutter of his pulses. "Naraini!" he cried.

"Tell me not thou art disappointed, O my king!" she said, placing a soft hand firmly upon his arm. "Didst thou hope to meet another here?"

"Nay, how should I expect thee?" His voice was gentle though he steeled his heart against her fascinations; for now he had use for her. "Had Dulla Dad conveyed me to the palace, then I should have remembered thy promise to ride with me to Kathiapur. But, being brought to this place . . ."

"Then thou didst wish to ride with me?" She nodded approval and satisfaction. "That is altogether as I would have it be, Lord of my Heart. By this have I proven thee, for thou hast consented to approach the Gateway, not altogether because the Voice hath summoned thee, but likewise, I think, because thine own heart urged thee. Nay, but tell me, King of my Soul, did it not leap a little at the thought of meeting me?"

With a quick gesture she threw her veil aside and lifted her incomparably fair face to his, and he was conscious that he trembled a little, and that his voice shook as he answered evasively: "Thou shouldst know, Ranee."

"Thou wilt not draw back in the end?" Her arms clipped him softly about the neck and drew his head down so that her breath was fragrant in his face, her lips a sweet peril beneath his own. "Thou wilt brave whatever may be prepared for thy testing, for the sake of Naraini, who awaits thee beyond the Gateway. O my Beloved?"

"I shall not be found wanting."

Lithe as a snake, she slipped from his arms. "Nay, I trust thee not!" she laughed, a quiver of tenderness in her merriment. "Let my lips be mine alone until thou hast proven thyself worthy of them." She raised her voice, calling: "Ohe, Runjit Singh!"

The cry rang bell-clear in the stillness, and its silver echo had not died before it was answered by one who stepped out of the black shadow of a spreading banian, some distance away, and came toward them, leading three horses. As the moonlight fell upon him, Amber recognized the uniform the man wore as that of the imperial household guard of Khandawar, while the horses seemed to be stallions he had seen in the palace yard, with another but little their inferior in mettle or beauty.

"Now," announced the woman in tones of deep contentment, "we will ride!"

She turned to Amber, who took her up in his arms and set her in the saddle of one of the stallions.

The sowar surrendered to Amber the reins of the other stallion and stepped hastily aside. The Virginian took the saddle with a flying leap, and a thought later was digging his knees into the brute's sleek flanks and sawing on the bits, while the path flowed beneath him, dappled with moonlight and shadow, like a ribbon of gray-green silk, and trees and shrubbery streaked back on either hand in a rush of melting blacks and grays.

Swerving acutely, the path ran into the dusty high road. Amber heard a rush of hoofs behind him, and then slowly the gauze-wrapped figure of the queen drew alongside.

"Maro! Let him run, my king! The way is not far for such as he. Have no fear lest he tire!"

But Amber set his teeth and wrought with the reins until his mount comprehended the fact that he had met a master and, moderating his first furious burst of speed, settled down into a league-devouring stride, crest low, limbs gathering and stretching, with the elegant precision of clockwork. His rider, regaining his poise, found time to look about him and began to enjoy, for all his cares, this wild race through the blue-white night.

They circled finally a great, round, grassless hillside, and pulled rein in the notch of a gigantic V formed by two long, prow-like spurs running out upon a plain whose sole, vague boundary was the vast arc of the horizon.

Before them loomed dead Kathiapur, an island of stone girdled by the shallow silver river. Like the rugged pedestal of some mammoth column, its cliffs rose sheer threescore feet from the water's edge to the foot of the outermost of its triple walls. From the notch in the hills a great stone causeway climbed with a long and easy grade to the level of the first great gate, spanning the chasm over the river by means of a crazy wooden bridge.

A gasp from the woman and an oath from the sowar startled Amber out of somber apprehensions into which he had been plunged by contemplation of this impregnable fortress of desolation. Gone was his lust for peril, gone his high, heedless joy of adventure, gone the intoxication which had been his who had drunk deep of the cup of romance: there remained only the knowledge that he, alone and single-handed, was to pit his wits against the invisible and mighty forces that lurked in hiding within those walls, to seem to submit to their designs and so find his way to the woman of his love, tear her from the grasp of the unseen, and with her escape. . . .

Naraini had, indeed, no need to cry aloud or clutch his hand in order to apprise him that the Eye was vigilant. He himself had seen it break forth, a lurid star of emerald light suspended high above the dark heart of the city.

Slowly, while they watched the star descended, foot by foot, dropping until the topmost pinnacle of a hidden temple semed to support it; and there it rested, throbbing with light, now bright, now dull.

Amber shook himself impatiently. "Silly charlantry!" he muttered, irritated by his own susceptibility to its sinister suggestion. . . . "I'd like to know how they manage it, though the light itself's comprehensible enough, but their control of it. . . . If there were enough wind, I'd suspect a kite. . . ."

"Thou art not dismayed, my king?"

He laughed, not quite as successfully as he could have wished, and, "Not I, Naraini," he returned in English; a tongue which seemed somehow better suited for service in combating the esoteric influences at work upon his mind. "What's the next turn on the program?"

"I like not that tone, nor yet that tongue." The woman shivered. "Even as the Eye seeth, my lord, so doth the Ear hear. Is it meet and wise to speak with levity of that in whose power thou shalt shortly be?"

"Perhaps not," he admitted, thoughtfully. "'In whose power I shall shortly be.' . . . Well, of course!"

"And thou wilt go on? Thou art not mind to withdraw thy hand?"

"Not so that you'd notice it, Naraini."

"For the sake of the reward Naraini offers thee?" she persisted dangerously.

"I don't mind telling you that you'd turn 'most any man's head, my dear," he said, cheerfully, and let her interpret the words as she pleased.

She was not pleased, for her acquaintance with English was more intimate than she had chosen to admit; but if she felt any chagrin she dissimulated with her never-failing art. "Then bid me farewell, O my soul, and go!"

"Up there?" he inquired, lifting his brows.

"Aye, up the causeway and over the bridge, into the city of death."

"Alone?"

"Aye, alone and afoot, my king."

"Pleasant prospect, thanks." Amber whistled, a trifled dashed. "And then, when I get up there—?"

"One will meet thee. Go with him, fearing naught."

"And what will you do, meanwhile?"

"When thou shalt have passed the Gateway, my lord, Naraini will be waiting for thee."

"Very well." Amber threw a leg over the crupper, handed the stallion's reins to the sowar, who had dismounted and drawn near and dropped to his feet.

Came Toward Them Leading Three Horses.

Naraini nodded to the sowar, who led the animal away. When he was out of earshot the woman leaned from the saddle, her glorious eyes to Amber's. "My king!" she breathed intensely.

But the thought of Sophia Farrell and what she might be suffering at that very moment was uppermost—obtruded itself like a wall between himself and the woman.

"Goodnight, my dear," he said amiably; and, turning, made off toward the foot of the causeway.

When he had gained it, he looked back to see her riding off at a wide angle from the causeway, heading out into the plain. When he looked again, some two or three minutes later, Naraini, the sowar, and the horses had vanished as completely as if the earth had opened to receive them. He rubbed his eyes, stared and gave it up.

So he was alone! . . . With a shrug, he plodded on.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Hooded Death.

The causeway down which the horsemen of forgotten kings of Khandawar had clattered forth to war, in its age-old desuetude had come to decay. Between its great paving blocks grass sprouted, and here and there creepers and even trees had taken root and in the slow immutable process of their growth had displaced considerable masses of stone; so that there were pitfalls to be avoided. Otherwise a litter of rubble made the walking anything but good. Amber picked his way with caution, grumbling.

After some three-quarters of an hour of hard climbing he came to the wooden bridge, and halted, surveying it with mistrust. Doubtless in the olden time a substantial but movable structure, strong enough to sustain a troop of warriors but light enough to be easily drawn up, had extended across the chasm, rendering the city impregnable from capture by assault. If so, it had long since been replaced by an airy and well-ventilated lattice-work of boards and timbers, none of which seemed to the wary eye any too sound. Amber selected the most solid-looking of the lot and gingerly advanced a pace or two along it. With a soft crackling a portion of the timber crumbled to dust beneath his feet. He retreated hastily to the causeway, and swore, and noticed that the Eye was watching him with malevolent interest, and swore some more. Entirely on impulse he heaved a bit of rock, possibly twenty pounds in weight, to the middle of the structure. There followed a splintering crash and the contraption dissolved like a magic-lantern effect, leaving a solitary beam about a foot in width and six or eight inches thick, spanning a flight of twenty and a drop of sixty feet. The river received the rubbish with several successive splashes, distinctly disconcerting, and Amber sat down on a boulder to think it over.

"Clever invention," he mused; "one'd think that, after taking all this trouble to get me here, they'd changed their minds about wanting me. I've a notion to change mine."

There seemed to be no possibility of turning back at that stage, however. Kuttarpur was rather far away, and, moreover, he doubted if he would be permitted to return. Having come thus far, he must go on. Moreover, Sophia Farrell was on the other side of that Swordwide bridge, and such being the case, cross it he would though he were to find the next world at its end. Finally he considered that he was presently to undergo an ordeal of some unknown nature, probably extremely unpleasant, and that this matter of the vanishing bridge must have been arranged in order to put him in a properly subdued and tractable frame of mind.

He got up and tested the remaining girder with circumspection and incredulity; but it semed firm enough, solidly embedded in the stonework of the causeway and immovable at the city end. So he straddled it and, averting his eyes from the scenery beneath him, hitched ingloriously across, collecting splinters and a very distinct impression that, as a vocation, knight-errantry was not without its drawbacks.

When again he stood on his feet he was in the shadow of the outer gateway, the curtain of the second wall confronting him.

Casting about, he discovered the second gateway at some distance to the left, and started toward it, forcing a way through a tangle of scrubby undergrowth, weeds and thorny acacia, but had taken few steps ere a heavy splash in the river below brought him up standing, with a thumping heart. After an irresolute moment he turned back to see for himself, and found his apprehension only too well grounded; the swordwide bridge was gone, displaced by an agency which had been prompt to seek cover—though he confessed himself unable to suggest where that cover had been found.

He gave it up, considering that it were futile to badger his wits for the how and the wherefore. The important fact remained that he was a prisoner in dead Kathiapur, his retreat cut off, and— Here he made a second discovery, infinitely more shocking: his pistol was gone.

Turning back at length, he made his way to the second gateway and from it to the third, under the lewdly sculptured arch of which he stopped and gasped, forgetting as for the first time Kathiapur the Fallen was revealed to him in the awful beauty of its naked desolation.

A wide and stately avenue stretched away from the portals, between rows of dwellings, palaces of marble and stone, tombstones and mausoleums with meaner houses of sun-dried brick and rubble, roofless all and disintegrating in the slow, terrible process of the years.

As Amber moved forward small, alert ghosts rose from the undergrowth and scurried silently thence; a circumstance which made him very unhappy.

The way was difficult and Amber tired. After a while, having seen nothing but the jackals, an owl or two, several thousand bats and a crawling thing which had lurched along in the shadow of a wall some distance away, giving an admirable imitation of a badly wounded man pulling himself over the ground, and making strange guttural noises—Amber concluded to wait for the guide Naraini had promised him. He turned aside and seated himself upon the edge of a broken sandstone tomb. The silence was appalling and for relief he took refuge in cheap irreverence. "Home," he observed, aloud, "never was like this."

A heart-rending sigh from the tomb behind him was followed by a rattle of dislodged rubbish. Amber found himself unexpectedly in the middle of the street, and, without stopping to debate the method of his getting there with such unprecedented rapidity, looked back hopefully to the tomb. At the same moment a black-shrouded figure swept out of it and moved a few paces down the street, then paused and beckoned him with a gaunt arm.

"I wish," said Amber, earnestly, "I had that gun."

The figure was apparently that of a native swathed in black from his head to his heels and seemed the more strikingly peculiar in view of the fact that, as far as Amber could determine, he had neither eyes nor features although his head was without any sort of covering. He gulped over the proposition for an instant, then stepped forward.

"Evidently my appointed cicerone," he considered. "Unquestionably this ghost-dance is excellently stage-managed. . . . Though, of course, I had to pick out that particular tomb."

He followed in the wake of the figure, which sped on with a singular motion, something between a walk and a glide, conscious that his equanimity had been restored rather than shaken by the incident.

He held on in pursuit of the black shadow, passing forsaken temples and lordly pleasure houses, all marble tracery and fretwork, standing apart in what had once been noble gardens, sunken tanks all weed-grown and rank with slime, humbler dooryards and cots on whose hearthstones the fires for centuries had been cold—his destination evidently the temple of the unspeakable Eye.

As they drew nearer the leading shadow forsook the shade of the walls which he seemed to favor, sweeping hastily across a plaza white with moonglare and without pause on into the black, gaping hole beyond the marble arch.

Here for the first time Amber hung back, stopping a score of feet from the door, his nerves a-jangle. He did not falter in his purpose; he was going to enter the inky portal, but . . . would he ever leave it? And the world was sweet to him.

He took firm hold of his reason and went on across the dark threshold, took three uncertain strides into the limitless unknown, and pulled up short, hearing nothing, unable to see a yard before him. Then with a terrific crash like a thunder-clap the great doors swung to behind him. He whirled about with a stifled cry, conscious of a mad desire to find the doors again, took a step or two toward them, paused to wonder if he were moving in the right direction, moved a little to the left, half turned and was lost. Reverberating, the echoes of the crash rolled far away until they were no more than as a whisper adrift in the silence, until that was gone. . . .

Digging his nails into his palms, he waited; and in the suspense of dread began to count the seconds.

One minute . . . two . . . three . . . four . . .

He shifted his weight from one foot to the other. . . .

Seven . . .

He passed a hand across his face and brought it away, wet with perspiration. . . .

Nine . . .

In some remote spot a bell began to toll; at first slowly—clang! . . . clang! . . . clang!—then more quickly, until the roar of its sonorous, gong-like tones seemed to fill all the world and to set it a-tremble. Then, insensibly, the tempo became more sedate, the first clamor of it moderated, and Amber abruptly was alive to the fact that the bell was speaking—that its voice, deep, clear, sound, metallic, was rolling forth again and again a question couched in the purest Sanskrit:

"Who is there? . . . Who is there? . . . Who is there? . . ."

The hair lifted on his scalp and he swallowed hard in the effort to answer; but the lie stuck in his throat; he was not Rutton and . . . and it is very hard to lie effectively when you stand in stark darkness with a mouth dry as dust and your hair stirring at the roots because of the intensely impersonal and aloof accents of an inhuman bell-voice, tolling away out of nowhere.

"Who is there?"

"I should say not. It's all I can do now to get home before daylight," replied the old rounder.—Detroit Free Press.

SHE GOT WHAT SHE WANTED

This Woman Had to Insist Strongly, but it Paid

Chicago, Ill.—"I suffered from a female weakness and stomach trouble, and I went to the store to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but the clerk did not want to let me have it—he said it was no good and wanted me to try something else, but knowing all about it I insisted and finally got it, and I am so glad I did, for it has cured me.

"I know of so many cases where women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I can say to every suffering woman if that medicine does not help her, there is nothing that will."—Mrs. JANETZKI, 2063 Arch St., Chicago, Ill.

This is the age of substitution, and women who want a cure should insist upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound just as this woman did, and not accept something else on which the druggist can make a little more profit.

Women who are passing through this critical period or who are suffering from any of those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of the fact that for thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills. In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Port Arthur's War Scars

So short is the human memory that the scenes of the sanguinary conflict that took place round Port Arthur have almost been forgotten. The glory of Port Arthur has departed, and the attempts to restore the once powerful stronghold of the Russians are slow indeed. The visitor to the battle-scarred forts and hillsides, however, must be struck with the feeling that, to all appearances, the war might have taken place only yesterday. The illustration shows the ruins of Fort Ehrlung, the main parapet of which was undermined and blown up by the Japanese. About 1,100 Japanese and 500 Russians were killed or wounded at this point.

WHO'S WHO IN THIS TANGLE?

When Edward F. Nehrik was arraigned on a lunacy charge at Dayton, Ohio, the other day, a curious family relationship developed. Nehrik is the father by marriage of the woman once his wife, he is the grandfather of his own daughter, while his son is stepfather to the child as well as her brother. Mrs. Nehrik is mother-in-law to her husband. Mrs. John Nehrik, divorced wife of Edward, filed the insanity papers against him. In 1900 she wedded Edward Nehrik and by the union came a daughter, Pearl. In 1906 she was granted a divorce decree and custody of the child. Nehrik's son, John, by his first wife, married his father's divorced wife, or his own stepmother. At the hearing the court declared him sane.

FATIMA'S HAND AS TALISMAN

A favorite talisman among the Mohammedans is the "Lid el Fatima"—the hand of Fatima. Mahomet must have reproduced in silver the hand of his favorite daughter, of that Fatima through whom his blood has descended even to our days, for ever since then every Mohammedan, and especially every Mohammedan woman, has always worn a silver hand. The greater the glory of the saint who consecrated it, the more intense the magic power of the relic over those who put themselves under its protection.

IS ALIVE AFTER "FUNERAL"

After formal funeral services had been held at his former home in Washington, and his near relatives had donned mourning for the man supposed to have met his fate and been buried in far-off India, word was received the other day stating that Bert R. Emrick, a widely known and well-to-do oil man, was alive and well and was planning to start for home within a few days. Emrick went to near Singu, in Upper Burmah, India, about 18 months ago, for the Burmah Oil company. Recently word reached his people by way of the company offices that Emrick had been killed by breaking of a cable at one of the wells. It was afterwards discovered that the original report of the tragedy was a mistake.

GOING TO COLLEGE AT 80

Mrs. A. D. Winship of Racine, Wis., is the oldest university student in the United States. When Mrs. Winship was seventy-eight years old she entered the University of Ohio. She is now eighty years of age, and has completed her freshmen and sophomore years. Her specialty was psychology. At summer school this year Mrs. Winship won a prize for excellence in her studies.

JAPANESE KITE FLIGHTS

In Japan there is an annual feast day for boys, when each house having male children hangs out strings of paper carp, which inflated by the breeze become lifelike monster fish.

"It was on this feast day," says a writer in the Wide World, "that we left Yokohama for Kamakura, once the eastern capital of Japan, now merely a quiet little seaside village.

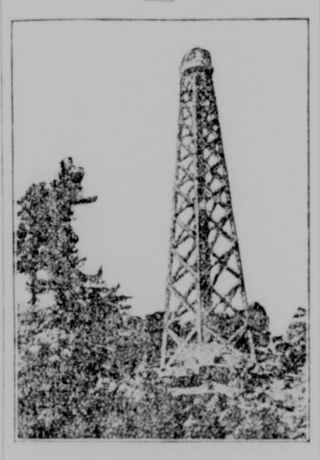
"As it was such an important occasion the whole world made holiday, some families hurried to the seashore to fly their enormous humming kites, from which the parents appeared to derive quite as much enjoyment as the children. The loud hum emitted by the soaring kite as caused by a piece of thin bamboo, which is stretched tightly across from shoulder to shoulder.

"This taut bamboo filament not only acts as a aeolian harp but bends the whole kite, so that its surface is concave instead of being, as in our kites, a plane. The noise when some threescore or so of these monsters are in the air at the same time is deafening.

"The Japanese kite has no tail, but is furnished with numerous long streamers. Great competitions are held by the owners of the kites, and occasionally a mimic battle will be fought in the air, the rival factions endeavoring by means of powdered glass, which has been previously worked into a definte length of the kite strings, to saw through a rival's string, and so bring the vanquished kite tumbling ignominiously to the ground."

NEEDLE ENDS LONG TRIP

A pair of tweezers were used the other day by Edmund C. Gaskill, a lawyer of Atlantic City, to remove a needle that had been in his body twenty-three years. It had worked its way from his knee to his shoulder. He found it there when bathing the shoulder in the belief he had rheumatism. When eight years old, Gaskill fell against his mother, who was sewing, and the needle was jabbed deep in his knee. A doctor failed to find it. It was forgotten when the puncture healed. That the needle took so long in working through his body may be explained by the fact that he is six feet eight inches tall.



VAST RICHES OF CHINA

An astonishing impression of the variety and peculiarity of the natural riches of China is given by the storehouses and factories of the Hankow export firms. Whereas the export of tea, the monopoly of a few large Russian houses, has for some years remained almost stationary, the value of the export of oil seeds from Hankow, to take one example of a comparatively unimportant article, rose from 3.8 million taels in 1907 to 10.5 in 1909.

Boats bring wood tar from the upper Yangtze in big round baskets lined with paper to be refined and remelted in the factories; they bring astonishing masses of the greasy product of the tallow tree used in European technical industries, also cotton and beans, gallnuts, pigs' bristles; also skins, which are sun dried in the yards of the storehouses and packed by means of hydraulic presses for sea transport.

Millions of ducks' eggs are, during the few weeks of the season, manufactured by the hand labor of coolie women and children into masses of pure dried yolk and albumen, smelling like biscuits. The albumen is used in the photographic industry, the yolk in the European sweet stuff manufacture. On the same bank of the Yangtse are the new cold storage houses and the great tobacco factories of foreign firms, and near by are ore refineries, in which antimony, lead and zinc are prepared for export.

LOFTY TOWER TELESCOPE

This is the second tower telescope constructed at the Mount Wilson observatory, in California, from a new design by Professor Hale. The first was 65 feet high, and it was so successful that the larger one here shown was built, which is 150 feet in height, while the well containing the spectograph and spectro-heliograph is 75 feet. By the later instrument photographs can be taken of the whole face of the sun, showing the vapors across its disk. The coelostat and secondary mirrors are mounted at its top, and after reflecting from them the sun's light passes vertically downward on to a lens placed near them on the top of the tower. A horizontal image of the sun, 17 inches in diameter, is thence obtained in a plane near the ground.

LLAMAS IN HARNESS

An interesting attraction in one of the European zoological gardens is a pair of tame llamas that draw passengers about the grounds. They are declared to be the only creatures of their kind in Europe that have been trained for this purpose. The animals draw a light carriage and at a recent test it was shown that they could easily pull a load of 450 pounds. They are quite docile and readily answer to the rein. In their native Andes they are the beasts of burden.

Tournament on The Seine

Every summer the people of Paris and visitors to that city are entertained by the tournaments on the Seine, which have been held for at least 50 years. The banks of the river are crowded with spectators and the contenders for prizes are numerous. The photograph shows one of the tilting contests in which the men with the long poles endeavor to push each other off the boats.

The KITCHEN CABINET

KNOWLEDGE of food is the foundation of housekeeping.

Good food means good health.

BUTTERMILK DISHES.

To keep up the interest in living every little while some new specific for prolonging life, renewing the tissues and preserving beauty springs into popular favor. Buttermilk and sour milk have both been highly praised, and science is experimenting to prove the wonderful tales. For years buttermilk has been recommended by physicians for people troubled with gout, rheumatism or liver troubles. Many times those who cannot retain sweet milk find buttermilk most satisfactory. A glass of iced buttermilk with a sandwich makes a most satisfying and wholesome luncheon. Buttermilk may be used in place of sour milk in cookery, making a richer and finer-grained product. For those fond of buttermilk, the buttermilk soup is a great delicacy. Heat a quart of buttermilk until nearly boiling; do not let it boil or it will curdle. Pour over three well-beaten eggs, season with salt and sugar and serve with a grating of nutmeg on top of each soup plate.

Buttermilk Ginger Cake.—Take a cup of molasses, one well-beaten egg, two-thirds of a cup of buttermilk, a third of a cup of melted shortening, two teaspoonfuls of soda, spices to taste and flour enough to make a batter not too stiff, when it drops like a veil from the spoon it is sufficiently thick.

Buttermilk Spice Cake.—Take two cups of light brown sugar, one-half cup of butter, two cups of buttermilk, two teaspoonfuls of soda, teaspoonful of cinnamon, half a teaspoon of cloves, a pinch of ginger and a grating of nutmeg, two eggs, a cupful each of raisins and currants and sufficient flour to make a heavy batter. The fruit will cause it to fall if it is not stiff enough.

Buttermilk Cookies.—Cream one cup of butter, add two cups of sugar, a cup of buttermilk, a teaspoonful of soda, nutmeg to taste, and sufficient flour to roll. Roll very thin and bake in a hot oven.

Buttermilk heated hot, and adding noodles is another favorite soup.

In the west and middle west many housewives use buttermilk in their bread. Use two cups heated warm, add a yeast cake, a teaspoonful of soda and then proceed as usual in making bread.

PUDDINGS, my friend, do a mission fulfill:
They add to the dinner as well as the bill;
They cause men to wish, with ardor they may,
That the meal which forfeits them came three times a day.

PUDDINGS, OLD AND NEW.

What to have for dessert is the daily question asked by thousands of housewives all over the land. Here is one to try:

Orange Tartlets.—Take two tablespoonfuls of sponge cake crumbs, two tablespoonfuls of cream, a teaspoonful of vanilla, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one egg, the grated rind and juice of an orange and four tablespoonfuls of sugar. Roll out some pastry, cut in rounds and line gem pans with it. Beat the butter to a cream, add the egg well beaten, then the crumbs and flavoring and juice of the orange. Mix well together and put a teaspoonful in the lined gem pans. Bake fifteen minutes in a hot oven.

Caramel Rice Pudding.—Cook a cup of rice in six cups of milk in a double boiler until the rice is soft and the milk has absorbed all it can. Add two cups of sugar, a cup of butter, a teaspoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of flavoring.

Cocoa Fruit Pudding.—Chop two-thirds of a cup of suet and a cup of figs, two and a fourth cups of bread-crumbs in a meat chopper; add a half cup of cocoa, a cup of brown sugar, two eggs, a half cup of milk and a half teaspoonful of salt. Steam three hours and serve with chocolate sauce or sweetened cream whipped.

Don't Be Embarrassed.

Nothing causes a person more embarrassment than the knowledge that some part of their attire needs apology. Dirty linen is the most common and inexcusable fault, and as long as strong rosin soaps are used in the laundry, streaked washables are inevitable.

Hewitt's Easy Task—the original white laundry soap—is the best clean linen guarantee obtainable. Multitudes of women say so, and you'll agree after a trial. Ask your grocer. Five cents a cake.

HANDS BURNED LIKE FIRE

"I can truthfully say Cuticura Remedies have cured me of four long years of eczema. About four years ago I noticed some little pimples coming on my little finger, and not giving it any attention, it soon became worse and spread all over my hands. If I would have them in water for a long time, they would burn like fire and large cracks would come. I could lay a pin in them. After using all the salves I could think of, I went to three different doctors, but all did me no good. The only relief I got was scratching.

"So after hearing so much about the wonderful Cuticura Remedies, I purchased one complete set, and after using them three days my hands were much better. Today my hands are entirely well, one set being all I used." (Signed) Miss Etta Narber, R. F. D. 2, Spring Lake, Mich., Sept. 26, 1910.

Suburban Scbriquets.

Everybody else had lived in the summer colony long enough to name his home for whatever tree or shrub grew most abundantly in the front or back yard. Up and down the road were cottages labeled the Elms, the Wisteria, the Lilacs, and so on through the horticultural guide book. The newcomer had no name for her house, but after studying the tactics for a week she took a survey of the premises and thenceforward dated her correspondence the Rhubarbs.

Folly of Vain Regrets.

The late John W. Gates, an incurable optimist, harped continually on the futility of pessimism. One of Mr. Gates' epigrams, still quoted on the Chicago Stock Exchange, ran:

"He who nurses foolish hopes may be an ass, but he is not such an ass as he who nurses vain regrets."

Cement Talk No. 7

Newspapers print nearly every day the story of some fire disaster involving the complete destruction of great property values and sometimes the loss of human lives. The annual fire losses of the United States are measured by the millions; in fact, it is stated that over two hundred and fifty million dollars worth of property was wiped out by fire in the United States last year. While it is true that the precautions to prevent fire and fire fighting systems are often inadequate, the main trouble lies in flimsy, non-fireproof building construction. Experience has proved that fireproof construction is both practicable and economical. In some industries fireproof building is compelled by law. Reinforced concrete has come to the front as the most important agent in building against fire. The use of cement in building is becoming more and more common, due to its fireproofness, durability and economy. When building anything from the back porch steps to an office building, concrete construction may be safely adopted. The use of Universal Portland Cement in the concrete will insure cement of the best quality possible to manufacture. Universal is handled everywhere by the best dealers.

"The Life Is In the Blood"—"Sins Visited Upon the Children Unto the Third and Fourth Generation."

Mid-Ocean, October 8.—Pastor Russell is enroute for his fall visit to his London charge, full of vigor. Crossing the ocean loses no time for him. He is accompanied by his stenographer, Mr. Rutherford, and through the newspapers preaches weekly to about twelve millions in the United States, Canada, Great Britain and Australia. His text today was, "For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar as an atonement for your souls."—Leviticus xvii, 11.

The trend of all scholars within the past forty years in particular has been away from the Bible. Even those few who still contend for the Bible concede much to the Higher Critics and merely strive to retain a hold upon certain shreds of truth. The Bible is suffering at the hands of Christendom. Or perhaps we would better say, Christendom is suffering from letting loose its hold upon the Bible. The Bible theory, that all the sin and death manifest in the world resulted from Adam's disobedience, is now generally denied. Consequently those who still preach a forgiveness of sins and an escape from the penalty of sin are in the minority. And those who admit that the death of Jesus was necessary as a sin-offering, the Just for the unjust, are extremely few.

Darwin's Evolution theory, that man sprang from a monkey parentage and has been evoluting higher and higher for thousands of years, finds apparent support in the rapid growth of intelligence during the past fifty years. But those who heed the Bible find a more satisfactory explanation in its teaching, that we are in the dawning of a New Dispensation—the Messianic period so long promised of God as the time in which all the families of the earth will be blessed.

The Blood of Atonement.

The Bible theory of man's sin and condemnation to death and of a redemption of Adam's race from the power of death by the blood of Jesus is one consistent narrative. Because one man alone was the original sinner and the sentence came by one, therefore it was possible for Divine mercy to arrange that by the sacrifice of the Righteous One, the Just for the unjust, the entire race of Adam might be judicially freed from the death sentence and be permitted to have a resurrection from the dead and the opportunity of restitution and to approve themselves to God for everlasting life.

This, the Bible theory, lays the whole stress of salvation upon the work of our Redeemer. By it a way of life through resurrection and restitution has been opened up. This is the meaning of our text and is fully concurred in by the Apostle, who says, "Almost all things are by the Law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission" of sins.

Latest Deductions of Science

Scientists now learn not only that different species will not amalgamate, but that different breeds of the same species crossed cannot be maintained, but will revert again to their originals in the third or fourth generation. Undoubtedly this was what troubled Mr. Darwin in his rearing of fancy breeds of pigeons and his inability to maintain the fancy varieties. The same principle is found everywhere at work. Different varieties of peas crossed have produced new varieties only to return in the third or fourth generation to their originals.

Moreover Dr. Thompson proclaims that he finds, in full harmony with our text, that the life is in the blood and that by blood reaction it can readily be determined which animals belong to a certain species and which do not. The custom heretofore has been to classify animals by their bones and nature, which has always been more or less unsatisfactory. The blood is now found to be the sure test and the speedy one.

Third and Fourth Generation

Notice, said Pastor Russell, a text which always seemed to us hard and cruel, but which we find, on the contrary, to be merciful and gracious. It reads, "I am a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the parents upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate Me."

The life is in the blood. The law of heredity carries impurity and disease through the blood in micro-organisms. Were it not for the Divine provision that these small organisms of disease or blood impurity will die out in the third or fourth generation, our race long since would have been wiped off the face of the earth. The Divine arrangement that infectious germ diseases such as syphilis will die out in the third or fourth generation is a most merciful one.

Thus God shows mercy unto thousands of them that love Him and seek to keep the Divine commands. Thus the theories of man crumble, one after another as the decades slip by and as they have been doing for centuries.

Order of Publication.

In the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland.

In the matter of the application of a petition for the adjudication of Frank F. Goss as a bankrupt.

The object of the petition in this case is to have the said Frank F. Goss adjudged an involuntary bankrupt.

The petition states that the said Frank F. Goss was engaged in business in Oakland, in Garrett county, in the State of Maryland, and was indebted unto the Independent Brewing Company of Pittsburg, the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company of Baltimore City, and the Malamphy Bottling Works of Cumberland, Maryland, in various sums of money, and that being so indebted he closed up his place of business in Oakland, Maryland, and absconded and left the State of Maryland owing a large number of debts to various people, who have attached his said property and have taken other proceedings, by which his said goods and property are about to be sacrificed, and the interest of the petitioners are greatly impaired and are made liable to a total loss and that he suffered, or permitted, while insolvent, a creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings and not having at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference, and that all of his said goods and other property are about to be disposed of by the other creditors of the said Frank F. Goss and taat the only remedy of the said petitioners is in this Honorable Court, and that the said Frank F. Goss is now a non resident of the State of Maryland and the summons against him in this Court has been returned non-est, and without an order of publication it is impossible to get process upon.

It is thereupon this 26th day of September, 1911, ordered by the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, that the petitioners or plaintiffs in this cause by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of two successive weeks before the 16th day of October, 1911, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of the said bill or petition, and warning him to appear in the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, in Cumberland, Allegany county, Maryland, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 25th day of October, 1911, to show cause if any he has why he should not be adjudicated a bankrupt as prayed.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 35. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1911 NUMBER 32

A ROUSING REPUBLICAN MEETING LAST NIGHT

WHICH WAS ADDRESSED BY THE STATE CANDIDATES

Perhaps the largest attended and most enthusiastic meeting of Republicans ever held in Western Maryland, or at least within the confines of Garrett county, was that last night in the Empire Theatre, at Oakland, which was addressed by the Republican candidates for State offices, Hon. Phillips Lee Goldsborough, for Governor; Hon. John H. Cunningham, for Comptroller, and Hon. Morris A. Soper, for Attorney General.

The three gentlemen above named arrived in Oakland on train No. 55 from a two days' whirlwind campaign of Allegany county, where they met hundreds of voters and strengthened their defenses until they are almost impregnable.

Upon arriving in Oakland the party was met at the station by Chairman N. U. Bond of the Republican committee, who entertained the gentlemen at dinner at his residence on Oak street, where an informal reception was tendered them.

The meeting at night was ably presided over by Mr. Scott T. Jones, of Oakland, and the following were selected as vice presidents of the meeting: Messrs. Herman Steiding, Julius Littman, L. H. Friend, George J. Kolb, Arthur Chisholm, James W. Friend, N. R. Selby, Chas. Younkin, C. D. Hershberger, Henry Leatham, G. L. Michaels, Jacob Stump, Henry Barnard, State Senator Speicher, Edward Margroff, T. O. Collier, W. A. Smith, Elijah Friend, Sherman Savage, Capt. J. A. Hayden, G. D. White, Henry Smouse, E. C. Harvey, I. W. Abernathy, James Aronhalt, Jonas Yutzy, James Finzel, Geo. Blocher, T. B. Layman, S. P. Specht, Wm. Miller, C. A. Ashby, H. S. Coleman, W. H. Jacobs, G. B. McMillan, Asa Orendorf, Christian Brenneman, Jonas Bittinger, Dr. H. P. Copeland, Daniel Wilson, H. L. Price, E. E. Sollars, Henry Friend and Austin Brown. Messrs. George W. Legge and Benj. H. Sincell were the secretaries of the meeting.

Chairman Jones introduced the speakers, Mr. Goldsborough closing the meeting, who complimented the people of Garrett county upon their evident prosperity and thanked them for the hospitality shown him upon the present occasion and preceding occasions when he visited this part of Maryland.

Entering earnestly upon his address Mr. Goldsborough said in part:

"There is one issue now which overtops all in the campaigns," he declared, "and that is the issue of fair elections. As to this Republicans can point with pride to their party's record. The party came into power in 1895 and found in force election laws which had been made by Democrats and often use by Democrats to cheat Republicans out of offices to which they had been fairly chosen, and to defeat the will of the Maryland people.

"We gave back to the people of Maryland self-government through an honest election law, a law under which Maryland could elect a Democratic Governor in 1899 and yet give its vote to a Republican President in 1900. We did not load the dice, we did not stack the cards. We played the game fairly and above board, and when the ballots told us the people wanted a change we were sorry, but did nothing unfair or tricky or unworthy of honest men to prevent the people from having the change they wanted."

The Republican candidate compared the course of the Republicans to that of the Democrats, who began to tamper and manipulate the election laws, attempting to cheat lawful voters, he said, at every turn.

"A new order of administering the affairs of the State is demanded by the people," he continued. "There must be an immediate responsiveness to the will of the people by public servants and no further enactment or administration of law for the benefit of any political party. The progress and prosperity of our State has been hampered by excessive partisanship in the conduct of its affairs. Instead of exercising the functions of government for the benefit of the greatest number they have been exercised for the building up and perpetuation of a minority which constitute the dominant ring.

"The extent which we have suffered from such government is apparent to every observant citizen. Many of the people have begun to believe that it is impossible to remove political subserviency and compromise from our statutes and their execution. There is, however, no excuse for believing that Maryland may not obtain relief through honesty and progressiveness in its government and fully emancipate itself from partisan selfishness in the great public business. The people have been have been far too tolerant and long suffering in the face of the abuse, but they now see how costly and unnecessary is the sacrifice which they have allowed. Waste of public money and resources must be stopped at once and the business of the State placed on a basis of honesty and economy.

"The most approved system of accounting should be adopted in all of the departments of the State, and these departments should be reorganized in such a manner as to bring about uniformity and economy in operation. We should have a more efficient and comprehensive method of auditing the accounts of all officials who collect or expend funds, and also a system of publicity that would expose the handling of every dollar to the light of immediate scrutiny.

"The increase in the State tax rate from 17½ cents during the administration of Lloyd Lowndes to the prevailing rate of 22 cents has not been justified by any corresponding benefits which it has produced. An increase in the assessable basis should result in a decrease in the rate of taxation unless such failure to decrease is accounted for by extraordinary improvements or activities in behalf of the public. No one will contend that the efficiency of the government has been increased by the ascendancy of the ring, which is now, happily, declining. The dissipation of the increased revenues must therefore be ascribed, in large measure, to extravagence, mismanagement and such misappropritions as were witnessed at the last session of the Legislature, when thousands of dollars were squandered in rewards to political retainers.

"A thoroughly business administration of the State's affairs, uncontaminated by the taint of partisanship, will result in a decrease in the tax rate. Our expense account is too high. The time has come when the taxpayers must no longer be subjected to the devious extortions of the corruption fund."

Mr. Soper said:

"In his speech at Fairview accepting the Democratic nomination for Governor, in an assumption of virtue, Senator Gorman declared that whatever else might be said against him no one could assert that he had ever told at untruth or broken a promise. We expected, therefore, that his utterances on the stump would be models of accuracy and conservatism. But consider one statement which, judging from the newspaper reports, he has made in every speech delivered in the campaign. He says that Mr. Goldsborough became the Republican nominee because one man in Baltimore gave him permission, and that the members of the Republican party had no opportunity to say if they wanted him.

"The real facts in the case are matters of public record and are well known to Mr. Gorman. Under the primary law, Mr. Goldsborough filed the declaration of his intention to stand for the Republican nomination in each of the 23 counties of Maryland and in Baltimore city, every Republican in Maryland had the same privilege under the law, but no one desired to enter the contest.

"Is it not to Mr. Goldsborough's credit that the individual members of his party, which is composed of nearly 100,000 voters, were a unit upon the proposition that he was the one best fitted for the nomination? Why does Mr. Gorman twist the facts and grow so foolhardy as to draw attention to the bitter primary in his own party in the course of which the most prominent Democrats in Maryland stigmatized him as unworthy to be Governor of the State."

Deer Park Village Improvement Society.

The Deer Park Village Improvement Society is planning and arranging for Fall work. Much has been accomplished in the past, but there is considerable yet to do. Certain parts of the road improvements require attention before the winter arrives. These and other matters were brought up and fully discussed at the meeting of the society held in Deer Park last Monday night.

A great deal of road building in and near the town was done early in the year and Mayor W. W. Hennen had the support of the Town Council and other taxpayers in the work. Mr. and Mrs. J. Swan Frick, Col. and Mrs. Geo. Truesdell, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Mitchell, Mrs. G. W. Haulenbeek and others, have been active in the work of the society.

Mr. Grimes, of Glamorgan estate has given the material in a stone fence for a continuation of the road building, and Mayor Hennen has stipulated that it will be replaced by a good and well constructed wire fence. Visitors from other parts of Garrett county have been to Deer Park to inspect Mayor Hennen's road building and have expressed satisfaction with the work already done. Mr. Dixon and some other gentlemen have been over from Oakland. Deer Park is proud of the work accomplished.

At a recent meeting of the Society, W. W. Hennen was elected president; Wm. Miller, vice president; Chas A. Ashby, Treasurer, and Jack Grimes, Secretary.

AN ENJOYABLE OCCASION

A Good Dinner, Excellent Speeches and a Social Evening was Spent.

The "booster" dinner served last Friday night by the ladies of the Lutheran church here to the business men of Oakland, Mountain Lake Park and Loch Lynn Heights, and to the members of the Civic Club of Oakland, at which nearly seventy were present, was a most enjoyable occasion.

The reputation of the ladies of the Lutheran church as excellent cooks was maintained to the fullest degree, the menu being up to the usual standard and served in splendid style.

Lieut. E. S. West was toastmaster and presided with dignity and grace. The speakers who responded to the several toasts were Mr. G. S. Hamill, who spoke upon the progress and needs of Garrett county; Mr. W. R. Offutt, Rev. J. M. Davis and Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton. Representing the Civic Club Miss Tecla Fundenburg outlined what that organization has accomplished and what it hopes to do in the future.

At the conclusion of the dinner a committee was appointed to meet this afternoon for the purpose of organizing a a permanent business men's association and to map out plans for the publication of literature to exploit the great possibilities of Garrett county as an agricultural and horticultural section.

George Smith Captured.

George Smith, formerly of near Deer Park, who was sentenced to serve a term in the House of Correction for larceny, and who escaped from that institution shortly after he had been taken down there by the Sheriff, was captured at Fairmont last Friday night by Deputy Sheriff Shartzer and was brot to Oakland the same evening. He will be taken to the Cut some time this week by Sheriff Shartzer to serve the remainder of his term.

The "SEE AMERICA FIRST" Crusade

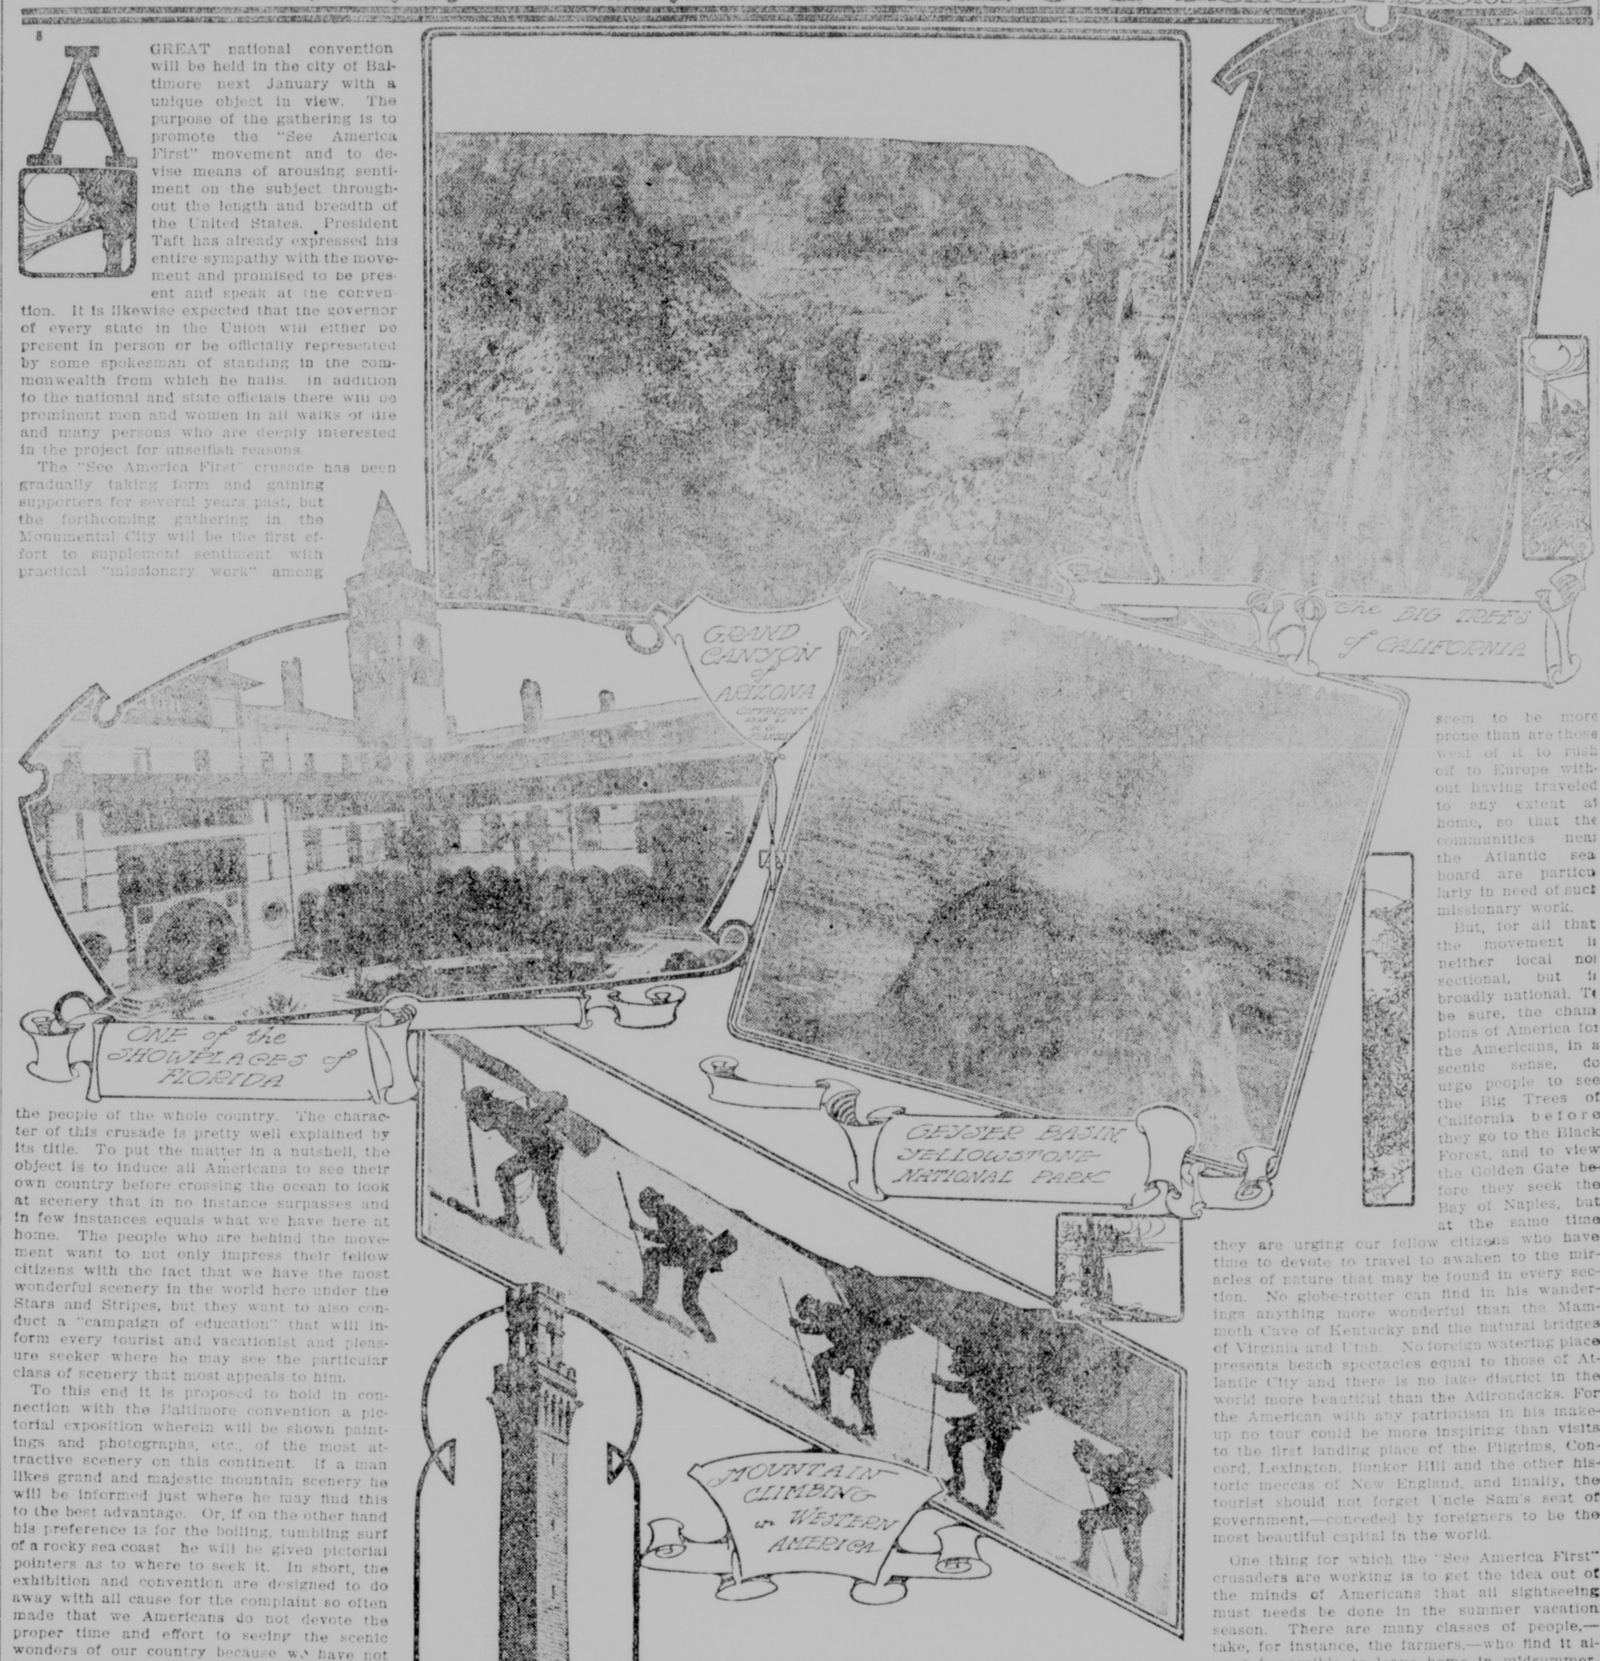
A GREAT national convention will be held in the city of Baltimore next January with a unique object in view. The purpose of the gathering is to promote the "See America First" movement and to devise means of arousing sentiment on the subject throughout the length and breadth of the United States. President Taft has already expressed his entire sympathy with the movement and promised to be present and speak at the convention. It is likewise expected that the governor of every state in the Union will either be present in person or be officially represented by some spokesman of standing in the commonwealth from which he hails. In addition to the national and state officials there will be prominent men and women in all walks of life and many persons who are deeply interested in the project for unselfish reasons.

The "See America First" crusade has been gradually taking form and gaining supporters for several years past, but the forthcoming gathering in the Monumental City will be the first effort to supplement sentiment with practical "missionary work" among the people of the whole country. The character of this crusade is pretty well explained by its title. To put the matter in a nutshell, the object is to induce all Americans to see their own country before crossing the ocean to look at scenery that in no instance surpasses and in few instances equals what we have here at home. The people who are behind the movement want to not only impress their fellow citizens with the fact that we have the most wonderful scenery in the world here under the Stars and Stripes, but they want to also conduct a "campaign of education" that will inform every tourist and vacationist and pleasure seeker where he may see the particular class of scenery that most appeals to him.

To this end it is proposed to hold in connection with the Baltimore convention a pictorial exposition wherein will be shown paintings and photographs, etc., of the most attractive scenery on this continent. If a man likes grand and majestic mountain scenery he will be informed just where he may find this to the best advantage. Or, if on the other hand his preference is for the boiling, tumbling surf of a rocky sea coast he will be given pictorial pointers as to where to seek it. In short, the exhibition and convention are designed to do away with all cause for the complaint so often made that we Americans do not devote the proper time and effort to seeing the scenic wonders of our country because we have not been sufficiently informed as to how much there is worth seeing.

Patriotic loyalty has inspired many of the prominent men who are taking up this "See America First" propaganda—a feeling that it is a shame to see Uncle Sam's citizens wandering off to the uttermost parts of the world to view scenery the equal of which they could find on this side of the Atlantic and which they might enjoy with none of the incidental discomforts that come to a stranger in a strange land, struggling with a language and a money system he does not understand. However, there is a yet more potent or at least more practical reason for the activity in the awakening of our brainy men to the menace to be found in the yearly drain of American gold into foreign coffers. Each succeeding season sees new and larger steamers added to the trans-Atlantic passenger-carrying fleet and millions upon millions of dollars of American money is taken to Europe by the tourists who rush eastward by the thousand. Were it not for the untold wealth that is thus handed over to European railroads and hotel proprietors, shopkeepers and all the other purveyors to the globe-trotters, the balance of trade would always be heavily in our favor. Great Britain and the various continental countries are compelled to buy heavily every year of our food stuffs and cotton and other commodities, but the sums set down, in consequence on the credit side of our ledger are usually counterbalanced by the total of the money spent abroad by Americans on pleasure bent.

The public-spirited citizens who have enrolled in the "See America First" crusade hope to influence some people by moral suasion to stay at home and enjoy our own scenic feast instead of seeking a foreign substitute. They realize, however, that for the most part they must use some other argument than patriotism. The man or woman with money saved up for a trip or a vacation is likely to go wherever he or she believes that they can get the most for their money without regard to the nationality of the people who rake in the shekels. To convert such a person to the "See America First" doctrine it is necessary to prove to him that he can actually receive as much for his money in the way of travel, education, diversion and enjoyment here in the land of the free as he can across the big pond, where so large a portion of the people make their living out of the expenditures of American tourists.



This, then, is the aim of the crusaders who are singing the praises of the opportunities and the comforts of home. Nor do they lack for inspiration in debate if any person essays to question their claims. If a skeptic does not admit conversion when they point how superior are Niagara Falls, Yellowstone Park, the Yosemite and the Grand Canyon to any scenic masterpieces throughout the whole length and breadth of Europe, he can be depended upon to have to haul down his colors when they marshal facts and figures to prove how much more marvelous are the Rockies than are the famed Alps; how our beloved Mississippi outshines the storied Rhine in romance and how the thousand-mile inland water highway of the Great Lakes puts to shame the Mediterranean in the novelty of the experiences afforded the voyager who may, incidently, experience more thrills when passing through the greatest locks in the world at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., than he could hope for in gazing at the rock at Gibraltar.

Many people in the east have gained the erroneous impression that the "See America First" crusade is solely a movement designed to induce the people of the east to visit the west and particularly the Pacific coast. That such an impression has gained credence may be attributed to two circumstances. For one thing many of the most notable scenic wonders of the world are located in western America, so that naturally there is sound logic in advising people to see them before risking seasickness to view something not half so impressive. Secondly, there is the circumstance that the people east of the Mississippi river seem to be more prone than are those west of it to rush off to Europe without having traveled to any extent at home, so that the communities near the Atlantic seaboard are particularly in need of such missionary work.

But, for all that the movement is neither local nor sectional, but is broadly national. To be sure, the champions of America for the Americans, in a scenic sense, do urge people to see the Big Trees of California before they go to the Black Forest, and to view the Golden Gate before they seek the Bay of Naples, but at the same time they are urging our fellow citizens who have time to devote to travel to awaken to the miracles of nature that may be found in every section. No globe-trotter can find in his wanderings anything more wonderful than the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky and the natural bridges of Virginia and Utah. No foreign watering place presents beach spectacles equal to those of Atlantic City and there is no lake district in the world more beautiful than the Adirondacks. For the American with any patriotism in his make-up no tour could be more inspiring than visits to the first landing place of the Pilgrims, Concord, Lexington, Bunker Hill and the other historic meccas of New England, and finally, the tourist should not forget Uncle Sam's seat of government,—conceded by foreigners to be the most beautiful capital in the world.

One thing for which the "See America First" crusaders are working is to get the idea out of the minds of Americans that all sightseeing must needs be done in the summer vacation season. There are many classes of people,—take, for instance, the farmers,—who find it almost impossible to leave home in midsummer, but who could very readily take a trip in the autumn or winter. Efforts are being made to point out to these people that there is just as much which can be seen to the best advantage in winter as there is in the category of summer show places. Indeed, it is only at such times, when it is chilly or snowing in the north and west, that one may enjoy maximum comfort in quaint old New Orleans, in Florida or in southern California,—all of them districts worthy to vie with anything in southern France and Italy.

The broad policy of the "See America First" movement calls upon its devotees to not only induce people to give New World scenery the preference (and Canada is, of course, included), but also to do everything in their power to make traveling in America comfortable and to reduce the cost. Indeed, the claim that one may travel more cheaply in Europe than in the United States is one of the arguments invariably advanced by people who argue for foreign travel. However, the greatest need of American tourist regions is more good hotels,—not necessarily high-priced fashionable hotels, but good, clean, neatly-kept hostelries where the traveler who is not a multimillionaire may obtain wholesome, well-cooked food and a comfortable bed at a price that is not two or three times what his earnings would be for the day's labor if he were back home. There has been great improvement in this direction in late years, but there is plenty of room for further betterment. Another need is lines of reasonable priced public coaches traversing regions not traversed by the railroads and which in many instances are now a closed book to people who cannot afford the luxury of an automobile. Coaches such as are operated in Yellowstone Park and on Gettysburg battlefield might well be introduced in other scenic or historic districts.

Powder Grows Human Skin

The market for human skin is going to pieces. Where it once commanded $25 a square inch up it bids fair to be soon just human skin, with no value except to its original possessor. Heroic husbands, fathers, sons and sweethearts who bravely let themselves be stripped of their hides to cover some death threatening gap on the bodies of their beloved may soon cease to have opportunity for such devotion.

A little red powder one can get in any paint store is astounding the surgeons with its performances as a substitute for the heroes and their skins, the New York correspondent of the Denver Republican writes.

Scarlet red is its name and a dollar's worth will keep a busy surgery in stock for months. It is mixed with vaseline or other components as a salve and applied to the edges of the gaping wounds.

Then you can almost see the skin grow. Dr. John Staige Davis, a noted surgeon of Johns Hopkins in Baltimore, says almost as much, but in the careful language of his profession. He tells of scarlet red growing new skin at the rate of three millimeters in forty-eight hours on one of his patients. His report on its use in Johns Hopkins hospital, published in a medical journal, did much to bring the strange little aniline dye to surgical notice here and elsewhere.

It was taken up in the post graduate and the German hospitals here last spring. Then its use was experimental. Now it is uniformly used in every case where burns, wounds or ulcers have stripped the epidermis from any area of a human body.

"The results have been astonishing, even baffling," said Dr. F. William Stelchmann of the post graduate, and also connected with the German hospital.

"There is just one thing about its use, however, that should be generally known," Dr. Steichman said. "Where surgeons in the dispensary have used it and applied the dressings the results have been marvelous. Where patients have used it themselves the results have been unsatisfactory."

Unpopularity Demanded.

"How did you come to elect that man? He never seemed to make friends."

"We didn't want a man who makes friends," replied Farmer Corntossel, "as much as one who don't object to enemies. We wanted a watchdog of the treasury."

Altitudinous.

Jack—So you had a high time on your vacation?

Tom—Yes, I was up in the mountains.

Man's Capacity Only Limit

By Rev. BARRY B. HALL
of Temple Baptist Church, Minneapolis, Minn.

God blesses man at every opportunity and furnishes every real joy he is able to appropriate. We enjoy so little, not because of God's unwillingness to bless, but because of our inability to receive and appropriate his blessings. This old world is big with blessings to him who has the eyes to see them. Thousands stand before the most beautiful landscapes and see nothing but hills and valleys. To the singing of the birds and the beauties of nature they are deaf, and blind, and dumb. A missionary saw African boys playing with diamonds of rarest value. They were rocks and nothing more to the boys.

Before the days of Franklin the air was as full of electricity as now, but our fathers went on burning candles, deprived of the telephone and the telegraph, because none of them had the eyes to see it. All of our modern inventions were as possible to our fathers as they are to us; yet they plowed with crude instruments when they could have ridden the cultivator; they rode in ox carts when they could have ridden on the lightning express, only because they had no eyes to see these blessings and to appropriate them. And the world is big with inventions today, involving great fortunes to him who is able to see them, and the business world is big with marvelous opportunities for those who have the eyes to see. Thus it is clear that material blessings are limited only by man's ability to see and appropriate them.

But material blessings are real blessings only to those who have the eyes to see them aright. If they see wealth as an opportunity to serve their fellows through the channels of legitimate business or philanthropy it will bless them, but if they see it through carnal eyes, simply an opportunity for the gratification of the flesh, it will cause them to forget God and brotherliness, and to grow cold and haughty. It will lead them into a mad rush for pleasure, causing them to commit involuntary suicide, burning out the candle of life at both ends. To leave the ordinary young man $50,000 is equal to a through ticket to hell. Wealth is a curse to the carnally-minded. It must be seen through spiritual eyes before it becomes a real blessing.

This is a glorious or horrid old world, according to one's point of view. If his point of view is carnal instead of Christian, he will complete this life in disapointment; but if he views this world with the good and not the evil eye, he will see a grand old world, even its clouds having a silver lining. One's point of view determines whether children are a blessing or a curse. If he has been reared to view them as an evil or misfortune, he will be able to find no pleasure in them; but if he sees them as God-given and a blessing, he can say, as did the woman of old, "these are my jewels." One man says, "Isn't it a shame I have to work for a living?" Another says: "Isn't it a blessing I have a chance to earn a living?" Some say: "Isn't it a shame that people have to get sick?" Others, "Isn't it glorious that sickness is only temporary and good health is the normal state."

A man's point of view determines his happiness. He must view things from the spiritual rather than from the carnal point of view to be satisfied and happy. Thousands are happy with little and others are miserable with much. Jesus explained this by the parable of the rich fool, who thought he had all he needed to make him happy because his barns were filled with plenty. And the fools are not all dead yet; because there are thousands who think that all they need to be happy is a fine home, thoroughly furnished, and lots of money. These poor, unfortunate people have not the ability to see that material possessions never did and never will make anyone contented and happy. He who has not learned to be happy with little would not be happy with much. This world is big with blessings, other than money, if one is only able to see and appropriate them. The only pleasures which really satisfy, that give contentment, peace and happiness, are spiritual; and material blessings are only a curse unless they are spiritually enjoyed. This old world is so big with blessings, material and spiritual, that there is an abundance for all, and all of its blessings are only limited by our ability to see and enjoy them aright.

"Thy Neighbor."

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." We are all willing to love our neighbors. But that is just where God tests us. He gives us neighbors whom we naturally would not choose in order to teach us to act upon the real neighbor rule of helping the man next us, whoever he is. Until we do this, our neighborliness is but a sham, not the Christian kind.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

Lovers of Evil.

Now and then there is a man who appears in every community, who does evil because he loves evil. He goes about sowing the community with misunderstandings, undermining men, poisoning men's thoughts, stirring up bitterness and sowing tares of evil on every side.—Rev. N. D. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

WHAT DR. WAHRER THINKS

Reads Paper at Chicago Meeting on "Intemperance and Life Insurance," Reviewing Drink Habit.

A paper on "Intemperance and Life Insurance" was read by Dr. C. H. Wahrer, at a meeting of the Tri-State Medical society, held in Chicago. He reviewed the subject from the medical standpoint, that there is a serious impairment of vitality by the habitual use of alcoholic drinks. In the course of the paper he said:

"Whatever difference of opinion there may be between the temperance fanatic and the tippler, one thing is certain; the financiers all over the world who have their money invested in life insurance companies, all agree that drinkers belong in the class of hazardous risks, and their conclusions are right. Physicians, hygienists and physiologists are now a unit on the conclusion that even moderate drinking men can be of no benefit to any one, that it may easily, without straining a point, lead to immoderate drinking, and that the latter, in the majority of cases, is injurious to health, not only jeopardizing the best interests of the habitue, but becoming a serious menace to him in case he should ever get sick. The outlook for a man who should fall ill with pneumonia, typhoid fever, dysentery, nephritis, heart disease, diabetes and affections of the liver, is bad enough under the best of circumstances, but if the patient is an intemperate man, his hope for recovery is reduced very materially, and the fight for life is desperate if not hopeless. Every physician who has had much emergency hospital practice or even private practice among the intemperate, can give his assent to these statements. "We further know that men who follow hazardous occupations are frequently liable to injuries, in case the party injured is temperate, his chances for recovery from the injuries are far in excess of the man who uses intoxicants.

"The matter seems to be of sufficient importance to those interested in life insurance, both as individuals who carry the policies as well as the companies who insure them. I might fortify my contentions by compiling tables and furnishing data from most unquestioned sources to show the evils of intemperance, the danger to the lives of those who look too frequently upon the wine cup when it is crimson, the misery entailed to the indulger as well as to those connected with him, the financial and moral wrecks resulting from such lives. But this is not necessary, for the class I am addressing and the purposes of this paper. All of you know from ripe experience that my assertions are true, not only from observation, but because they have been proven so scientifically, no matter what your own habits and practices are in the use of the flowing bowl."

RACE SUICIDE AND LIQUOR

Degradation Seen, Not Only in Those Who Drink, but It Is Blight on Children Following.

The curse of liquor is seen not only in the degradation of those who indulge in it, but it is especially a blight on the children who follow them. This fact should arouse all who have any regard for the weak and helpless. Speaking of drink and infanticide a note in the Lutheran Standard says: "Eighty years ago when the Norwegians were a drinking people, 300 of every 1,000 children born died before they reached their first birthday anniversary. Now, since they are a sober people, the ratio is 80 and 90 per 1,000. In Bavaria, where the drink evil still exists, of every 1,000 born, 300 do not survive a year. Of the 237,000 born last year 6,500 were still-born, and 69,000 died within a year." This is race suicide and nation suicide in such horrible proportions as to blanch the cheeks and appal the hearts of all who are not dead to all that is good.

Dangerous Companion.

Intemperance is a dangerous companion. It throws people off their guard, betrays them to a great many indecencies, to ruinous passions, to disadvantages in fortune; makes them discover secrets, drive foolish bargains, engage in gambling, and often stagger from the tavern to the stews.—Colton.

Misuse of Property.

No man has a right to use his property in such manner as shall injure the life or property of another, and the consent of the party injured is no mitigation of the offense.—Blackstone.

Horace on Liquor.

The body, overcharged with the excess of yesterday, weighs down the mind together with itself, and fixes to the earth that particle of the divine spirit.—Horace.

Makes Him Squirm.

When you hear a man defend the liquor business, ask him what benefit the saloon is to a community and watch him squirm.

Saloons Depend on Boys.

The saloon depends on boys for business, but who wants to give his boys that the saloon may prosper?

Fireman's Helmet

Photograph by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

THERE is something deliciously incongruous in a maiden whose mission it is to ignite the flame of love, wearing a fireman's helmet of dainty hue and material.

This "helmet," which has reached these shores by way of Paris, is bound to become a prime favorite, not only by reason of its chicness, but also because it is so entirely adaptable to practically any caiffure. As will be seen by the picture, it has a deep dip back and front and is shallow at the sides so as to allow of the hair showing. A white cockade worn at the right side gives the necessary height effect. The crown is of lattice work braid. The hat may be worn at any slope that suits the face contour of its owner.

RETURN TO LACE BLOUSE

Well-Dressed Women Realize the Possibilities of This Most Charming Garment.

The Irish lace blouse, simply fashioned to show the beautiful pattern of the lace, is a great favorite still with well dressed women, and there is every indication that the summer vogue of real lace will be carried far into the coming season. Many of the newest evening gowns are elaborately flounced with lace.

At the moment one of the most fashionable laces is chantilly, which has endless possibilities as a veiling. A very favorite combination is black and white, and the smart afternoon frock and evening toilet is carried out in white charmeuse or crepe, veiled with fine black chantilly. Sometimes the tunic is of chantilly, and instead of clinging to the tight-fitting skirt of yesterday this lace tunic meets a frock of valenciennes frills or a deep flounce of chantilly.

Irish point de venise and filet are used for flat trimmings, and some very charming effects are produced in finely darned filet.

GIRL'S FROCK OF BATISTE

This dainty frock for a girl from fourteen to seventeen years old is of white dotted batiste, trimmed with narrow ruffles of the material and baby irish insertion. The girdle, prettily knotted at the side, is of liberty.

The dress is made up over taffeta or some imitation silk.

A New Model.

Among new models might be mentioned the draped cutaway, and one which fastens high over the bust at the left side, with both edges curved to a rounded point at the center back, then faced all the way on the outside, with self-material.

COIFFURE HIDES UGLY EAR

Present Style Lends Itself to Those Afflicted—Much May Be Done in Infancy.

The girl with an ugly ear should rejoice in the present style of coiffure, for it is easy to disguise her defect. Hair is draped low on the sides, but unless you wish to be thought earless or deformed, do not draw your hair too low.

A noted French beauty specialist has said that a woman adds much to her charm by half concealing her ears, and few Frenchwomen would draw the hair straight up from the ears in the fashion that Americans adopt.

The same authority states that every woman who would look young should put a daub of rouge on the lobe of the ear and should be careful not to wear earrings if they harden the lines of the face or make it appear broader.

If one has an ugly ear or an ugly hand it is better unadorned, though sometimes a distorted or badly shaped lobe is half concealed by circular earrings.

The present day hat is friendly to the ugly ear, as one can tuck bunches of flowers, rosettes or lace frills under the brim. It is easy to adjust velvet streamers so they fall over the ears.

If ears are badly shaped little can be done to remedy them—art is the sole hope; but if they stand out, some of the muscles may be cut. This should never be done save by a surgeon, and one who is a specialist.

Mothers have much to answer for in permitting outstanding ears on children. It is carelessness or ignorance not to use ear straps during the formative period. There are several good varieties sold. Babies should not acquire the habit of playing with the lobe of the ear or of sleeping with it twisted under, as harm can be done to the best shaped organ in this way.

The flaming ear is trying and, if not caused by digestive or blood troubles, the colorfulness should be blotted out by powder.

For Good Dressers.

In the matter of being well dressed it must be remembered that the whole effect can be ruined by the amount and kind of jewelry worn. It must be of the right kind and chosen with an eye to the general effect. For instance, with a tailored suit the greatest simplicity shuld be maintained, any jewelry worn merely carrying out the idea of severe tailor made. Rings of heavy masculine type only, practical pins, pearls if any necklace is worn. On the other hand, the intensely feminine effect is heightened if with a drooping hat, lingerie frock and fancy slippers are added a dainty necklace, frivolous chain, pendant earrings and purely feminize rings. With an evening dress anything becoming is allowable.

To Keep on Pumps.

Fasten a small piece of elastic two inches long across the heel inside. Attach the ends only. When the pump is drawn on, the elastic stretches over the ball of the heel and prevents its slipping off. Fasten other pieces of elastic on either side of the instep, so as to be stretched when pump is on. This prevents it gapping at the sides. —Woman's National Weekly.

A REMARKABLE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA

Munyon's Stomach Treatment Performing Miracles.

MUNYON TELLS YOU HOW TO GET WELL FREE OF CHARGE

"A few days ago I received a letter from a young man, who states he is 28 years of age, and has occupied several important positions, but owing to indigestion and inability to sleep he has been unable to concentrate his mind upon his work and has consequently been discharged on the ground of neglect of duty. He goes on to say that he is a young man of steady habits, but for years he has suffered from dyspepsia, which has so affected his nerves that he is unable to sleep, and that it is not neglect upon his part, nor lack of interest in the business, but simply physical weakness. He asks my advice in this matter.

"For the benefit of a large number of those similarly situated I propose to answer this letter publicly, hoping that it may be the means of helping many who may be affected in this way.

"In the first place, the stomach must be made well before the nerves can be made strong. The nerves must be made strong before one can sleep well. No one is capable of doing his best who is in any way troubled with insomnia or any form of nervousness. The greatest generals have been men of iron nerve and indomitable will. They have had perfect digestion, being able to eat well, and digest all they ate.

"It is said that Napoleon lost the battle of Waterloo because of a fit of indigestion. Grant's enormous reserve power was due to a well stomach. Abraham Lincoln said that 'he did not know that he had a stomach.' Grover Cleveland, it is said, could work 18 hours a day, eat a hearty meal at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, go to bed and sleep soundly until 9 o'clock and get up refreshed, ready for a new day's work.

"Pres. Taft is another type of healthy manhood. Who thinks for one moment that he would be the President of the United States today had he been a dyspeptic or affected with some nervous ailment? I claim that two-thirds of all the failures in professional and business life are due to weak and deranged stomachs.

"No business house would care to employ a dyspeptic representative to sell goods for them on the road. One-half the men who stand behind counters today, earning from $12 to $15 a week, will never get beyond these figures, for the reason that they are physically weak. They lack the nerve power and commanding strength that come from a good, sound stomach.

"No one cares to hear a dyspeptic preacher. No matter how pious he may be, he is bound to reflect his bilious and jaundiced condition. He will unconsciously inoculate his hearers with his melancholy feelings.

"No one would think of entrusting an important legal case in the hands of a dyspeptic lawyer, any more than he would care to entrust his own life, or that of a dear one, in the hands of a physician who is nervous, irritable or a dyspeptic. Men must have good digestion, strong nerves and vital manhood in order to render a clean, clear-cut decision either in medicine, law or business.

"I believe that more than half of the divorces can be traced to ill health. I want every dyspeptic to try my stomach treatment, for it corrects nearly all forms of indigestion and nervousness. It makes old stomachs almost as good as new. Its marvelous power for digesting food and getting the best out of it makes for good rich, red blood. This, in turn, strengthens the nerves, builds up the general system, and will surely prolong life and make it a pleasure to live and do the things allotted to us."

Professor Munyon makes no charge for consultation or medical advice; not a penny to pay. Address Prof. J. M. Munyon, Munyon's Laboratories, Fifty-third and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

Not a Bit.

"In getting married Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe showed very little consideration for the public."

"Why so?"

"There's no fun in watching a man and his wife play 'Romeo and Juliet.'"

There is a certain amount of lye in soap, but that is no reason why it should be injected into the advertisements.

It's human nature, but bad medicine, to buck about the walk up hill after we've enjoyed a good long slide down!

"SONNY" MAHON returned to Baltimore the other day for the first time since the Grand Jury inserted its probe. He has called for a "cold deck" and is busy arranging for "a new deal."

MR. GORMAN has been consistant in but one thing affecting the welfare of the public and that has been his opposition in season and out of season to the demans of the people for decent election laws.

BOSS MAHON is quite willing that an advisory committee of reputable business and professional men shall assume charge of the Democratic campaign, provided they permit his heelers to "manage the details." In other words, give him the window and the tally-sheets.

WHAT can a Democrat gain by voting the Republican ticket? asks the Garrett Journal.

If there are enough of them they can assist in effectually ridding Maryland of some noxious election laws, inaugurate a system of economic government and place in the State House at Annapolis a man as Governor who will see that no crooks operate political machine in any portion of the State for self aggrandizement.

HONESTLY, with 44 years, save 4 (Lowndes) record in our State, with only one defaulting State Official, is a remakable good record for the Democratic Party.—Garrett Journal.

That is a fact; and a surprisingly good record for Maryland's brand of Democracy. But on the other hand perhaps only one has been caught.

MR. GORMAN—POLITICIAN.

At Prince Frederick, in Calvert county, on Monday, October 9th, Mr. Arthur P. Gorman, the Democratic candidate for Governor, in his address to the voters in which, we presume, he touched upon "honest elections," among other things, gave his pledge that "if elected Governor he would order the Attorney-General of the State to assist in the prosecution of the alleged 'election thieves' when their cases come up for trial."

Had Mr. Gorman stopped there he might have been able to impress his sincerity upon the public; but his irrepressible penchant for taking a shot at his Republican opponent with or without provocation was his undoing. He hurled this shaft of fine sarcasm at Mr. Goldsborough: "I expect that now (since Mr. Gorman had made his remarkable pledge) many promises will be made by the Republicans as to what they will do to prosecute those men."

Mr. Gorman is either densely ignorant of what is going on and what is being said in this campaign, or he is deliberately and maliciously attempting to misrepresent Mr. Goldsborough and the Republican party in their attitude toward these election frauds. If Mr. Gorman is keeping posted and well advised as to Mr. Goldsdorough's campaign utterances he must have known that as long ago as Thursday, September 28th, in an address on that evening before the Young Men's Goldsborough League in Baltimore City, the Republican gubernatorial candidate pledged that he would, if elected, not only instruct the Attorney General to assist in the prosecution of these "election thieves," as Mr. Gorman calls them, but he declared he would have the Attorney-General take charge of the cases when they come up for trial.

That was twelve days—nearly two weeks before Mr. Gorman ever thought of such a proposition; at least before he felt disposed to make it public.

The voters of Marylaud will find that instead of Mr. Goldsborough and the Republican campaign managers imitating and aping the Democrats, it is just the other way. Mr. Gorman waits until his Republican opponent makes a wise and popular declaration and then he hastens to chime in, parrot-like, "Me, too!"

THE INCONSISTENCY OF THE SUN PAPER

If anything further were needed to convince the calm and dispassionate observer of passing political events that the Democratic party in Maryland, its sponsors and apologists, are in a bad way—were stronger proof than that already furnished by the "leaders" and managers in their aimless wanderings, incoherent mutterings and indefinite conclusions, required to make ridiculous the past and present efforts of those qualified to speak with authority in behalf of the Democratic candidates and policies in this campaign, we need only refer to the attitude and utterances of their lone and solitary mouthpiece—the Baltimore Sun—whose remarkably inconsistent and grossly misleading argu would make it the laughing stock of the State were it not that the doctrine it seeks to promote is of such a gravely dangerous and seriously mischievous character as to demand sober reference and calm consideration.

The Sun has been manifestly illogical and persistently ambiguous throughout these stirring political times in Baltimore and the State, almost from the beginning of the Baltimore Mayoralty campaign some months ago, becoming more energetic in its flip-flops and increasing in the rapidity of its lightning-changes until up to the present moment it would require more than the ordinary intelligence with which the average person is endowed to properly guage its sincerity, measure its meaning or fathom its purposes.

In the Baltimore City mayoralty contest the Sun bitterly assailed and strenously opposed the nomination of Mr. Preston upon the high and reasonoble ground that his intimate associations with Boss Mahon unfitted him for the responsible position of mayor; yet after Mr. Preston was nominated, (or supposed to have been, pending the recounting of the ballots by the Grand Jury), the Sun by its dense silence permitted him to be elected without further protest or complaint.

During the 1910 session of the Maryland Legislature the Sun vigorously criticized, we may say castigated, the Hon. A. P. Gorman for his exceptionally bad conduct as a member of the State Senate and as its presiding officer; yet we now find the Sun urging Mr. Gorman's election for Governor of Maryland in preference to Hon. Blair Lee or some other more acceptable party man, but preferably Senator Lee, because he was Mr. Gorman's opponent in the primary, and because he was the one man who opposed Senator Gorman in all of his official acts for which, as stated, he was so roundly scored and properly condemned by the Sun.

And now, following the great upheaval within the Democratic party, since establishing the truth of the Sun's oft-expressed suspicions of corruption and fraud practiced by the Democratic machine, in face of the disclosures by the Grand Jury of ballot-box stuffing, repeating, vote juggling and falsification of the returns—in the full knowledge that Mr. Gorman's nomination was forced upon the party by the Mahon machine, convinced, as it must be, that without the support of the City gang Mr. Gorman could not have been nominated — in view of all this the Sun stands immovable (if alone) in advocacy of Mr. Gorman's retention upon the ticket and of his election as Governor of this great State.

But that isn't all. The Sun is grotesquely persistent in its inconsistent demand upon Governor Crothers to call a special session of the Maryland Legislature which would have for its dual purpose the legislating of Mayor Preston out of office because he is so closely allied with "Sonny" Mahon and the machine, and in order that special emergency legislation may be passed that will insure the election of Mr. Gorman, Governor of Maryland, notwithstanding the undeniable and incontrovertible fact that he is as much a political creature of Mahon and his gang of election sharps, repeaters and ballot corruptionists as Mayor Preston is. And the real humor of the situation is that the people know all these facts whether the Sun gives them credit for knowing them or not.

And only a few days ago the Sun in a leading editorial, commenting upon the prospective repudiation of their ante-election promises to the people for a State-wide primary law and other popular measures by the Democrats in the New York Legislature, and the probability of the people making the next Assembly Republican because of broken faith, says "Shakespeare had in mind the politician who makes a promise to the people, gets elected on that promise and after he is elected betrays those who trusted him, when he spoke of the scurvy politician."

The Sun condemns in New York what it vociferously proclaims and endorses in Maryland. It urges Mr. Gorman's election at whatever cost, knowing that he violated ever campaign promise and opposed every pledge in his party's platform; it asks a return of the Democrats to power knowing they have for years retained their control in Maryland through tampering and tinkering with election laws, through trick ballots and the disfranchisment of thousands of citizens of this State.

The Sun wants the State rid of corruption and fraud, yet it works incessantly for the success of the disreputable influence that dominate the Democratic party.

It wants Maryland freed from ring rule and bossism, yet it is willing to go any length to have Mr. Garman elected Governor.

Does the Sun assume that the people of Maryland are a set of imbeciles and fools, or does it imagine that they are all fast asleep?

It will discover on the morning after the election that they are neither.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. MARY MEESE.

"Some day the silver cord will break,
And I no more as now shall sing;
But Oh the joy when I shall wake
Within the palace of the King!"

Mrs. Mary Meese, the wife of Mr. Joseph Meese of near Thayerville, passed away Oct. 11, 1911, at the good old age of seventy one years and twelve days. She was the daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth Welch and was born September 30, 1840. She had been a sufferer for several years from paralysis, but had borne her sufferings with patience and fortitude. She had been a member of the United Brethren church for a long time, perhaps twenty years or more. It was always her delight to do a kind deed whenever the opportunity presented itself and she was much beloved by all who knew her. She leaves to mourn her departure her husband and son, besides numerous relatives and friends. She had a daughter, but she departed before her mother and their bodies are now resting side by side in the Thayerville cemetery awaiting alike the day when God shall call them forth to be again united with the soul. May the father and son so order their ways that they may meet the loved ones in heaven where disease and death are unknown and farewells are never said. A large crowd of sympathetic friends and relatives were present at the funeral which was preached in the Deep Creek Baptist church by Rev. C. W. Hudson the pastor of the Loch Lynn Heights Baptist church. C. W. HUDSON.

MRS. CATHARINE PREVOST.

"Mother, when I learned that thou was dead
Wert thou conscious of the tears I shed?"

Mrs. Catharine Prevost, the mother of Mr. L. C. Prevost, of Mountain Lake Park, passed away to the better world on October 11, 1911, at the home of her son, aged seventy nine years, two months and eleven days. She was born at Pottstown, Montgomery county, Pa., August 2, 1832, and was the daughter of Isaac and Catharine Reinhard. In her young womanhood she married Mr. L. W. Prevost, who died before her. She had been a great sufferer from the infirmities of old age for several years and when the time came for her to depart she found death a sweet release. She had been a member of the Episcopal Church for some years. Her body was taken to Reading for interment after a funeral service at the home by Rev. C. W. Hudson, the pastor of the Loch Lynn Heights Baptist Church. Her son and granddaughter, Miss Maize Prevost, accompanied the remains to Reading, where they were laid to rest by the side of those who had gone before.

As the loved ones depart may the hearts of those left behind be turned with a deeper longing heavenward, and may God give them peace until their time comes to go. A large number of friends gathered in the home to show their love and respect and to offer the consolation of their sympathy for those in distress. C. W. H.

SYNOPSIS.

David Amber, starting for a duck-shooting visit with his friend, Quain, comes upon a young lady equestrian who has been dismounted by her horse becoming frightened at the sudden appearance in the road of a burly Hindu. He declares he is Behari Lal Chatterji, "The appointed mouthpiece of the Bell," addresses Amber as a man of high rank and pressing a mysterious little bronze box, "The Token," into his hand, disappears in the wood. The girl calls Amber by name. He in turn addresses her as Miss Sophie Farrell, daughter of Col. Farrell of the British diplomatic service in India and visiting the Quains. Several nights later the Quain home is burglarized and the bronze box stolen. Amber and Quain go hunting on an island and become lost and Amber is left marooned. He wanders about, finally reaches a cabin and recognizes as its occupant an old friend named Rutton, whom he last met in England, and who appears to be in hiding. When Miss Farrell is mentioned Rutton is strangely agitated. Chatterji appears and summons Rutton to a meeting of a mysterious body. Rutton seizes a revolver and dashes after Chatterji. He returns wildly excited, says he has killed the Hindu, takes poison, and when dying asks Amber to go to India on a mysterious errand. Amber decides to leave at once for India. On the way he sends a letter to Mr. Labertouche, a scientific friend in Calcutta, by a quicker route. Upon arriving he finds a note awaiting him. It directs Amber to meet his friend at a certain place. The latter tells him he knows his mission is to get Miss Farrell out of the country. Amber attempts to dispose of the Token to a money-lender, is mistaken for Rutton and barely escapes being mobbed. A message from Labertouche causes him to start for Darjeeling; on the way he meets Miss Farrell, and at their journey's end asks her to become his wife. A Hindu conducts Amber to a secret place, and in the presence of a beautiful woman who mistakes him for Rutton. Later Amber is drugged. The Hindus plot rebellion, and at Labertouche's instigation Amber returns to the woman Naraini to discover the secret of the conspiracy. He learns they would make him their king.

CHAPTER XVIII. (Continued).

Again he failed to answer. Somewhere near him he heard a slight noise as of a man moving impatiently; and then a whisper: "Respond, thou fool!"

"Art thou come, O chosen of the Gateway?" the bell-voice rang.

"I . . . I am come," Amber managed to reply.

"Hear ye!" rang the bell. "Hear ye, O lords and rulers in Medhyama! O children of my Gateway, hear ye well! He is come! He stands upon the threshold of the Gateway."

A great drum roared like the crack of doom; and Amber's jaw dropped. For in the high roof of the temple a six-foot slab had been noiselessly withdrawn, and through it a cold shaft of moonlight fell, cutting the gloom like a gigantic rapier, and smote with its immaculate radiance the true Gateway of Swords.

Not six paces from him it leaped out of the darkness in an iridescent sheen; an arch a scant ten feet in height, and in span double the width of a big man's shoulders, woven across like a weaver's frame with ribbons of pale fire. But the ribbons were of steel—steel blades, sharp, bright, gleaming. With their pommels cunningly affixed so that their points touched and interlaced, yet swung free, they lined the piers of the arch from base to span and all the graceful sweep of the intrados, a curtain of shimmering, trembling steel, barring the way to the mystery beyond. Which was—darkness.

"O ye swords!" belled the voice. . . . "O ye swords that have known no dishonor! O ye swords that have sung in the grasp of my greatest! Swords of Jehangar, Akbar, Alamgir! Swords of Alludin, Humayun, Shah Jehan! Swords of Timur-Leng, Arungzeb, Rao Rutton! . . . "

The invocation seemed interminable. Amber recognized almost every name noted in the annals and legends of Hindustan.

"Hearken, O my swords! He, thy chosen, prayeth for entry! What is thy welcome?"

One by one the blades began to shiver, clashing their neighbors, until the curtain of steel glimmered and glistened like phosphorescence in a summer sea, and the place was filled with the music of their contact; and through their clamor boomed the bell:

"O my chosen!" Amber started and held himself firmly in hand. "Look well, look well! Here is thy portal to kingship and glory!"

He frowned and took a step forward as if he would throw himself through the archway; for he had suddenly remembered with compelling vividness that Sophia Farrell was to be won only by that passage. But as he moved the swords clattered afresh and swung outwards, presenting a bristle of points. And he stopped, while the voice, indifferent and remote as always, continued to harangue him.

"If thy heart, O my chosen, be clean, unsullied with fear and guile; if thy faith be the faith of thy fathers and thy honor rooted in love of thy land; if thou hast faith in the strength of thy hands to hold the reins of empire . . . enter, having no fear."

"Trick-work," he told himself. He set his teeth with determination. "Hope they don't see fit to cut me to pieces on suspicion. Here goes." He moved forward with a firm step until his bosom all but touched the points.

Instantaneously, with another clash as of cymbals, the blades were deflected and returned to their first position, closing the way. He hesitated. Then, "That shan't stop me!" he said through his teeth, and pushed forward, heart in mouth. He breasted the curtain and felt it give; the blades yielded jealously, closing round his body like cold, caressing arms; he felt their chill kisses on his cheeks and hands, even through his clothing he was conscious of their clinging, deadly touch. Abruptly they swung entirely free, leaving the entrance clear, and he was drawing a free breath when the moon glare showed him the swords returned to position with the speed of light. He jumped for his life and escaped being slashed to pieces by the barest inch. They swung to behind him; and again the drum roared, while afar there arose a furious, eldritch wailing of conches. Overhead the opening disappeared and the light was shut out. In darkness as of the Hall of Eblis the conches were stilled and the echoes ebbed into a silence that held sway for many minutes ere again the bell spoke.

"Stretch forth thy hand."

Somewhat shaken, Amber held out an open palm before him. Then out of nothingness something plopped into Amber's hand and his fingers closed convulsively about it. It was a hand, very small, small as a child's, gnarled and hard as steel and cold as ice.

Without any forewarning two heavy hands gripped him, one on either shoulder, and he was forced to his knees. At the same instant, with a snapping crackle a spurt of blue flame shot down from the zenith, and where it fell with a thunderclap a dazzling glare of emerald light shot up breast-high.

To his half-blinded eyes it seemed, for a time, to dance suspended in the air before him. A vapor swirled up from it, a thin cloud, luminous. By degrees he made out its source, a small, brazen bowl on a tripod.

In front of him he could see nothing beyond the noiselessly wavering flame. But presently a hand appeared, as if by magic, above the bowl—a hand, bony, brown and long of finger, that seemed attached to nothing—and cast something like a powder into the fire. There followed a fizz and puff of vapor, and a strong and heavy gust of incense was wafted into Amber's face. Again and again the hand appeared, sprinkling powder in the brazier, until the smoke clouded the atmosphere with its fluent, eddying coils.

The gooseflesh that had pricked out on Amber's skin subsided, and his qualms went with it. "Greek fire burning in the bowl," he explained the phenomenon; "and a native with his arm wrapped to the wrist in black is feeding it. Not a bad effect, though."

It was, perhaps, as well that he had not been deceived, for there was a horror to come that required all his strength to face. He became conscious that something was moving between him and the brazier—something which he had incuriously assumed to be a piece of dirty cloth left there carelessly. But now he saw it stir, squirm, and upend, unfolding itself and lifting its head to the leaping flame; an immense cobra, sleek and white as ivory, its swelling hood as large as a man's two hands, with a binocular mark on it as yellow as topaz and with vicious eyes glowing like twin rubies in its vile little head.

Amber's breath clicked in his throat and he shrank back, rising; but this instinctive move had been provided against and before his knees were fairly off the rocky floor he was forced down again by the hands on his shoulders. He was unable to take his eyes from the monster, and though terror such as man is heir to lay cold upon his heart, he did not again attempt to stir.

There was no sound. Alone and undisturbed the bleached viper warmed to its dance with the pulsing flame, turning and twisting, weaving and writhing in its infernal glare. . . .

"Hear ye, O my peoples!"

Amber jumped. The voice had seemed to ring out from a point directly overhead.

He looked up and discovered above him, vague in the obscurity, the outlines of a gigantic bell, hanging motionless. The green glare, shining on its rim and partly illuminating its empty hollow (the saw no clapper) revealed the sheen of bronze of which it was fashioned.

Out of its immense bowl, the voice rolled like thunder:

"Hear ye, O my peoples!"

A responsive murmur ascended from the company round the walls:

"We hear! We hear, O Medhyama!"

"Mark well this man, O children of my Gateway. Mark well! Out of ye all I have chosen him to lead thee in the work of healing; for I thy mother, I Medhyama, I Bharuta, I the body from which ye are sprung, call me by whatever name ye know me—I am laid low with a great sickness. . . . Yea, I am stricken and laid low with a sickness."

In the brazier the flame leaped high and subsided, and with it the cobra leaped and sank low upon its coils.

"I, thine old mother, have called ye together to help in my healing. From my feet to my head I am eaten with pestilence; yea, I am devoured and possessed by the evil. Even of old was it thus with thy mother; long since she complained of the Plague that is Scarlet—moaned and cried out and turned in her misery. . . . But ye failed me. Then my peoples were weaklings and their hearts all were craven; the Scarlet Evil dismayed them; they fled from its power and left it to batten on me in my sickness."

A deep groan welled in uncounted throats and resounded through the cavern.

"Will ye fail me again, O my children?"

"Nay, nay, O our mother!"

"Too long have I suffered and been patient in silence. Now I must be cleansed and made whole as of old time; yea, I must be purged altogether and the evil cast out from me. It is time. . . . Ye have heard, ye have answered; make ready, for the day of the cleansing approacheth. Whet thy swords for the days of the healing, for my cleansing can be but by steel. Yea, thy swords shall do away with the evil, and the land shall run red with the blood of Bharuta, the blood of thy mother; it shall run to the sea as a river, bearing with it the Red Evil. So and no otherwise shall I, thine old mother, be healed and made whole again."

Amber was watching the serpent—dazed and weary as if with a great need of sleep. Even the salvos of shouts came to him as from a great distance. To the clangor of the bell alone he had become abnormally sensitive; every fiber of his being shuddered, responsive to its weird nuances.

It returned to its solemn and stately intoning.

"Out of ye all have I chosen and fixed upon one who shall lead ye. Through his shall my strength be made manifest, my will be made known to my peoples. His must ye serve and obey; to him must ye bow down and be humble. Say, are ye pleased? Will ye have him, my children?"

Without an instant's delay a cry of ratification rang to the roof. "Yea, O our mother! him we will serve and obey, to him bow down and be humble."

The voice addressed itself directly to the kneeling man. He stiffened and roused.

"Thou hast heard of the honor we confer upon thee—I Medhyama, thy mother, and these my children, thy brothers. Ye shall lead and rule in Bharuta. Are ye ready?"

Half hypnotized, Amber opened his mouth, but no words came. His chin dropped to his breast.

"Thy strength must be known to my peoples; they must see thee put to the proof thy courage, that they may know thee to be the man for their. . . . Ye are ready?"

He was unable to move a finger.

"Stretch out thine arms!"

He shuddered and tried to obey. The voice rang imperative.

"Stretch forth thine arms for the testing!"

Somehow, mechanically, he succeeded in raising his arms and holding them rigid before him. Alarmed by the movement, the cobra turned with a hiss, waving his poisonous head. But the Virginian made no offer to withdraw his hands. His eyes were wide and staring and his face livid.

The bell boomed forth like an organ.

"O hooded death. . . . O death, who art trained to my service! Thou before whom all men stand affrighted! Thou who canst look into their hearts and read them as a scroll that is unrolled. . . . Look deep into the heart of my chosen! judge if he be worthy or wanting, judge if he be false or true. . . . Judge him, O death!"

Before Amber the great serpent was oscillating like a pendulum, its little tongue playing like forked red lightning, its loathsome red eyes holding his own.

"Look well, O death, and judge him!"

The dance of the hooded death changed in character, grew more frenzied; the white writhing coils melted into one another in dizzying confusion; figure merged into figure like smoke. . . . The suspense grew intolerable.

"Hast thou judged him, O death?"

Instantly the white cobra reared up to its utmost and remained poised over Amber, barely moving save for the almost imperceptible throbbing of the hood and the incessant darting of the forked tongue.

"If he be loyal, then spare him."

The hood did not move. Amber's flesh crawled with unspeakable dread.

"If he be faithless, then . . . strike!"

For another moment the cobra maintained the tensity. Then slowly, cruel head waving, hood shrinking, eyes losing their deathly luster, coil by coil it sank.

A thick murmur ran the round of the walls, swelling into an inarticulate cry, which beat upon Amber's ears like the raving of a far-off surf. From his lips a strangled sob broke, and, every muscle relaxing, he lurched forward.

Alarmed, in a trice the cobra was up again, hood distended to the bursting point, head swinging so swiftly that the eye could not follow it. In another breath would come the final thrust.

A firearm exploded behind Amber, singeing his cheek with its flame. He fell over sideways, barely escaping the head of the cobra, which, with its hood blown to tatters, writhed in convulsions, its malignant tongue straining forth as if in one last attempt to reach his hand.

A second shot followed the first and then a brisk, confused fusillade. Amber heard a man scream out in mortal agony, and the dull sound of a heavy body falling near him; but, coincident with the second report, the brazier had been overturned and its light extinguished as if sucked up into the air.

CHAPTER XIX.

Rutton's Daughter.

In darkness the blacker for the sudden disappearance of the light, somebody stumbled over Amber—stumbled and swore in good English. The Virginian sat up, crying out as weakly as a child: "Labertouche!" A voice said:

"O My Chosen!"

"Thank God!" He felt strong hands lift him to his feet. He clung to him who had helped him, swaying like a drunkard, wits a-swirl in the brain thus roughly awakened from semi-hypnosis.

"Here," said Labertouche's voice, "take my hand and follow. We're in for it now!"

He caught Amber's hand and dragged him, yielding and unquestioning, rapidly through a chaotic rush of unseen bodies.

The firing had electrified the tense-strung audience. With a pandemonium of shrieks, oaths, shouts, orders unheard and commands unheeded, a concerted rush was made from every quarter to the spot where the doomed man had been kneeling. No man could have said where he stood or whither he ran—save one, perhaps. That one was at Amber's side and had laid his course beforehand and knew that both their lives depended upon his sticking to it without deviation. To him a rush of a hundred feet in a direct line meant salvation, the least deviation from it, death.

He was now recovering rapidly and able to appreciate that they stood a good chance of winning away; for the natives were all converging toward the center of the cavern, and apparently none heeded them. Nevertheless Labertouche, releasing him, put a revolver in his hand.

"Don't hesitate to shoot if anyone comes this way!" he said. "I've got to get this door open and . . . "

He broke off with an ejaculation of gratitude; for while he had been speaking his fingers busily groping in the convolutions of the sculptured pedestal had encountered what he sought, and now he pulled out an iron bar two feet or so in length and as thick as a woman's wrist. Inserting this in a socket, as one familiar with the trick, he put his weight upon it; a carved sandstone slab slid back silently, disclosing a black cavernous opening.

"In with you," panted Labertouche, removing the lever. "Don't delay."

Amber did not. He took with him a hazy impression of a vast, vaulted hall filled with a ruddy glare of torchlight, a raving rabble of gorgeously attired natives in its center. Then the opening received him and he found himself in a black hole of an underground gallery—a place that reeked with the dank odors of the tomb.

Labertouche followed and with the aid of a small electric pocket lamp discovered another socket for the lever. A moment later the slab moved back into place. Labertouche chuckled. "Come along," he said, and drew ahead at a dog-trot.

They sped down a passage that delved at a sharp grade through solid rock. Now and again it turned and struck away in another direction. Once they descended—or rather fell down—a short, steep flight of steps. At the bottom Amber stopped.

"Hold on!" he cried.

Labertouche pulled up impatiently. "What's the matter?"

"Sophia—!"

"Trust me, dear boy, and come along."

It was some time later that Labertouche extinguished his lamp and threw a low word of warning over his shoulder. Synchronously Amber discerned, far ahead, a faint glow of yellow light. As they bore down upon it with unmoderated speed he could see that it emanated from a rough-hewn doorway, opening off the passage.

Labertouche pushed Amber on ahead. Stooping, the Virginian entered a small, rude chamber hollowed out of the rock of Katiapur. A crude lamp in a bracket furnished all its illumination, filling it with a reek of hot oil. Amber was vaguely aware of the figures of two women—one standing in a corner, the other seated dejectedly upon a charpoy, her head against the wall. As he lifted his head after passing under the low lintel, the woman in the corner fired at him point-blank.

The Virginian saw the jet of flame spurt from her hand and felt the bullet's impact upon the wall behind his head. He flung himself upon her instantly. There was a moment of furious struggle, while the cell echoed with the reverberations of the shot and the screaming of the woman on the charpoy. The pistol exploded again as he grappled with the would-be murderess; the bullet, passing up his sleeve, creased his left arm as with a white-hot iron, and tore out through the cloth on his shoulder. He twisted brutally the wrist that held the weapon, and the woman dropped it with a cry of pain.

"You would!" he cried, and threw her from him, putting a foot upon the pistol.

She reeled back against the wall and crouched there, trembling, her cheeks on fire, her eyes aflame with rage. "You dog!" she shrilled in Hindi—and spat at him like a maddened cat. Then he recognized her.

"Naraini!" He stepped back in his surprise, his right hand seeking instinctively the wrist of his left, which was numb with pain.

His change of position left the pistol unguarded, and the woman swooped down upon it like a bird of prey; but before she could get her fingers on its grip, Labertouche stepped between them, fended her off, and quietly possessed himself of the weapon.

"Your pardon, madam," he said, gravely.

Naraini retreated, shaking with fury, and Amber employed the respite to recognize Sophia Farrell in the woman on the charpoy. She was still seated, prevented from rising by bonds about her wrists and ankles, and though unnaturally pale, her anguish of fear and despair had set its marks upon her face without one whit detracting from the appeal of her beauty. He went to her immediately, and as their eyes met, hers flamed with joy, relief and—he dared believe—a stronger emotion.

"You—you're not hurt, Mr. Amber?"

"Not at all. The bullet went out through my sleeve. And you?" He dropped on his knees, with his pocket-knife severing the ends of rope that bound her.

"I'm all right." She took his hands, helping herself to rise. "Thank you," she said, her eyes shining, a flush of color suffusing her face with glory.

"Did you cut those ropes, Amber?" Labertouche interposed curtly.

"Yes. Why?"

The Englishman explained without turning from his sombre and morose regard of Naraini. "Too bad—we'll have to tie this woman up, somehow. She's a complication I hadn't foreseen. . . . Here; you'd better leave me to attend to her—you and Miss Farrell. Go on down the gallery—to the left. I'll catch up with you."

The pistol which he still held lent to his demand a sinister significance of which he was, perhaps, thoughtless. But Sophia Farrell heard, saw and surmised.

"No!" she cried, going swiftly to the secret agent. "No!" She put a hand upon his arm, but he shook it off.

"Did you hear me, Amber?" said Labertouche, still watching the queen.

"What do you mean to do?" insisted Sophia. "You can't—you mustn't—"

"This is no time for half-measures, Miss Farrell," Labertouche told her brusquely. "Our lives hang in the balance—Mr. Amber's, yours, mine. Please go."

The Simple Life.

Anna Maria Wilhelmina Pickering, in her "Memoirs," edited by her son, tells a Yorkshire incident which contains a great deal of human nature. Variety spices life; the plain is monotonous, until its extent entitles it to the name of prairie or desert, and it gains interest through vastness.

There was an old couple in the village whom I used often to go to see. One day, when I found them sitting, one on each side of the fire, the old man said to me:

"Well, t' missis and me, we've been married nigh on 50 years, and we've never had one quarrel."

The old woman looked at me, with a twinkle in her eye, and said:

"It war verie conscientious, but verie dool."—Youth's Companion.

SOUND SLEEP
Can Easily Be Secured.

"Up to 2 years ago," a woman writes, "I was in the habit of using both tea and coffee regularly.

"I found that my health was beginning to fail, strange nervous attacks would come suddenly upon me, making me tremble so excessively that I could not do my work while they lasted; my sleep left me and I passed long nights in restless discomfort. I was filled with a nervous dread as to the future.

"A friend suggested that possibly tea and coffee were to blame, and I decided to give them up, and in casting about for a hot table beverage, which I felt was an absolute necessity, I was led by good fortune to try Postum.

"For more than a year I have used it three times a day and expect, so much good has it done me, to continue its use during the rest of my life.

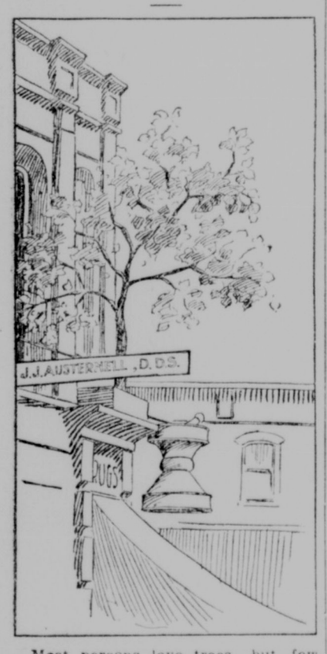
"Soon after beginning the use of Postum, I found, to my surprise, that, instead of tossing on a sleepless bed through the long, dreary night, I dropped into a sound, dreamless sleep the moment my head touched the pillow.

"Then I suddenly realized that all my nervousness had left me, and my appetite, which had fallen off before, had all at once been restored so that I ate my food with a keen relish.

"All the nervous dread has gone. I walk a mile and a half each way to my work every day and enjoy it. I find an interest in everything that goes on about me that makes life a pleasure. All this I owe to leaving off tea and coffee and the use of Postum, for I have taken no medicine." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.



OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Daring Act of Steeplejack

The attention of thousands of persons in City Hall Park, New York, recently was attracted by a steeple jack and a small boy, who were suspended from the top of the highest flagpole on the city hall tower. The boy is Edward Hughes, seven years old, son of Samuel H. Hughes, one of the best-known steeplejacks in the country. With the help of his father the youngster climbed the staff, the top of which is 175 feet above the ground, where the two entertained the crowd with their acrobatic work for almost an hour. One of the feats that caused the crowd to gasp was performed when Hughes, suspended head down, grasped the boy by his hands and swung him free from the pole.

TREE IN HIS WINDOW BOX

Most persons love trees, but few carry their love of them to their places of business, as has J. J. Austernell, a dentist of Kansas City. In a window box on a ledge of his office in the second story grows a hardy cottonwood tree, eight feet high. Mr. Austernell planted the sapling two years ago and his watering and care have given him a flower box that is unique. Not only do the leaves cast a cool shade over the window, but their fresh greenness has a quieting effect on patients, the dentist believes.

FINDS PURSE AND WINS BET

Recovery of $400, lost the other day, netted W. P. March, a Chicago contractor, a like amount in bets at Atlantic City. When he lost his wallet other members of the Chicago Building Exchange made up a purse of $400 as a bet that he would never see his money again. They figured they had a 500,000 to 1 chance on the honesty of that number of visitors at Atlantic City.

March took the long chance and doubled his money. The wallet was picked up by Robert H. Clutch, of Philadelphia, and returned.

SANITY RESTORED BY SHOCK

On the testimony of expert alienists that Frank Teeling, a patient in the insane hospital at Overbrook, had been cured of insanity by the shock of a collision between an automobile and a prison van in which he was being transferred, the court of special sessions at Newark, N. J., ordered Teeling's release from custody. Teeling developed symptoms of violent insanity while in jail on a drunkenness sentence and was ordered removed to the asylum. While he was being transported the prison wagon was run into by an automobile. After the collision Teeling appeared perfectly sane. Alienists declared that the physical and psychic shock cleared his brain. They believe further that Teeling will be strong-minded enough to resist the temptation to overindulge in alcoholic drinks.

RIVAL TEACHERS HOLD FORT

Each insisting she is the regularly appointed teacher, Miss Alice Corn and Miss Catherine Kirby are holding sway in the same room at the school at Frederick, Colo. Each has a desk. The pupils have been apportioned between the two. Miss Corn holds a contract signed by two members of the school board, and Miss Kirby one signed by the remaining member. The arrangement will hold until the courts decide which is entitled to the salary.

SWORDFISH RAMS A DORY

An exciting affair occurred near Boston recently when a monster sword fish rammed its sword into a dory sent out from Capt. Richard Noonan's Dorcas, breaking the dory to splinters and hurling into the sea two fishermen who were rescued with great difficulty by three of their mates off Block island. Just as they were sinking in water probably a quarter mile deep, Captain Noonan and another man plunged into the sea and rescued them. All four were liable at any time to be rammed and killed by the mad sea monster. With the seamen safely aboard the fishing vessel the fight with the swordfish was renewed. The fish was weakened by the first lily iron thrust deep into its side, and one of the fishermen put out in another dory and again speared the fish. This time it succumbed and yielded to the rope which hauled it in.

INTERVIEW IN THE SEINE

People have been interviewed in the strangest ways and in the strangest places. The climax, perhaps, has been reached by the reporter of a Persian paper. He plunged into the Seine after his victim and interviewed her while swimming. The reporter's prey was Juliette Cure, a plucky little girl of twelve, who swam against the champions of the world and finished fourth. When it was known that, with an allowance of some 1,500 yards, the the little girl had plunged into the Seine at the same time as the other champions started at Ivry, all eyes were turned toward Juliette Cure. A reporter could not help plunging in after her as she reached the Point Royal. He swam up to her side. There was no time to present a card. Just one word, anything that she said then and there would do for an interview. She was too busy striking out with her hands and feet. The reporter insisted. "Surely you must feel tired," he said. "No," was the curt reply. "I'm going to finish." That was all he could obtain for his trouble, but it was enough. He had scored a point over his colleagues.

SOUTH SEA WAVES

We all remember with what frequency in the old narratives of experiences in the South Seas reference is made to the heavy swells of the ocean which impressed the navigators with the idea of their remoteness from land. The great size of the set waves in high southern latitudes has been explained by the fact that south of the Cape of Good Hope and Cape Horn there is neither windward nor leeward shore, and the prevailing wind in all longitudes is westerly. Thus when a west wind springs up it finds a long westerly swell, the effect of a previous wind, still running. The newborn wind increases the steepness of this swell and so forms majestic storm waves which sometimes attain a length of 1,200 feet from crest to crest. The average height attained by sea waves in feet is about half the velocity of the wind in miles an hour.

1,000-YEAR-OLD JOURNAL

The "Tching-Pao," the official gazette of Peking, is the oldest newspaper in the world; it is now celebrating its thousandth year. A copy of each number—from the first to the most recent—is preserved with great care in the palace. The "Tching-Pao" has changed in form on several occasions. The photograph shows its present appearance.

Coracle-Men of Carmarthen

An interesting episode in the festivities connected with the eisteddfodd at Carmarthen, Wales, was the appearance of the coracle men on the river Towy, using a survival of the oldest form of water craft known. Coracles were in use in the time of the ancient Britons 2,000 years ago. The boats are made of sticks cut from the ash and beech trees, and have an average weight of 25 pounds. The framework is covered with a sheet of strong canvas saturated with tar and pitch.

TOO MUCH FOR SMALL BRAIN

Big Word Meant an Effort, but This Little Girl Made Brave Attempt.

This incident occurred just after a Jewish holiday. It was in a third grade school in Cleveland in a district of Russian and Hungarian Jews.

The teacher was explaining the meaning of the word judicious. She asked the children to give her stories about the word.

After several had given illustrations about the judicious use of money, the teacher said:

"Now give me a story about something judicious, without money in it."

A little girl finally volunteered. She said:

"On our holiday we had roast goose and a whole lot of other Jew dishes."

"ECZEMA ITCHED SO BADLY I COULDN'T STAND IT."

"I suffered with eczema on my neck for about six months, beginning by little pimples breaking out. I kept scratching till the blood came. It kept getting worse, I couldn't sleep nights any more. It kept itching for about a month, then I went to a doctor and got some liquid to take. It seemed as if I was going to get better. The itching stopped for about three days, but when it started again, was even worse than before. The eczema itched so badly I couldn't stand it any more.

"I went to a doctor and he gave me some medicine, but didn't do any good. We have been having Cuticura Remedies in the house, so I decided to try them. I had been using Cuticura Soap, so I got me a box of Cuticura Ointment, and washed off the affected part with Cuticura Soap three times a day, and then put the Cuticura Ointment on. The first day I put it on, it relieved me of itching so I could sleep all that night. It took about a week, then I could see the scab come off. I kept the treatment up for three weeks, and my eczema was cured.

"My brother got his face burned with gun-powder, and he used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The people all thought he would have scars, but you can't see that he ever had his face burned. It was simply awful to look at before the Cuticura Remedies (Soap and Ointment) cured it." (Signed) Miss Elizabeth Gehrki, Forrest City, Ark., Oct. 16, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 17 L, Boston.

Red Cross Christmas Seals.

A statement denying the recent reports about the abandonment of the Red Cross Christmas seal sale has been issued by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. The statement declares that not only will the sale be held this year, as in the past three years, but that it will be conducted on broader lines than ever before. The only order issued by the postoffice department which bears on the sale of Red Cross seals was sent out on July 1, and prohibits the use of the mails to letters and packages bearing non-postage stamps on the face, and also to any mail bearing seals which resemble postage stamps, if used either on the face or back. The Red Cross seal to be used this year has been submitted to the postoffice department and approved, and thus may be used, but only on the back of letters and packages. The design to be used this year depicts a pretty winter scene embossed in a heavy red circle. The corners are white, thus giving the effect when affixed to a letter or a package of a round seal.

Wise Uncle Joshua.

"Be you the elevator conductor?" asked Uncle Joshua, who had strayed into town out of the sweet rusticity of a comic paper.

"Yes, sir," grinned the boy.

"Well, I come ter this village ter see the high buildin'. Haow high up d' ye go?"

"To the top—twenty-first floor."

"Take me up to th' 'leventh. Sho! What's th' use o' riskin' my life an' goin' all the hull way when the folks to home 'll never believe I went any higher than ten stories, no matter what I tell 'em?"

Usual Thing.

"Been taxing your eyes lately?" asked the oculist.

"Yes," said the patient; "I looked all through a newspaper of 144 pages which came through the mail to me bearing the words 'marked copy.'"

"No wonder your eyes smart!"

"Oh, but that isn't the worst of it. I didn't find anything marked."—Buffalo Express.

What a Husband Replied.

Among the bargains to be found these days are women's hats, and a fashionable young Philadelphia wife, who has all the hats she can wear without exciting suspicion, could ont resist the temptation to add "just one more" to the collection. When she reached home, she produced it for hubby's admiration.

"Howard, it's a poem!" she said.

"Yes, but it doesn't rhyme well with my pocketbook at this time," he commented.

END OF THE WORLD IS A FALSE THEORY

"The Earth Abideth Forever," Say Scriptures.

Symbolic, Not Literal, Fire Is Imminent.

Pastor Russell Says Our Lord Said Nothing About the End of the Earth, Simply the End of the World—London Tabernacle Crowded.

Oct. 15.—LONDON TABERNACLE, Lancaster Gate W., was crowded today to hear Pastor Russell. He spoke of mistaken notions re the end of the world. He assured his audience that "the earth abideth forever," and claimed that errors were built upon misinterpretations of Scripture. His text was Revelation x, 6, 7. "And the angel sware * * * that the time should be no longer (delayed)."

Pastor Russell declared that his text has no reference to the end of time—that time could never end, must always endure. The word delayed should have been added by the translators to catch the proper thought. The time mentioned would no longer be delayed. The fulfilment of delayed promises would be accomplished.

These views in recent years have been most pronouncedly voiced by Christian brethren styled Adventists, but really are to be found in nearly all the creeds of Christendom. The erroneous theory has been further bolstered up by the misinterpretations of our Lord's words translated the end of the world. Our Lord said nothing about the end of the earth, ge; what He did mention was the end of the aion or Age in which we live. Various aions or ages have followed one another, each ending in turn and giving place to another. So the present aion or age, we believe, will soon give place to a better aion or Age—the aion or age in which sin and death have reigned will give place to an aion or Age in which Christ and His Church will reign triumphant.

Heavens and Earth on Fire

Those who have not learned that the Bible frequently uses language in a symbolical manner may be excused for taking literally some of St. Peter's statements respecting the burning of the heavens and the earth. A critical study shows that the Apostle could not have referred to the literal earth and the literal heavens as being consumed. He used the term earth symbolically, as representing society, of which the mountains or kingdoms are the backbone, just as he used the word heavens to represent the ecclesiastical powers which are even now rolling together as a scroll from the two ends—the one Protestant, the other Catholic. The social conflagration is being generally feared.

Although many expect the social conflagration, not many yet fear the religious blaze predicted by the Apostle. It surely will come; not a jot or tittle will fall. The religious "heavens" and the social "earth" will catch fire together. After the great conflagration, upon the ashes of human institutions, Messiah will establish the Kingdom of glory and blessing in the interests of our poor, dying race. The "new heavens" will be the new ecclesiastical power—the Church in glory. The "new earth" will be the new social arrangement which Messiah will inaugurate.

Some of the Difficulty

The early Church hoped, in harmony with the Apostolic teachings, for Messiah's Kingdom to be established and for the resulting "times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy Prophets since the world began."—Acts iii, 19-21.

After the Apostles fell asleep and the Kingdom still delayed, false doctrines crept into the Church, amongst others the theory that Christ's Kingdom was not to be waited for—that it came at Pentecost and the Apostles did not know of it; that it must conquer its way to the Throne of earth—that converts must be made even though the assistance of inquisitionary torments were necessary to effect this.

False Kingdoms of God

When the Protestant Reformation renounced Catholicism and denounced it as Anti-Christ it proceeded, nevertheless, along the same lines. Various Protestant Churches did their best to fill the place which Papacy claimed and to get earthly kingdoms to support their claims to spiritual domination. Thus the Czar of Russia is the Head of the Greek Church, Emperor William is the Head of the Lutheran system, King George is Head of the Church of England, theoretically. We may be sure, however, that none of these talented men believe for a moment that they are reigning as and for and instead of Messiah.

None of these are Kingdoms of Christ, nor could all of them together, called "Christendom," hope ever to bring to pass the glorious things promised of Messiah's Empire—that "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God." Indeed, it is becoming more widely known daily that heathendom, as well as Christendom, is doubling in population each century.

OUR BALTIMORE LETTER.

Politics Freely Discussed By Our Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, MD., Oct. 17, 1911.

There are so many excellent features contained in the Republican platform adopted by the State Convention and endorsed cordially and enthusiastically by the State candidates, that it is difficult to specialize any particular point of excellence as a particular claim upon the voters for their approval in this campaign. Indeed, the platform in its entirety is so exceptional in its strength, appropriateness and sincerity that the Democratic leaders and speakers, finding it impregnable in unequivocal expression and specific aptitude, have not attempted to assail the elements of logic and necessity, but have been content to assume sarcastic innuendo or hyperbolic ridicule in referring to those declarations which are proving especially attractive to the thoughtful and discriminating citizen and voter.

"The platform upon which Mr. Goldsborough stands," said Mr. Gorman in his acceptance speech at Fairview, with that characteristic "frankness" of his which has become notable in this campaign, "is utterly and completely lacking in sincerity; it promises are empty and meaningless. * * * * The reason I say this so emphatically," explains the Democratic candidate, "is because there is no chance that either Mr. Goldsborough or his party will be put to the test, even if they win. They will not have an opportunity to make good their promises," prophetically declare Mr. Gorman, "hence they are perfectly safe in making them."

At the time Mr. Gorman thus hurriedly and lightly touched upon the sound and reasonable pronouncements of the Republican platform he felt that he and his party were so securely intrenched behind the breastworks of "Sonny" Mahon's fortifications that defeat for the Democratic ticket was impossible. The Democratic boss of Baltimore City had assured Mr. Gorman, just as he had assured him in the primary, that under the methods practiced by the machine defeat was impossible; and that there was not the slightest doubt of his own election and the success of the whole Democratic ticket. Mr. Gorman, being confessedly "a politician" and an "organization man," knew, in a general way at least, just what it meant to have Boss Mahon's assurance of success. He knew that it made little difference what the people wanted or how they voted, because in any and all circumstances the "official returns would show a majority of the necessary proportions to guarantee not only the election of Mr. Gorman as Governor, but of the legislative candidates as well, thus keeping the State securely and, if possible, more tightly within the grip of the same old ring. So, when Mr. Gorman derided the declarations of the Republican party in the State platform, and, we may assume, sneeringly belittled and ridiculed the palpable earnestness and good faith of the promises to the people therein contained, we will do him the justice to say that we believe he conscientiously believed Republican success to be impossible in this campaign, and that he was sincere in his confidence in the ability of the Democratic machine to once more "put him across" by giving the Democratic ticket the full benefit of the "official count."

But Mr. Gorman was mistaken. The time for the reckoning had come. The proverbial last straw had been laid on; the night of corruption and dishonesty, of vote juggling and ballot-box stuffing, of reaping and falsification was o'er—the dawn of a better and brighter day was at hand.

The ire and indignation of the people, Democrats and Independents, of all classes of citizens with out regard to past party fidelity or affiliation—the revolution which has followed the disclosures of frauds and trickery through the Grand Jury investigation in Baltimore City now makes it not only worth while, but manifestly essential, that the merit and sincerity of the pledge to the people contained in the Republican platform be analyzed and examined, inasmuch as the probability of a Republican victory has been succeeded by moral certainty, and it is right and proper that the people should know just what the Republican party has promised and to what extent a conscientious fulfillment of those promises and pledges may be anticipated.

Of the most important issue involved, that of honest elections, the Republican party needs no certificate of character to present to the voters of Maryland. It has been the keynote of every campaign the party has waged for half a century, and when given the opportunity once in that time through a similar uprising of the people, differing with this year's situation only in the less general scope and intensity of the revolt, the Republican House and Senate passed, and the late Gov. Lloyd Lowndes promptly signed, the "Ballot Law of 1896," which gave to Maryland the best and fairest election law the State has ever had. The Republican party stands first for a pure and honest election law and other reforms will follow in its train.

Perhaps next to a fair and equitable ballot law, the proper conduct of the public school system is nearest the desires of the people of Maryland.

"It is of the utmost importance to the people of Maryland," says the Republican platform, "that every possible aid be extended to the cause of public education. We, therefore, declare our belief," it continues, "in the wisdom and justice of such additional appropriations for our public school system as will suffice to build sufficient schools to adequately accommodate all the children, and to guarantee to the underpaid teachers of our State," pledges the party, "a more generous compensation for the duties they are called upon to perform."

Thus clearly, forcible and in terms readily understood and admissible of no ambiguous construction, the Republican candidates for the State offices and for the Legislature alike, stand pledged before the people to increase the appropriations of public funds to the end, first, that ample accommodations and facilities be provided for all the children of Maryland; second, that the efficient teachers engaged in the commendable work of instructing the youth of every hamlet and community receive a recompense commensurate with the service and sacrifice rendered to the future citizens of the Commonwealth. And, given the opportunity, the Republican party may be relied upon to absolutely and in good faith eliminate the public school system of Maryland from the baneful and blighting influence of politics and professional politicians.

Throughout the State, and particularly in Baltimore City, the Democratic party have given abundant evidence of their manipulation of the system of public education for partisan advancement and political achievement. The situation in Baltimore City, described by men of the highest standing as most deplorable and disgraceful, whether in the public school system has become well-nigh disintegrated and is dangerously lacking in efficiency and force through the petty trifling and activity of the politicians. The manner in which the cause of education is being retarded and the system itself bungled and seriously impaired has become a Nation-wide subject for pointed criticism and an object for sincere commiseration.

Here again the record of the Republican party stands out in potent contradistinction with that of the Democratic regime. When the Republicans were in control of the State government in 1896-1900, they established reforms in the public school system which proved of the highest value to the cause of public education until misfortune again overtook it by the return of the Democratic party to power. Under the Republican administration the free schoolbook system was inaugurated and became so popular that it has been one of the few reforms which the Democratic bosses have not since dared to repeal. And they went so far in the work of removing the public schools from the influence of politics and politicians as to create bi-partisan boards of school commissioners in every county in the State and in Baltimore City. Compare conditions then and now, dear reader.

On the matter of the public schools the record of the Republican party is meritorious and clean, while that of the Democrats is besmirched in this as in every other branch of the State government in which the people are most vitally interested.

Under the existing reign of the bosses and rule of the machine, can the people look to the Democratic party to better the conditions which surround the public school system, or will they feel more secure by again entrusting this important duty into the hands of the Republican party—a party that has never broken faith with the people and their best interests?

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 35. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1911 NUMBER 34

THE PEOPLES' FORUM

A Brief and True Answer to an Unfair and Untrue Report Circulated by Some of the Opposition to the Re-election of Julius C. Renninger, Republican Candidate for State's Attorney.

To the Editor of The Republican:

The report that Mr. Renninger favors he liquor element of Garrett county appears so ridiculous to his friends that such a report hardly merits an answer, but for fear that some will not understand reports of this nature, a brief answer, by a friend, in justice to Mr. Renninger, is hereby submitted to the voters of Garrett county for their consideration.

It seems that the report of this nature, which has gained the greatest headway, and which has been unfairly presented to the people, without explanation and for the sole purpose of misleading the people and leaving them under a false impression, is one which concerns three indictments against three saloon keepers of the town of Oakland, all three of which cases were promptly and rightfully dismissed by Mr. Renninger by the payment of the costs by the accused, which in fact amounted to a fine, for the following reasons: Several months ago a young man of the town of Oakland forged the name of a certain saloon keeper to a check on which he received the money. The man whose name he had wrongfully and criminally used promptly had the young man arrested for forgery, a most serious crime under the law. The traverser was held for the action of the grand jury by the magistrate and in due time was indicted for forgery, but in the meantime he indicted the saloon keepers for selling him in violation of law. The young man looked to be 21 years of age, and he so represented himself in the presence of four or five creditable witnesses, and even went so far as to offer to go home and get the Bible to convince them. Upon his statements and false representations he induced two of the saloon men to sell him. The third saloon man, in fact, never let him have any at all, and if he received anything at all at his place it was given him by an unauthorized person without the knowledge or consent of the owner and proprietor.

It will be seen from these briefly stated facts that the young man in question was guilty of two serious crimes under the law, the greatest being forgery of which he plead guilty, and the penalty for which is as much as ten years in the penitentiary; the second crime being defined by a special statute and imposing a penalty for misrepresenting his age.

At the call of the trial of his case several of the best and most influential citizens of the town of Oakland and vicinity interceded with his Honor Judge Keedy and State's Attorney Renninger in behalf of the young man, setting forth that he is a member of one of the reputable families of the town and that his good mother was at that time in such physical condition that the knowledge of her son's wrongdoing would certainly cause her death, she having had no knowledge of any of these facts. When the matter was first presented to Mr. Renninger he replied by saying that the whole affair would have to be presented to His Honor Judge Keedy, and if he looked upon their request with favor he, Mr. Renninger, would not oppose the parole of the young man in the custody of the Court, provided one of the conditions of the parole would be that the young man refrain from drinking. Upon these conditions the young man was paroled by Judge Keedy for the period of three years, and is now enjoying his freedom, but in the custody of the Court and is required to report from time to time.

It will be seen that these cases were very closely associated, and that it would have been manifestly unjust and unfair under these circumstances that these saloon men should have been prosecuted further than they were when the young man whose term could have been ten years in the penitentiary for the one crime and also punished for the other, was patroled by His Honor Judge Keedy at the solicitation of influential citizens, which parole the writer believes was proper and just, and he does not want to leave any citizen under the impression that there were not sufficient facts presented to the Court on behalf of the young man to merit and warrant the Court to exercise the broad discretion conferred upon it.

But citizen and voter, does it not appear to you that when these sales were made to this young man upon false representations made by him to the saloon man, and that the saloon man sold him in the utmost good faith, sincerely believing him to be 21 years of age, that it would be unfair and unjust to these men who are lawfully licensed to conduct their business, and whose business are placed upon as legitimate a plane as any other business by the laws of the State of Maryland, by imposing a greater penalty upon them than was imposed, towit the payment of the costs in all three cases. Your writer contends that under the circumstauces they should not have been made to pay the costs in the case, and he believes that the misdemeanor of selling liuqor to minors, the penalty for which is $50 fine, when it is done through honest mistake and in the utmost good faith, as the evidence would show in these cases, pales into significance when compared to the crime of forgery, a felony, deliberately committed and the penalty for which can be as much as ten years in the penitentiary.

These matters were all adjusted under the direction and control of Honorable Court, who was fully cognizant of all the facts, and under such directions and control the cases were disposed of as explained.

Voter, do not be deceived; do not be mislead by having this matter misrepresented to you in a vain effort to bias you against your present State's Attorney's stand upon this question, for you will remember that he insisted that if the young man was to be paroled by the Court one of the conditions was that he should refrain from drinking and visiting saloons. Do not allow his opposition to persuade you to believing that these isolated cases, so closely associated, establishes a precedent for future cases, for all the facts bears Mr. Renninger out and characterizes him as a State's Attorney who is fair, honest and above reproach, and surely one who discharges the duty of his office and his official oath literally, without fear, favor or partiality.

In conclusion, it might be of interest to you as voters and citizens of Garrett county to know that Mr. Renninger, as your State's Attorney, has prosecuted liquor cases during the year 1911 the fines from which have amounted to more than $800 this being the greatest amount of fines from such sources ever received for a like period during the history of the county. Respectfully submitted,

CITIZEN AND VOVER.

Oakland, Md., Oct. 31, 1911.

The Extraordinary Expenses of the Past Legislature.

To the Editor of the Republican:

Here is something for the voters of Maryland to consider before casting their votes for Governor: The State senate of 1909, of which Mr. Gorman was president, cost the State of Maryland $82,883.09. There were twenty-seven members in the senate. Mr. Gorman made the following appointments, which, of course, were concurred in by the members of that body: Twenty-seven engrossing clerks, thirty-five laborers, eleven stenographers, twelve doorkeepers, (to keep two doors), six bill clerks, (three would have been plenty), twelve messengers, (to do nothing), two policemen, three pages, one keeper of retiring room, and one assistant to do nothing, one keeper of toilet room and one assistant, five watchmen, two postmasters, (one could easily do the work). Those who kept the toilet room did nothing but sit in easy chairs and read.

There were one hundred and seventy-five employees to wait on twenty-seven senators. That is the way the peoples' money was squandered.

The House of Delegates cost the State $116,993.57. There were one hundred and one members, having one hundred and forty-five employees, as follows: Thirty engrossing clerks, twelve stenographers, seven folders, ten doorkeepers, to keep two doors; four bill clerks, three messengers, five police officers, (all the time I was there I saw but two), seven pages, two postmasters, (I never saw but one on duty), four keepers of cloak room, (one could easily have performed the duties).

Add the expenses of the Senate and House and you have the enormous sum of $190,881.55.

Should one take the contract to fill all the offices and perform all the service required in both houses for $100,000.00, the contractor would make a small fortune for himself.

I will say to any one who doubts this statement to come to me and I will show them record proof of the same.

D. E. BOLDEN.

Why Julius C. Renninger, the Present State's Attorney, Should be Retained in Office.

To the Editor of the Republican:

The candidacy of Julius C. Renninger for re-election as State's Attorney for Garrett county is meeting with general approval by the citizens of this county, and it is gratifying to the writer to note that voters, in a large measure and irrespective of party affiliation, are going to retain in office the present incumbent, Mr. Renninger, and reward merit and thus show an appreciation of capable and efficient service of one of its important public servants.

The selection of a State's Attorney by the voters of the county is a matter of importance to our citizens, and it is the duty of the voters to ponder well before casting his vote for a candidate for this important office on November 7th next. Such a candidate should possess many qualifications; he should be an experienced lawyer, one who had a varied experience at the trial table in court, whose experience has rendered him familliar in presenting and arguing cases, both civil and criminal, before the Court and also before juries, and it is manifest that unless an aspirant to this office has had much experience in his practice his inexperience and lack of familiarity in the practice of law is likely to retard the progress of the court and jury and result in delays and useless expense to the tax payers of the county.

Mr. Renninger is an experienced and capable lawyer; a gentleman of high moral character, a man who is fearless and active in the performance and in the discharge of his duties as State's Attorney. He has administered the affairs of his office in a business like manner and has been prompted and guided in all of his official acts by a clear and unclouded conscience, having always constantly and foremost in mind to abide by and strictly perform the obligations and duties of his office to the best interests of the citizens and tax payers of the county.

He can stand upon his enviable record and invite with the greatest assurance the closest scrutiny and investigation of his official and private acts.

He has to a marked degree facilitated the handling of the criminal affairs of this county at a small expense, and in all instances the ends of justice have been fully met and satisfied.

At all times he is actuated only by fair and honest motives, and prosecuted all offenders of the law alike; that is, without fear, without favor and without partiality.

A vote for Mr. Renninger is a vote for a man that you have tried and not found wanting; it is a vote for a capable, efficient and experienced lawyer to represent you in the conduct of the criminal affairs of the county; it is a vote for a man who is familiar with the affairs of the office and for one who is able to perform the duties thereof at the least expense and to the best interests of the tax payers of the county.

Remember well and bear in mind
That a true friend is hard to find,
But when you find one good and true,
Change not the old one for the new.

Respectfully,

VOTER.

To the Voters of Garrett County, Maryland.

GENTLEMEN:—

I deem it that it is not only right but proper for me at this time to state to you that the Republican Party of this County is united, and that entire harmony exists, and that all are working together conscientiously and faithfully for the election of the entire ticket.

The gentlemen who have been nominated on the State ticket are of such high standing and spotless reputation that even their political enemies have failed so far to even accuse them of one improper action, in either their public or private lives, and I wish to call your attention to the pledge of Mr. Goldsborough, the Republican nominee for Governor, which I heard him make at Cambridge September 14th, 1911, when we notified him that he had been selected as the Republican nominee for Governor of the State of Maryland.

HIS PLEDGE.

"If by the votes of the electors of the State, I shall be chosen its Chief Magistrate, by the help of Him who ordereth all things, I shall consecrate the best efforts of my life to the accomplishment of those reforms which will bring about a high degree of efficiency in the performance of the affairs of State and will make for the highest type of public citizenship anywhere to be found.

"With this promise so solemnly made—in the midst of my own people, surrounded by lifetime friends, now watched and heard by those of my own blood in my own home, I earnestly say I shall strive to be true to the trust reposed in me."

As to our County ticket. It was nominated by the direct vote of the Republican voters, and every man on it received his nomination as the result of a fair election and an honest count, and therefore should have the loyal support of every Republican voter in the County. Thus the Republican State Central Committee, which is your servant in this contest, asks you, fellow Republicans, to think twice before you mark off on election day, any of our nominees, for in so doing you not only hit the man whose name you cancel, but you hit us as well, who are working so faithfully for your interests, and were you the nominees we would do just the same for you.

There are but three places on our County ticket in which we have Democratic opponents—the Legislative ticket, the Sheriff and State's Attorney. Although there are three members of the House of Delegates, our opponents have nominated but one candidate, so be sure to vote for all our three, namely, Mr. Lawton, Mr. Long and Mr. Weimer, who are all of your own selection and worthy of your support, and all are men that represent the highest type of citizenship.

For Sheriff, we have nominated Mr. W. A. Maffett, who was selected by the Republican voters of this County as their candidate. The entire party is united and desirous of his election by an unprecedented majority. He has held the position to which he aspires before and discharged his duties to the satisfaction of the people of the county and with dignity and honor to himself. He is, therefore, worthy of your support.

Mr. Julius C. Renninger, the Republican nominee for State's Attorney, and the present State's Attorney for this county, is asking your support not only on account of being the nominee of the Republican Party, but also on account of the excellent record he has made during his administration of this very important office. His record is one that he can be proud of as an individual, and that we can be proud of as a nominee of our party. He has saved the tax payers of this County more money than his salary amounts to (which is computed by the fees allowed). The fines imposed before one Justice in Oakland alone last year amounted to over $800.00, while his salary amounted to but little over $600.00. He has been very diligent in the prosecution of all criminals, showing neither fear nor favor to anyone, and there has never yet been one violation of the law that was brought to his attention that was not prosecuted to the full extent, but he never allowed his office to be one of persecution instead of prosecution, which is its proper function.

Yours very truly,

OLD DOCUMENT FOUND

Letter Written by Founder O. H. Kelly Forty-two Years Ago.

Formative Period of the Order When Our Present Subordinate Granges Were Called "Temples of Industry." Perfecting the Ritual.

The following letter was discovered some time ago by the editor of the Country Gentleman in clearing out a long forgotten package of papers:

Editors Country Gentleman—I inclose a slip for your consideration, and if it meets your views we shall be pleased to have you interested in the organization. We are receiving the most cheering encouragement from all parts of the country. Any suggestions from you to aid in perfecting the work will be most cheerfully considered. We earnestly desire that nothing be published until you can examine the ritual. O. H. KELLY.

Washington, Nov. 5, 1867.

The inclosed slip is as follows:

"A number of gentlemen engaged in agriculture and its kindred branches in different states are now perfecting a ritual for an Order to be composed wholly of persons, male and female, directly interested in agricultural pursuits. The Order will secure to its members all the advantages of Masonry; but, while that is speculative, this will be operative, its main object being to encourage and advance education in all branches of agriculture.

"The Order will have its 'lodges,' known as 'temples of industry' or similar appellation. The work in a 'temple' will be divided into four degrees. The ceremonies of passing from one degree to the other are made pleasing and instructive. Every tool used in agriculture has its appropriate lecture, the aim being to instruct practically and morally in every possible way and also add an interest to the most noble of all occupations, the cultivation of the soil.

"It is believed that by admitting the young folks of both sexes at fourteen or sixteen years of age it will have a tendency to instill in their minds a fondness for rural life and prevent in a great measure so many of them flocking to the cities, where all occupations are now crowded, and at the same time depriving the country of that class of young men so much needed there.

"The ceremonies in the degrees for the ladies are slightly different, but of the same nature and intended to lighten and render their household duties more pleasing.

"The whole, it is believed, will do much toward elevating our occupation as well as establishing a unity of sentiment among the farmers of the country and materially increase the circulation of publications devoted to the interests of agriculture and consequent increase of knowledge.

"Politics and religion are not subjects of discussion. Private work of the Order will occupy one evening each month. Public meetings for lectures and discussions are purposed to be held once a week. Libraries and museums—the latter to contain, among other things, samples of each year's crop of all cereal productions—are considered necessary appendages to each temple.

"It is designed to have at least one temple in each county, with one delegate from each to the state temple. These will send one delegate each to the national temple, which is to be the head of the Order. Persons holding office under government cannot be delegates to either the state or national temple.

"Should such an organization meet your approval and you see fit to offer any suggestions to enable the originators to make further improvements before it is introduced to the public the same will be most cordially received and duly considered."

A Successful Grange Store

It is generally recognized throughout the east that the Houlton (Me.) grange has gone a little further in the matter of successful co-operation than any group of farmers in New England. For several years the farm members of that grange have been doing very commendable work along co-operative lines. In this connection it is interesting to note the financial statement of the grange store, made July 11 last. It will be recalled that this store is only one of the several enterprises in which Houlton grange is interested. The report in question shows total assets of $19,781. This is inventoried as follows: Goods on hand, $12,986; cash on hand, $6,289; due from wool, $500, and due from grange, $4. The liabilities approximate $14,756, leaving an excess of assets over liabilities of $5,025. This is a net increase for six months of over $5,000.

It Costs Too Much.

Once in awhile we run across a man who thinks it costs too much to belong to the grange. Sometimes the grange gets the notion that it will petition the state grange to have the yearly dues reduced. The lecturer of the Ohio state grange gives a wise answer to a questioner who asks if the present is not a good time to reduce grange dues. He replies that if it is not worth 10 cents a month to be a member of the grange, with all its benefits, particularly those derived through state and national legislation in the farmers' interest, then it is worth nothing. True enough!

How to Clean a Woolen Coat.

Procure a penny lump of salt and lay on a paper in the oven till warm. Place the coat on the table; then break off a piece of salt and rub the coat till the salt is soiled. Do this till the coat looks clean. Then hang on the clothes line and brush with a clean brush. By doing this you will make your last year's coat look like new at the small cost of a penny.

NOBODY will censure Governor Crothers for asking the Democratic bosses, "Who's looney now?"

IT IS the duty of every Republican to cast his vote for the State and county tickets and to prevail upon his Democratic neighbor to do likewise.

MR. GORMAN is said to have made a "deep impression" in his Lyric speech. It may have been "deep" enough, but it wasn't the sort of "impression" that recalls pleasant memories.

THE frauds exposed in Baltimore may have been unknown to the "real leaders," as Mr. Gorman said in his speech at the Lyric. but the "real leaders" were quite willing to accept the fruits of the frauds, as they have accepted them year after year, Mr. Gorman included.

IN SAYING in his Lyric speech that the Democratic party in Maryland must have "a representative leadership," Mr. Gorman confesses that the Mahon-Smith-Gorman-Vandiver "leadership" is not "representative." That's exactly what the Republicans have been contending all through this campaign. Mr. Gorman is finally beginning to understand the issues of the canvass.

VOTE, and help rid Garrett county of the School Board incubus by electing a Republican governor. This will be the only means to accomplish this end, for Mr. Gorman has said that he will appoint Regulars and only Regulars to office. The majority members of the School Board as well as the County Superintendent have Mr. Gorman's hand upon them. Rid the county of such officials by voting the Republican ticket.

PUBLIC education and public school interests have not advanced as they should during the past eight or ten years. We may be safe in saying that the schools have been at a standstill. Taxpayers and school patrons know the reason. The only sure remedy is the election of a Republican Governor who will replace the present local officials with men who are in sympathy with public schools and the welfare of the rising generation.

THE Republican campaigners, who were in the northern section of the county last week, returned to Oakland Sunday afternoon. They report well attended and very enthusiastic meetings at the various points where meetings were held and in some cases known Democrats volunteered the statement that they intended supporting the Republican State ticket in its entirety, giving as their reason the utter disgust with machine politics recently uncovered by the Baltimore City grand jury in its investigation of the August primary election and the consequent presentment of nearly two hundred officials.

IN HIS speech at the Lyric Mr. Gorman said he believes that the voters in the counties have faith in him. Sure, they have. They have "faith in him" that he is a politician;" that he is "an organization man;" that he "will appoint organization men to office;" that "Sonny" Mahon, John Walter Smith and Murray Vandiver rule the "organization," and that they want Mr. Gorman in the Governor's chair—what for? Sure, the voters in the counties "have faith in Mr. Gorman" all right, all right. Watch the returns!

IN THE event of the election of Mr. Gorman as Governor of Maryland, Garrett county will in all probability continue to wear the yoke placed about its neck by the present school board. It is a fact potent to all that the members of the school board are Gorman men and Mr. Gorman has publicly said he intends to appoint "regulars" or organization men only to office, which in effect means that the present officials will be retained. While Mr. Browning has said in the public prints that he will not be an applicant for reappointment to the position of County Superintendent, the fact remains that Mr. Browning has not said that he would not accept the appointment if it were tendered him, hence it is fair to asume that in the event of Mr. Gorman's election the schools and the public educational interests of Garrett county will remain as they are and as they have been for the past ten years. The only remedy to correct this evil that suggests itself is for Democrats who oppose the present school regime to vote for Mr. Goldsborough, the Republican candidate for Governer.

Arthur P. Gorman's Record In The Light Of The Facts

The Republican prints herewith undisputed facts about Senator Gorman's record in the Legislature and challenges his supporters to say wherein the record is wrong:

He has persistently opposed every effort at retrenchment in expenditures of the Legislature.

He has been more responsible than any other man for the padding of the payrolls with worthless party hacks and creating a condition of extravagance that has reeked with scandal.

He fought the passage of an honest direct primary law, and, when no longer able to block it, exempted his own county from its provisions.

He endeavored to prevent publicity in the business of the Legislature.

He opposed the ratification of the income tax amendment.

He introduced and fought for a bill giving the Democratic machine control of the election "window," which would have made still easier such frauds as were perpetrated in the recent primary.

He broke his word to defeat the passage of the anti-loan shark bills.

He fought and attempted to emasculate the public utilities bill until a threat was made to unseat him as President of the Senate.

Regardless of his own responsibility for extravagance in the padding of the payrolls at Annapolis, he opposed, on the ground of economy, Baltimore's appeal for $250,000 with which to relieve those made destitute and homeless by the fire of 1904.

He aided the Baltimore-county politicians in fastening the Warren deal upon Baltimore as the price of an enabling act authorizing the people of that city to get a sorely needed increase in the water supply.

In his own county he has built up a political machine that has been guilty of the most detestable practices.

He has mocked and jeered the men who have fought for political reforms as a band of hypocrites.

He has been of and with the machine since he entered politics.

His campaign is based on a program put through the Legislature by Governor Crothers—a program which Mr. Gorman deliberately and persistently endeavored to block.

In the words of W. L. Marbury: "The fact remains—and it is a fact which stares the Democratic party in Maryland in the face—that during the whole course of his Legislative career, and especially during the last session of the Legislature, Mr. Gorman found himself in opposition—stubborn, persistent and relentless opposition—to the enactment of every measure to which the party of this State had pledged itself in its successive platforms."

The machine will have the unintelligent vote in line, as usual, no matter how bad Mr. Gorman's record and in spite of the fact that the dominant organization has been discovered stuffing ballot-boxes and manipulating the count.

Is the honest, intelligent voter going to condone such treachery to the public interests?

MARYLAND DEMOCRACY AND ITS RECORD.

As the end of the campaign in Maryland draws nearer and nearer the Republicans, and all good citizens of whatever political belief who are hoping for a surcease from election frauds, repeating, vote-juggling, ballot manipulation, extravagance in the expenditure of public funds, bossism and machine rule—the better element of the State's electorate regardless of party affiliation who are longing for the advent of a new era, of higher, nobler and purer motives and methods in the performance of great civic duties, will be much encouraged at the prospect not only for the success of the Republican candidate for Governor and his associates on the State ticket, but also at the more than a probability of the taking away from the boss-ridden and fraud-begrimed Democratic party the control of the next General Assembly of Maryland.

At the beginning of the campaign, with candidates for the State offices of such unusual excellence and competency, with a platform of exceptional strength, progressiveness and sincerity, with a united party and strong and willing workers in the front and in the rank and file throughout the State—with an opposition led by the Baltimore City boss whose reputation had already become so notorious and whose presence and activity had driven the substantial and respectable element from the Democratic party, and whose candidate for Governor had a public record so vulnerable as to create both wonder and surprise that even an arrogant political machine should have had the brazen hardihood to foist him upon the party with all those advantages to begin with it was to be expected that the lovers of clean and honest government under the auspices of the Republican party would be able to make a lively war upon the old Democratic ring, with much on which to base a hope of at least a partial success.

But the progress of the campaign, the shocking disclosures of corruption and fraud, by ballot-juggling and repeating, of falsifying returns and high-handed piracy of the rights of citizens and voters in Baltimore City and some of the counties; the splendid campaigning ability and the marvelous, we may say inspired, eloquence and oratory and arguments of the candidates; the hearty approval and general acceptance of the party's platform and pledges of reforms, together with its record of fidelity and trusts fulfilled when previously clothed with temporary power during the brief Republican administration of 1896 to 1900—all these have combined to make the present campaign perhaps the most notable and most satisfactory in the history of the Republican party in this State, and one that can have but one result, based, as it has been, upon honor and sincerity, uprightness and candor, truth and righteousness.

Mr. Goldsborough, the gubernatorial candidate, has demonstrated most conclusively his exceptional qualifications and popularity. His personal contact with the voters in every election district—indeed, in almost every voting precinct—in the State, has been most effective. Citizens of all classes, trades and professions and avocations have gone out of their way to grasp him by the hand and give him direct assurance of their support and good will; men have braved storms of cold, wind and rain, have disregarded the elements, in their anxiety to hear the words of wisdom that have fallen from his lips, and to listen to the doctrine of purity in civic life and honesty in administrative government expounded to their understanding. He has held for hours at a time thousands of Marylanders, spell-bound by his magnetic oratory, his fervid eloquence, his keen satire, his trip-hammer argument and lucid logic as he portrayed Democratic fallacies, Gorman duplicity, Mahon chicancery and machine corruption; as he waved aloft the Republican standard of purity, the insigna of reform.

The tour of the State has been truly a continuous ovation, a triumphal march. Crowds, music, enthusiasm have marked the presence of the candidates everywhere. Not of that ordinary, perfunctory sort of noise and rabble, but of the kind that denotes the thoughtful interest, the deep concern, the foreboding earnestness of the people determined to investigate, to inquire, to learn and to find out for themselves all there is to know of these grave and momentous issues; and the intensity with which they have listened and the willingness with which they have heard, permits of but one conclusion, is indicative of but one result—stupendous success, and overwhelming victory.

And so, in the closing days, with reports pouring in from every section of the State showing unbroken lines, an interested, an enthusiastic and determined phalanx, those in authority, those in position to know the exact situation, want the rank and file to feel that the leaders and candidates are as certain of winning on the 7th of November as it is possible for mortal men to be certain of any event as yet in anticipation. Everything points to certain success as assuredly as human events can point, and with ample, even liberal, allowance for over-estimates, ultra-enthusiasm and unexpected deflections, there is still a wide margin on which to figure and base a comfortable majority. Not only this but a landslide that will wipe out and overcome the Democratic party and its candidates beyond reasonable expectations and carry the Republican ticket into power on a mighty tidal-wave as yet unheard of, is not only possible, but is actually predicted by some reputable campaign authorities.

However, in these last days, and hours and moments of this memorable contest, let there be no relaxation. The success which now seems imminent, and the confidence of the leaders and candidates, is based solely upon the expectation that every man will do his duty—that the voters, the workers and the people all along the line will keep up the good work until the polls close on election day—until the last vote has been put into the box, and the last ballot has been fairly and honestly counted.

Do not let the enemy snatch victory from defeat. Be on guard against last-hour canards and hidden schemes. Get every vote to the polls. Keep on fighting to the very last.

Victory is in sight. Make it complete. Leave no room for the slightest doubt. Make it too big to be stolen.

Every man to his guns, and make every shot count.

As a result of the contined wet weather farmers who anticipated a large yield of potatoes, have been greatly disappointed and consequently have suffered very considerable loss on account of the tubers rotting before they could be dug. One farmer, residing a few miles north of Oakland, cultivated a field of eight acres from which he expected to raise more than two thousand bushels. Last week they were dug and it was found that more than half had rotted in the ground, entailing a loss of nearly $1000.

Ninety-eight out of a hundred satisfied at the Felty Roller Mill. The good flour we make induced farmers to raise wheat and made the raising of wheat the most profitable part of farming. Patronize the Felty Roller Mill. P. S. No need to say anything about our Buckwheat grinding. Best ever. FELTY ROLLER MILL, Oakland, Md. 33-7t*

O. H. S. Notes.

A surprise party was given to Miss Evelyn Helbig last Friday evening by a number of her friends from the Oakland grammar and high schools, and those present say that they had a very nice time. They were loath to leave, if such a thing can be judged by the time they got home.

Tickets and programs have been printed and are now ready for distribution for the high school concert. This is an opportunity to help a good cause along, and at the same time to enjoy a pleasant evening.

Monthly tests for October were held during the past week and several pupils made very high marks. Preston Deberry and Proctor Kildow made three and four hundred, respectively.

The hunting season officially and legally opened yesterday and almost everyone owning a gun or able to borrow one from his neighbor, was out in the woods hunting for pheasant, woodcock, rabbit or almost every other denizen of the woods that is considered game or near-game. What the various hunters bagged constitutes another story, but it has been reported that one of them killed six woodcock—considered a fair day's sport.

FOREST PATROL FOR GARRETT COUNTY

State Forester Besley has Appointed Four Patrolmen For this Purpose.

The State Forester has made arrangements to start a forest patrol this fall, as soon as the woods become dry enough to make forest fires possible. For this purpose the counny has been divided into four Forest Patrol Districts, as follows:

Number 1 will cover the territory between Sang Run and Swallow Falls, east to McHenry and Thayerville and west to the West Virginia line. William Taylor Sines, (Swallow Falls) Forest Patrolmen.

Number 2 will include the Negro Mountain and Meadow Mountain sections from Deep Creek to New Germany and Keyser. Milton Wiley (Grantsville) Forest Patrolman.

Number 3 covers the Backbone Mountain section, east of Altamont and Chaffee and the southern end of Big Savage Mountain to High Rock. Francis H. Turner (Swanton) Forest Patrolman.

Number 4 embraces the Big Savage Mountain section from the Pennsylvania line to High Rock and west to Red Ridge. G. M. Mayer, (Frostburg), Forest Patrolman.

These men will be mounted and constantly on the move over their district, during the dry season and on the lookout for fires and violations of the Forest Laws.

The Forest Patrolman has been instructed to cooperate with landowners throughout his district who desire to have their woodlands protected from fire, and who are in sympathy with a strict enforcement of the Forest Laws. All woodland owners should keep in close touch with the Forest Patrolman and the local Forest warden to secure prompt assistance in case of fire.

This patrol is made possible through the cooperation of the United States Forest Service and should be of great help in reducing the fire damage.

In addition to the patrol service and the work of the regular Forest Wardens, there has been established, thru the courtesy of Mr. J. M. Conneway, a Forest Lookout Station at Conneway Tower near Table Rock, during dry weather this fall. This station commands an excellent view along both sides of Backbone Mountain and the adjacent territory, so that the observer stationed there will be able to detect promptly any fire that may start in view of this station, and immediately report them, by telephone, to the nearest Forest Warden, of which there are a number in the vicinity.

THE PRESIDENT'S TRAIN

Whirled Through Oakland Yesterday Afternoon Without a Stop.

Yesterday afternoon about five o'clock President W. H. Taft, in his special train of four cars, returning from a western tour, passed through Oakland bound for New York.

At the station here quite a crowd had assembled with the hope that a short stop would be made, but in this they were disappointed as the train whirled through the town without slacking speed the slightest.

EDMUND JAMISON, Clerk.

Eight Reasons Why the Voters of Garrett County, Maryland, Should Support Phillips Lee Goldsborough for Governor, Regardless of Political Affiliations.

1st. Because, when elected Governor, he will be the servant of the whole people, and will not be governed by any political clique or ring.

2nd. Because he believes that our most sacred institution—the Public Schools—should be taken out of politics and the appointments to be made to those, not on account of their political activity, but on account of their fitness for educational work.

3rd. Because he believes in an honest election law and an honest count of every vote that is cast.

4th. Because he believes in State Roads being built in all Districts of the County, and not in the favored few.

5th. Because he believes in the work of building State Roads being pushed to completion, instead of them being left to drag along in an impassable condition year after year.

6th. Because he believes in the people of the County having something to say where the State Roads are to be located and by whom the money is spent, instead of having it all left to the State Road Commission, appointed by the Governor, who are not familiar with local conditions.

7th. Because he believes both in economy and honesty in the spending of the peoples' money, and not in the wanton extravagance and dishonest employment of political henchmen that characerized the last session of the Maryland Senate under the leadership of Mr. Gorman.

8th. Because he is a man that the people can trust and has proven himself worthy of their trust while serving as State's Attorney of his own county, Comptroller of the State of Maryland, and Collector of Internal Revenue for the United States Government, and has openly challenged his opponent to point to one dishonest or improper action during his entire public career.

Yours very truly,
N. U. BOND,
Republican County Chairman.

NOVEL PUBLICITY PLAN.

California to Boom Its Towns by Distributing Photos of Winter Scenes.

Much good from a publicity standpoint is expected to result to southern California from a "camera period," which was announced by the Los Angeles chamber of commerce recently. Some time during the winter every resident of southern California is expected to send to eastern friends original photographs showing winter scenes in his district. Pictures of flowers and orange groves, beautiful scenery and growing crops, handsome homes and beach views will reach the folks "back east" when blizzards are raging and the mercury is wooing the zero mark.

Prizes have been offered for the best photographs taken during the "camera period," and the chamber of commerce will supplement the photographs by forwarding southern California literature to every easterner whose name is submitted. Any resident of the eight counties of the south is eligible to participate in the contest.

Coin Under the Mast.

One of the old customs which have never been changed in the launching of a new ship is that of placing a gold coin under the mainmast. This coin, which is not of any certain denomination, always bears the date of the launching of the boat and is claimed to bring good luck to the vessel and her crew.

The Ants' Compass.

Travelers in Australia do not need a compass to assist them in finding their directions. A species of industrious ant builds its nests in straight lines directly north and south and enables one to easily determine the direction without the aid of instruments or watching the sun.

"PEACE AND SAFETY" A GREAT DELUSION.

God's Times and Seasons Maturing.

A NEW DISPENSATION OPENING

Pastor Russell In Glasgow—The Divine Plan Diversified but Orderly—Age Follows Age In an Uplifting Process. Not Evolution but Restitution.

Glasgow, Oct. 29.—Pastor Russell gave two discourses today at St. Andrew's Hall to large and attentive audiences. We report his discourse from the text, "Of the times and seasons ye have no need that I write unto you, for yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. And when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them as travail upon a woman with child and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are children of the light."—I Thessalonians v, 1-5.

The world is not expected to understand the Divine times and seasons, plans and purposes. The Redeemer declared that the Father hath hidden these things from the worldly-wise and prudent and has revealed them unto babes—the humble-minded, the footstep followers of Jesus. (Matthew xi, 25.) "The secret of the Lord is with them that reverence Him, and He will show them His Covenant."

"The Wise Shall Understand"

The Prophet Daniel, referring to the present day, declared, "None of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand." (Daniel xii, 10.) To understand the secret purposes of the great in advance of their accomplishment implies a nearness and touch and acquaintance out of the ordinary. And so God's children, begotten of the Holy Spirit, are privileged to know the things of God—"yea, the deep things."

The speaker likened this relationship between God and His saints to wireless telegraphy. God's people have coherers tuned in harmony with Himself by His Word and Spirit. These can receive much of the deep things of God. The worldly have no coherers at all—no means, therefore, of communication with the Infinite. The luke-warm Christian has, indeed, a coherer in the Holy Spirit, but it is not tuned to the proper key and is, therefore, not prepared to receive the deep things of Divine communication.

Our world for six thousand years has been a battlefield on which the hosts of darkness have largely prevailed over the comparatively small number of children of the light, who in an enemy's country have stood forth for God, the Redeemer, the brethren and the Truth against the "Prince of this world"—Satan. Moreover the children of light have been hindered from using the "carnal weapons" of the children of darkness. They may not render evil for evil nor slander for slander. They may only do good and bless those who revile them.

Harvest Time Is Here

Is this condition of things to continue forever? Does God intend that to all eternity there shall be this battle between light and darkness, with the darkness in the ascendant and control? No! The Bible declares that a great change and a New Dispensation is at hand, in which the order of affairs will be reversed.

The Lord has been doing a work during the period of the reign of sin and death. He has been selecting two classes of children of the light, both to be used in the great world-wide work of the next Age. God refers to His work in agricultural terms; for instance, with the Jewish nation. He did a plowing, harrowing, sowing, cultivating and reaping work. Their plowing time preceded the entrance of the nation into Canaan. The Law inculcation was the sowing. The reaping of the Age was at its close; Jesus was the Chief Reaper. His Apostles were associates. To them He said, "I sent you forth to reap that whereon ye had bestowed no labor; other men labored and ye are entered into the fruits of their labors." The saints then reaped were gathered into the Gospel garner at Pentecost and after fiery tribulations the field was cleansed of its chaff.

This Gospel Age has similarly been a time of plowing, sowing and reaping. The tribulations of the early Church were associated with the sowing of the precious seed. Again we are in a harvest time—"The harvest is the end of the Age." This time the gathering of the fruitage will be to a still higher plane—"to glory, honor and immortality" by participation in the "first (chief) resurrection." Then will follow the cleansing of the field again by fiery troubles—"a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation." That trouble time will be a plowing and harrowing time of a new dispensation for a world-wide crop under the most favorable conditions. These three different ages, however, produce different crops—as different as are their conditions.

THE SCORCHER.

Story of a Girl Ambitious to Run an Automobile.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

This is an age in which women have not only progressed in making for themselves new fields of labor, but they have done a great deal in the way of manly sports. Our great-grandmothers when they were girls were content to ride at a slow pace on horseback on a pillion, holding on to a man. Now our girls ride straddle, taking fences and ditches by the way. Whether or no a girl has ever run a locomotive we don't know, though we do know that girls have not yet adopted that work as a profession. But, as the bicycle was a forerunner of the automobile, so may girl chauffeurs be preliminary to women locomotive engineers. At any rate, Miss Tyson placed herself in the line of promotion.

"You're crazy, man! The idea of Edith Tyson in an automobile by herself, much less scorching! It's preposterous!"

"I know it; but, unless my eyes deceive me, she is doing that very thing and scorching like mad too. You had scarcely left my auto and gone into the store when there was a sudden rush, a scurrying of people without regard to the order of their going, a yell and threat from a policeman, and then the thing was past and disappearing in the distance. Lucky the street was wide and comparatively clear. I've been fined in this very town for half that speed."

His companion looked at him skeptically.

"If you'd substitute the name of Kate Conway the tale might go," he said. "She is reckless enough to dare even this close town. But Edith Tyson! Why, I took her down to the races last week, and she wouldn't let me run the auto faster than a horse pace for fear I mightn't be able to control it and wouldn't even touch the lever herself. Edith's a nice girl, but I never figured her as being cut out for a scorcher. She's too bookish for one thing, and—well, too much of a lady for another. Her style seems out of place on a bicycle or driving an auto."

"SLOW DOWN," HE ADMONISHED. "IT'S AN AUTOMOBILE."

"Let's see," abruptly, "she's a sort of cousin, isn't she?"

"Sort of—third or fourth, I believe. But we've been more like brother and sister; live next door and that sort of thing, you know. But why do you ask?"

"Because I want you to take me to see her some afternoon," promptly. "I've met her only once informally at the Catsons', and that would scarcely entitle me to a call. And, to tell the truth candidly, I haven't thought of making one until today. Miss Tyson struck me as belonging to the pale, stately type which—excuse me—haven't much life or individuality about them—society ornaments and inanimates, one might call them. But the vision of her as she flashed by just now," his face brightening, "thoroughly undeceived me. I tell you, Clarkson, she was simply glorious—hair flying, face firm and kindling, eyes flashing and commanding the road—in fact, a veritable goddess who had the right of way and compelled its recognition."

Clarkson laughed.

"I don't recognize Edith by that description," he objected. "It was Miss Conway you saw. She fits into the 'goddess' and 'glorious' exactly. Now, I"—

"Oh, tut, tut, man! The two can't be mentioned in the same breath. I know Miss Conway. She is of the earth earthy, without a particle of the angelic quality which raises Miss Tyson above the rest of our common herd."

"Have your own way, Cone," resignedly. "You met her once informally, when she struck you as not having much individuality of her own, so you ought to know. But suppose we make a start. There's the golf at 2 o'clock, and we must get round and home to lunch before that. We'll have to do a little scorching on our own account after we leave town limits."

He stepped into the automobile, and Cone followed and grasped the lever. A moment later they were moving slowly along the street, watched from the opposite sidewalk by the baleful eyes of a policeman.

"That fellow's just aching for us to go a little above regulation speed," Clarkson observed, "but we can't afford the time to be hauled in just now. He's sore over Edith's passage through town. I wish I could warn her to make a wide detour of the place when she returns. To be arrested by a policeman would seem an overwhelming disgrace to her."

Cone promptly reversed his machine in the opposite direction.

"We'll go and warn her, then," he said calmly. "I was a brute not to think of it at first. But, you see, I have grown to look upon arrests as merely incidental but necessary annoyances of a day's run. I was held up three times last week. Now," as the policeman on the sidewalk was being dropped behind, "we'll try a little scorch to make up for lost time."

"But how about the golf," asked Clarkson disgustedly, "and the lunch? I'm getting hungry already."

"It will be good for your welfare to fast a little, then," was the unfeeling answer. "You are becoming altogether too gluttonous, Clarkson. As for the golf, I had already given that up for the day. You may recollect that you promised to take me out to see Miss Tyson."

"But not this afternoon," in dismay.

"This afternoon is the accepted time. It might rain tomorrow, the next day or any of the days after. Never put off till tomorrow, Clarkson. That's procrastinating."

Clarkson grunted, then laughed.

"Funny," he said; "it seems to be a mutual case of the god and the goddess. Only yesterday I heard Edith speaking about you."

His companion turned quickly. "About me?" he asked eagerly. "What"—

"Oh, it was only in the abstract," indifferently. "She doesn't know you except as something she met informally at Catsons. But, like everybody else, she has heard rumors of your foolhardy recklessness. She rather admired the way you rescued the child in front of your automobile, and I have heard her allude to that act on the river and to several other of your slight attacks of bravado. But, of course, a more personal knowledge of you will dispel the illusion. There, that's right," as Cone suddenly speeded his machine to a third greater velocity. "Now it's something like. We can probably keep this up to the next town if some fool cow doesn't get in the way."

They were beyond the town limits, with an almost straight road ahead. Little by little Cone increased their speed until they were going fully a mile a minute. From time to time Clarkson nodded his head approvingly.

Twenty minutes of this, then he suddenly leaned forward, shading his eyes from the rush of air which their speed created. A peculiar dark spot had appeared in the road ahead, rapidly resolving itself into something tangible. Ten seconds later he touched Cone's arm.

"Slow down," he admonished. "It's an automobile, and the chauffeur appears to be a woman. Of course it's Edith. I think the machine is standing still."

Thirty seconds later their automobile came to a stop beside the other, a closer view of which brought a low whistle from Clarkson. And, as he had surmised, the chauffeur was Edith.

As she saw and recognized them the corners of the chauffeur's mouth, which had been drooping, rose in perceptible relief.

"I was never so glad to see any one in all my life," she called fervently. "Here I've been sitting five whole minutes, wondering what in the world I should do next."

"And I've been wondering for a whole half hour what in the world started you out as a scorcher," retorted Clarkson dryly, "and, if my eyes are not at fault, I think I recognize the machine."

"Yes, it's yours," meekly; "but please don't scold. I've had an awful time. I went across to your house and was looking the automobile over when it started. You had left it out in the road, you know. I suppose I turned a lever or screw or pulled out a plug or something. Anyway, it went off like a race horse, and I didn't know how to stop it. I've often watched you steer, so I managed to keep it in the road. But I thought the journey never would end," plaintively. "I suppose the monster is run down. I—I hope it isn't broken."

"Of course it isn't," reassured Cone warmly, "automobiles often act that way. Clarkson and I can fix it all right in a few minutes. But you must feel awfully used up, Miss Tyson. Don't you think I'd better take you home at once?"

"Yes, indeed, if you don't mind," gratefully, "and it will be such a relief to [illegible] myself in an automobile with sou[illegible] one else responsible for whatever it runs into."

Cone laughed and sprang to the ground, followed by Clarkson. It took but a few moments to assist the girl from her machine and into his own; then Cone stepped in beside her.

"You'll be able to fix the machine all right without me, Clarkson," he called. "Miss Tyson is in a hurry to get home." Then, over his shoulder as the automobile began to glide away: "If you get back in time for the golf don't wait for us. Miss Tyson may be too tired for a quick run. We will go round by the Lake Shore road. That will be pleasanter. And, say, you needn't bother about that afternoon call. I don't think it will be worth while now."

There were a honk and a clatter, and away the automobile sped, leaving a cloud of dust and a smell of burnt lamp wick behind.

THE BILLBOARD EVIL.

Montclair (N. J.) Society Fighting to Eliminate Advertising Posters.

The Mountain society, devoted to bettering conditions in the northern portion of the town of Montclair, N. J., is making it known to the merchants thereabout that if they want the custom of its members they must advertise in a seemly way. And this, they say, is not via the billboard. The society has issued this statement:

"There is no legal way to prevent the erection of such signs on private property or to cause their removal after they are erected, but the community has in its hands an effective method of making them worthless by refusing to buy goods so advertised. No advertiser will spend his money on such displays when it is well understood that the community which he seeks to interest in his goods is averse to that kind of advertising."

And these reformers go further still. They are sending out cards with the statement, "I am opposed to the erection of signs for advertising purposes in Upper Montclair, and the policy of my family is not to buy goods advertised in that manner." This statement the society requests its members to sign and return.

The Penalties of Indifference.

Following is a sermon on town improvement that should be read by every man residing in rural sections throughout the country: The man who, expending his energies wholly on private affairs, refuses to take trouble about public affairs, pluming himself on his wisdom in minding his own business, is blind to the fact that his own business is made possible only by maintenance of a healthy social state and that he loses all around by defective governmental arrangements. Where there are many like minded with himself—where as a consequence offices come to be filled by political adventurers and opinion is swayed by demagogues—where bribery vitiates the administration of law and makes fraudulent state transactions habitual, heavy penalties fall on the community at large and, among others, on those who have thus done everything for self and nothing for society. Their investments are insecure. Recovery of their debts is difficult, and even their lives are less safe than they would otherwise have been.—Herbert Spencer.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION OF PRESIDENT TAFT

Is a Prayer For Peace Among the Nations of the World.

President Taft has issued his annual Thanksgiving proclamation calling upon citizens of the United States to celebrate Thursday, the 30th of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer. The proclamation reads as follows:

"The people of this land, having by long sanction and practice set apart toward the close of each year a day on which to cease from their labors and assemble for the purpose of giving praise to Him who is the author of the blessings they have enjoyed, it is my duty as Chief Executive to designate at this time the day for the fulfillment of this devout purpose.

"Our country has been signally favored in many ways. The round of the seasons has brought rich harvests. Our industries have thriven far beyond our domestic needs, the productions of our labor are daily finding enlarged markets abroad. We have been free from the curses of pestilence, of famine and war. Our national counsels have furthered causes of peace in other lands and the spirit of benevolence has brought us into closer touch with other peoples to the strengthening of the bonds of fellowship and good will that links us to our comrades in the universal brotherhood of nations.

"Strong in the sense of our own right and inspired by a strong sense of rights of others, we live in peace and harmony with the world. Rich in the priceless possessions and abundant resources wherewith the unstinted bounty of God has endowed us we are unselfishly glad when other peoples pass onward to prosperity and peace. That the great privileges we enjoy may continue, and that each coming year may see our country more firmly established in the regard and esteem of our fellow nations is the prayer that should arise in every thankful heart.

"Wherefore I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, designate Thursday, the 30th of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and I earnestly call upon my countrymen and upon all that dwell under the flag of our beloved country then to meet their accustomed place of worship to join in offering praises to Almighty God and devout thanks for the loving mercies He has given to us.

"In witness thereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Chicago, this 30th day of October, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and eleven and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-sixth.

By the President.

P. C. KNOX, Secretary State."

OUR BALTIMORE LETTER.

Politics Freely Discussed By Our Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, MD., Oct. 30, 1911.

A great deal has been said and written from time to time about the attitude of Mr. Gorman, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Maryland, toward honest elections, since his advent into public life, more particularly following his acceptance speech in which he had something to say about "the sanctity of the ballot." In a general way Mr. Gorman has been referred to as holding ideas concerning the ballot laws and election machinery wholly inimical to fair play and a square deal as between Democrats and Republicans in this State. Mr. Gorman's record as a public man has been analyzed, and not only is there a notable absence of word and act favoring the slightest improvement in the ballot laws of this State, looking more particularly to making the elective franchise easier and more readily of exercise, but there has been, on the other hand, a pronounced determination and persistence on his part to follow the lead of the bosses of his party whose policies are to curtail the privilege of the ballot rather than to open wide the door of the election booth and simplify the ballot so that honest men of limited education might be able to express their will and opinions at the polls.

Immediately following the Republican administration of 1896-1900 the Democratic party under the direction of then Governor (now U. S. Senator) John Walter Smith, began to undo the beneficient achievements of that period by repealing the superior election law of 1896 and substituting therefor ballot and registration laws that made for a restricted exercise of the elective franchise and calculated to so reduce the Republican and independent vote that Democratic succession in Maryland would not again be interrupted for generations to come. These efforts were productive of the infamous Wilson Ballot Law which has worked such dire havoc in eleven counties in the State and which permits of every trick and scheme that can be conceived by the fertile brain of unscrupulous and conscienceless manipulators.

When the people placed the Republican party in control in 1895 they found, among other things, that under the election law then in force the majority of Election Supervisors—which majority, being appointed by the Governor, were Democratic—the majority, or Democratic, Supervisors appointed the Republican, or minority, election judges and clerks; and those who recall those memorable Democratic ring days will remember that they usually selected the weakest, most stupid and most tractable Republicans they could find, in order that they might have them to co-operate with the Democratic judges and clerks in any plot or plan they might have on foot—not unlike the conditions that existed in Baltimore City during the recent primary, which made possible the corruption and repeating which have been brought to light during the Grand Jury's investigation.

The Republicans notwithstanding the fact that they could have turned this same law and its customary operation to their own good account with a Republican Governor to appoint the majority members of the boards of Election Supervisors in each county—regardless of this same advantage it gave to them, they promptly repealed this manifestly unfair provision and enacted the law as it is at present, governing the selection of election judges and clerks by the Election Supervisors, which provides that each Supervisor, Democratic or Republican, has the right of vetoing any name suggested for an election judge or clerk by the Supervisor or Supervisors of the opposite party. In case a deadlock results, the Supervisor representing the party for whom the judge or clerk is to be chosen, must nominate three men, one of whom must be chosen by the Supervisors representing the other party.

But this fair and equitable plan did not suit Mr. Gorman, he of the sacred regard for the "sancity of the ballot," he of the deep concern for fair and honest elections. Mr. Gorman wanted this law changed. The rumblings of dissatisfaction and discontent from every section of the State were increasing in volume and intensity and the Democratic bosses were growing correspondingly uneasy. They must again get possession of "the window" before they could once more feel absolutely secure, and the way to get "the window" was to get the election judges and clerks, and they must find a way to select them all—Republicans as well as Democrats—they must select them all themselves if they were to control them.

And so it followed that Mr. Gorman, President of the 1910 session of the Maryland Senate, introduced a bill, the passage of which practically meant a return to the old system of selecting judges and clerks of election by placing their appointment solely in the hands of the Democrats. Mr. Gorman's bill renewed the right of the Supervisors to veto any appointment, and lodged full power with the majority (which are Democratic) members of the board. It provided that the Supervisors of each party must nominate three men for each judge or clerk to be selected, and from these names the majority (Democrats) members of the board should select the election officials. Thus the majority members of the boards of Election Supervisors, who are Democrats, could pick out the strongest and "wisest" of their own party, and select for themselves those Republicans who either would not understand, or who would co-operate in any juggling or other "irregularity" the Democratic election officers might find it necessary or expedient to engage in during registration or election times. In plain words it gave the Democratic bosses absolute and unrestricted control of "the window."

It is worth noting further in connection with this scheme of Mr. Gorman's, that his bill was introduced and had been pending in the Senate one whole week before its real import, purpose and intent were discovered, showing with what care, cunning and premeditation the good and noble President of the Senate (now candidate for Governor) had proceeded with his plot against the electorate. Fortunately, however, it was found out in good time, and when the real viciousness of the bill became known its enactment was prevented by the overwhelming opposition the measure itself created.

And this is the pure and holy Mr. Gorman who poses as the advocate of honest elections, and prates about "the sanctity of the ballot!"

This is the same Mr. Gorman who expects the decent and respectable people of Maryland to elect him Governor of this grand old State on the 7th of November!

VOLUME 35. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1911 NUMBER 35

GOLDSBOROUGH WON BY 3000; SOPER AND CUNNINGHAM DEFEATED BY SMALL VOTE; NEXT STATE LEGISLATURE DEMOCRATIC

Democrats Knifed Gorman Freely In The City and Counties—Garrett County Gives 948 Majority For Goldsborough

That Phillips Lee Goldsborough has been elected Governor of Maryland has been established by the unofficial returns. His plurality will be in the neighborhood of 3000. Of this majority Garrett county lays claim to having contributed upwards of a thousand, the unofficial figures making it 948.

Mr. Goldsborough, however, will be surrounded at Annapolis by Democrats. Both houses of the Legislature, it now seems certain, will be strongly Democratic, and in addition it appears practically certain that Edgar Allen Poe, Democrat, has been elected Attorney General, and that Emerson C. Harrington, also a Democrat, has been elected Comptroller.

Both Poe and Harrington carried Baltimore City over their Republican opponents. Poe's plurality was 600 and Harrington's 700. In the counties both men seem to have run much better than Senator Gorman, and this, coupled with the lead the two men have in the city, expected to pull them through.

Later returns from the city, some returns still missing, make more evident that the result in the city was a victory for the intelligent, discriminating voter.

"Bob" Car. Mahon's candidate for State's Attorney, was defeated by Broening (Republican).

J. Albert Hughes, the Democratic organization's candidate for Sheriff, not only was beaten, but ran a bad third in a three-cornered race. "Tom" McNulty was also defeated, the victory in this contest going to Weis, the Republican candidate, who polled 10,000 less than his party vote, but still had enough to beat out McNulty.

Baltimore will send three Democratic Senators to Annapolis this winter, along with one hold-over Republican in the Fourth district. Coady wins in the First district and Campbell in the Second district, and Maloy wins in the Third district. Coady and Campbell were re-elected.

The city's Legislative delegation in the House of Delegates will be split unless the official figures should change the unofficial count. According to the unofficial figures the Democrats elect five men in the First district, four in the Second, three in the Third and one in the Fourth. As each district delegation consists of six men, the balance are Republicans. The city delegation will therefore stand 13 Democrats and 11 Republicans.

A SLIGHT FIRE.

Home of Mr. Stahl on Oak Street Damaged Sunday Morning.

Sunday morning about four o'clock the home of Mr. Stahl, on Oak street was slightly damaged by fire and but for the timely discovery of the blaze by neighbors serious and probably fatal results would have ensued.

In the dwelling, which is a double one, two families and two visitors were sleeping when the smell of burning wood awakened Mr. and Mrs. Albert Ashby, who live in the adjoining building. Mr. Ashby made an investigation of the cause and soon discovered the fire and immediately sounded an alarm. The inmates of the house were awakened and the fire, which was confined to a large morris chair and some clothing, which had been thrown upon it, was soon extinguished. How the fire originated is not known.

From Chairman Bond.

To the District Committeemen:

I desire to thank you heartily for the excellent work accomplished by you individually and collectively during the campaign which has just closed and which has given us the victory.

Business matters necessitating my leaving Oakland tonight and the consequent lack of time, will not allow me to send a personal letter to each committeeman, much to my regret, hence I employ this means of returning my sincere thanks for the excellent work you did and trust that in the near future I shall be able to meet and personally thank you for the part you took in making the majority for our next Governor so large. Very truly yours,

N. U. BOND,
Chairman Republican Committee.

Nathan Family Migrating.

Postmaster and Mrs. Michael Nathan, their son Carroll, and daughter Beatrice, have gone abroad for the winter, Mrs. Nathan's health necessitating the change. They left on Saturday morning for Frostburg in L. H. Diefenbach's car; thence to Oakland to spend a few days with Mrs. Nathan's sister, Mrs. David Durst, after which they will go to St. Louis. No definite plans were made as to when or where they will resume housekeeping, but it is probable that they will spend part of the winter in California. Misses Bess and Beulah Engle, the pretty and efficient postmistresses, are left in charge of the house as well as of Uncle Sam's mail during the family's absence.—Grantsville Corr. Keeping the Dollars AT HOME.

Ten years ago a farmer put his initials on a one dollar bill. The next day he went to the nearest town and spent it with a merchant. Before the year was out he got the dollar bill back. Four times in six years the dollar came back to him for produce and three times he heard of it in the pockets of his neighbors. The last time he got it back was four years ago. He sent it to a retail mail order house. He has never seen that dollar since and never will. That dollar will never pay any more school or road tax for him; will not build or brighten any of the homes of the community. He sent it entirely out of the circle of usefulness to himself and his neighbors.

Bring in your Produce of all kinds and especially Butter, Eggs and Buckwheat Four. We will pay $2.75 Cash for the Flour. Also bring your Mine Ties and Props. We always pay the highest market price.

FUNCTIONAL ETHICS

By Rev. Clarence Greeley

TEXT—By their fruits ye shall know them.—Matt. 7:20.

As Schopenhauer thought, the solution of life is not for us in far off isles of the blessed; we are born for the world of manly business, task, vocation, function—ethically known by our fruits.

Right function is progressive action. True moral life is like the heart pulsation; it ends one beat only to begin another. The twentieth century philosopher or preacher of ethics must be something of a naturalist to realize that the functions of the yearning, struggling will are describable only in terms of experience; and the human mind, with its moral truth or averments, have grown through countless ages.

The eighteenth century rationalism, like the melieval dogmatism, and the Greek idealism, looked upon the moral world, not as dynamic or functional, but static. The nineteenth century thinkers since Darwin agreed on the transformation of species—which had been regarded since Aristotle, as fixed and final in form once for all. Men of the rationalistic eighteenth century had much to say of the dignity of changeless essential man from the savage up to Shakespeare.

But the nineteenth century proved that human nature is more like an organism, not permanent in its structure, but capable of progress or retrogression, as the outcome of physical, mental and moral growth of the race for more than 10,000 years; and its moral dignity is that of untold ages of suffering, survival, failure, victory, progress.

Hence the twentieth century preacher or teacher of ethics should know our new physiology—the science of functions.

Our new psychology is called functional; our new logic is called functional; our new philosophy is really functional; there is even a functional theology; their truth not sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought, but vital with the pulse beat of life. Therefore, I venture, somewhat timidly, on June 6, before the Fellowship club in this city, to speak on "Functional Ethics," a term I had not seen in print, and Professor Tufts of the University of Chicago gives assurance that no work has ever appeared, to his knowledge, under that title.

I do not seek, however, to corner functional ethics—quite the reverse—but would define the subject in part, as we follow the rough Bahnpfahl (new track) I am trying to blaze in the woods, as follows: The ethics that associates itself with the functions of the body—growing out of those and of society—and the conceptions underlying.

The importance of this method (not system) is felt not only by conservative Christians who, as over against mere rationalistic creeds, have a presentiment that Christ's ethical way was functional instead of credal or methaphysical; but as a mode of thinking, functionalism was also the only ultimate defence of Protestantism against the papacy. Not only conservative Christians, as contrasted with rationalistic, feel this influence of the zeitgeist, but Professor Fostor, e. g., a somewhat different type—familiar with up-to-date life sciences—affirms that one corner stone of twentieth century morality is in our human struggle for self-preservation, a principle inexplicable in all activity which we call life. The point we are making is this: The ethics of the twentieth century will not be rationalistic but functional; and this fact is largely the fruit of our new or modern biology.

The importance of this fact is obvious when we reflect that even the rennaissance largely ignored common life (which Henry Drummond defines as functions); and the so-called "culture" of that period denied to ordinary human nature the capacity to develop organs and functions, not only for its own preservation but development.

Under the gradual influence of our new biology there is more and more a tendency to look for true goods in the normal development of the vital functions which constitute man's nature—mental, moral and spiritual, as well as physical and economic.

A basis of functional ethics in our new biology may be thus set forth: When the organism modifies its activity or its structure in response to changed conditions, those modifications are called functional adapatations. We would not press the analogy of colonies of ants and bees to human society too far. But we may learn from biology of lower individuals that each should attempt to preserve itself, promote progress, and, if it be a member of a higher community, it should act in the interests of others and the whole group; that it its fundamental task, vocation, function.

The practical application of biological fruits to the derivation of ethics, not from imaginary standards in bygone unscientific ages, but from life functions and tasks in laboratory, shop, home, school and church—as well urgent social topics of the time—is obvious, not merely the teaching of necessiary truth, too long fatally neglected, concerning race, sex, procreation, heredity and all "the real earthly troubled nature of body and soul."

KING WARNS AGAINST DRINK

One of Most Powerful Rulers of South Africa Cautions His People Against Use of Alcohol.

Words of warning against alcoholic drink formed part of the kingly address of one of the most powerful native rulers of South Africa at a great celebration lately held to mark the fiftieth anniversary of his acceptance of Christianity. This ruler is King Kama of the Bamangwato, in Bechuanaland, South Africa. Fifty-one years ago Kama came in touch with a German missionary preaching and teaching among the native Bechuanas in the old native capital of the Bamangwato, at Shoshong, and accepted the new faith. A year later he came to his own as king and ruler of the Bamangwato, and became at once so active in promoting the spread of Christianity among his people that at length the whole great territory over which he ruled came under its sway.

Kama, now an aged man, but still the happy ruler of his Christian subjects, has recently held at Serowe, his capital, a week of festival for his Christian jubilee, attended by multitudes of his native subjects and by many mission workers and distinguished white visitors from all parts of South Africa. After a great military parade of the king's troops, Kama within a retinue of eight thousand Bechuanas, attended a great thanksgiving service, where a multitude of 12,000 assembled, where official felicitations were presented, and where a younger brother of the king, speaking for the whole nation, reviewed the great transformation for good that has taken place in the tribal life and customs under Kama's rule. Chief among the good results noted was the exclusion of alcoholic drink from the land. The drink evil had been well-known in their land, and while it was not yet entirely suppressed, the traffic could no longer flourish and was made illegal. Kama himself made a striking address and warned his people against drink as "the great enemy of their happiness and progress." Thanking the white people for their friendship and help, he begged them to guard their darker brothers of the native race from the destruction wrought through the traffic in strong drink. Alcoholic drink constitutes a menace of utmost danger to its users in cold climates and holds decidedly a similar menace for those of warm climates—whether white or black.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE IS BEST

Dr. Fulton, Noted English Expert, Lectures on "Alcohol and Tuberculosis"—Drink Causes Poverty.

At the Tuberculosis exhibition, held at Nottingham, England, Dr. Fulton, a noted expert, lectured to a large audience on "Alcohol and Tuberculosis." Dr. Fulton said that there was some connection, direct and indirect, between alcohol and consumption. An indirect way in which the two were connected was that alcohol was instrumental in placing people in unhealthy surroundings, with insufficient food. He would also show that there was scientific evidence that there was a direct connection between the two. Alcohol was an indirect cause of consumption, mainly because it was a cause of poverty. He had long since come to the conclusion that it was not poverty that caused drink, but drink that caused poverty and dirt. People who were poor did not live in such good rooms as others, and they were often overcrowded, and infection was the more dangerous under these conditions. Money, too, was often spent on alcohol which should be spent on food and clothing. The difficulty of dealing with a consumptive who was addicted to alcoholism was instanced by the lecturer, who spoke of the appetite being ruined by drinking bouts. Alcohol predisposed to consumption by lowering the vitality of the body, and thus lessening its power of resistance to disease germs. Experiments had been made on animals which proved that alcohol did reduce the resistance of the body to disease. Medical men admitted that it did in cases of pneumonia, erysipelas, and blood poisoning; and yet some would not admit it in cases of consumption, although the diseases differed only in detail. Postmortem examination had also strengthened this argument. In conclusion, he illustrated the benefits of total abstinence on health, and compared insurance tables on this subject, showing the benefits of abstinence principles and practice.

Drink in New South Wales.

A recent Sydney press dispatch contains an estimate by Archdeacon Boyce of that city of the amount of the drink bill of New South Wales for the year 1909. The figures which he gives are £5,217,682, which would be more than $25,000,000. This he estimates to be a reduction of about £45,697 from the amount expended in the previous year.

Intemperance and Poverty.

Colonial Rugs

THE revival of "rag" carpet weaving has brought out numbers of new designs in rugs which merit the dignified new name with which they have been christened. "Colonial" is in every way a happy choice of names and the new rugs, made of rags, are pleasing to look at, good to wear, and fashionable. They are woven in all sizes; the smaller ones are easily washed and for bedrooms, bathrooms and living rooms this one item alone commends them above all others. The old "hit and miss" pattern made of bright colors mixed with black and a little white makes a really handsome floor covering for hall, dining room or living room. Inasmuch as smaller rugs are so much easier for the housewife to handle and to keep clean, two or three small rugs are to be preferred to one large one for the rooms that are much used, and the "hit and miss" pattern with dark stripes in the border is probably the best choice. Very handsome rugs are shown in the stores having plain grounds in brown, grey, rose or tan, with striped or figured borders. For living rooms darker shades are chosen than for bedrooms. Nothing could look much better for bedrooms than these Colonial rugs in the lighter shades of blue, in light rose and in tan, two small and one larger rug, all made to match, with plain ground and striped or figured borders, will provide all the floor covering that is desirable in a sleeping room. With wall paper harmonizing in color and general appearance, and with plain or crossbar muslin or scrim curtains, any one may count upon a room that is a thing of beauty. By choosing plain paper for the walls and a plain ground in the rugs, with white or cream window draperies—one may indulge in cretonne coverings and cushions and a variety in such furnishings without the "cluttered up" effect which spoils so many rooms. Everything in a bedroom should be dainty. But nothing will stay dainty unless it is washable. The floor coverings, window hangings and even the window shades which will stand the tub, are of the sort to be a delight as long as they last. White shades of Indian-head cotton or butcher's linen may be used, with a second pair of green shades to shut out light—when necessary. Or the windows may be provided with side draperies of cretonne which will answer the same purpose.

There are some rag rugs which are not woven, that are washable, but not as attractive as the Colonial rugs. They are made of rags plaited into long strips and then sewed together. Some very rich looking rugs are made of short bits of rags drawn through a burlap foundation and tied. These follow a design stamped on the burlap and are clipped off evenly when the rug is finished. The effect is very rich and handsome, but such rugs are not desirable for entire floor coverings, and will successfully not stand washing. They are fine for the introduction of bright bits of color in a den or living room. With wear they get to look considerably like Oriental rugs when made of wool rags in rich colors.

NEWEST IN SETS OF FURS

Extensive Variety Will Be a Feature in Styles for the Coming Season.

Among the expensive numbers, the empire scarf and pillow muff occupy a prominent position. The straight, broad design, with edging band of contrasting fur, is one of the styles seen last season and launched again for fall. The newer scarfs show the straight outer edge and curved outline where the scarf joins in front. This tapering line extends to the bottom and gives the cutaway effect, seen in many of the new coats.

The practical styles show the animal designs, scarf effects, collars and fancy neckpieces finished with tails and trimming bands. Raccoon promises to be much worn and foxes of all varieties are being rapidly taken up. New fox sets show the white fur tipped with black, with black and white tail trimmings. Fisher is being shown to a large extent in expensive merchandise, and caracul with fox or skunk trimmings is appearing in medium priced sets.

Every kind of fur is utilized, no matter what quality or color, better grade of skins or softer shades of fur often being combined with unattractive varieties to make desirable sets.

Ribbon Corset Bags.

Flowered ribbons, with the solid satin borders, are the most popular for these bags. It takes four strips of the ribbon, feather-stitched together or put together with the crocheted rings, leaving a turnover at the top, where the ribbons are cut in points and finished with sunflower bows.

The hangers are of narrow ribbons with a big sunflower in the center to conceal the nail upon which the bag is hung. These bags hold two pairs of corsets and keep them free from dust. The sunflower rosettes are the sachets.

Separate Waists.

The waists to be worn with tailored suits this fall, both in design and trimming effects, are influenced by the East Indian note so much in evidence since the coronation. They are made of chiffon, voile and crepe de chine in the suit shades, and are embroidered with the new worsted embroidery and striking bead-work trimming, which are decidedly Hindu in character and coloring. This will make most attractive home work for women who delight in fashioning their own blouses and adding individual touches of hand work to them.—Harper's Bazar.

UTILITY ULSTER.

Loose fitting and easily donned, yet of ultra smartness of effect, is this utility coat of worsted mixture in mixed gray tones, faced with navy and white pin striping. This prominent facing pattern shows on the wide cuffs of the large but conveniently shaped coat sleeves and in the cape collar which cover the shoulders and affords additional protection to the back. The trotter skirt, peeping from below the hem of the coat, is of white mohair striped with navy blue, and the correct autumn model in coque feather covered sailors is trimmed with plaited white sash ribbon.

French Woman's Hat.

"The French woman never seems to put her hat on straight," says an observing American who has lived for some years in France. "There is always a coy little tilt; or, again, she will wear her chapeau at an alarmingly acute angle—but straight, never! One of her notions just now is to line the hat throughout with black velvet, and then wear it at such a slant that, standing at her side, one sees the wearer's features completely solhoutted against the soft velvet, and the top of the hat itself not at all! Here, again, good looks stand such an arrangement to perfection, while even irregularities of nose and chin are surprisingly softened by this always becoming background."

SEEMS EASIER TO REMEMBER

Remarks of Writer in Cleveland Plain Dealer Appear to Contain Much Sense.

There is a new science called mnemonics, which is trying to get itself introduced into our public schools. We have no knock on this science—only it seems to us to be a roundabout way of arriving at facts that you ought to remember right off the bat. It appears to work something in this manner:

"When was Lincoln born?" asks the teacher.

"I—I f-f-forget," whines the pupil.

"Naturally you do. Go at it right. How many Muses are there in mythology?"

"Nine."

"Right. Now double that number."

"Twice-nine's-eighteen."

"Right again. Multiply it by 100."

"1800."

"1809."

"Aha! That's when Lincoln was born. Why don't you learn the scientific way of getting at these things?"

As we said in the first place, it's a noble science, but we'd rather remember dates.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HOW NASTY.

Mr. Chumpleigh—My, but it's hot in here, doncherknow. I feel as though I were being cooked.

Miss Causteque—Broiled lobster isn't so bad.

I should say sincerity, a deep, great genuine sincerity, is the first characteristic of all men in any way heroic.—Carlyle.

44 Bu. to the Acre

is a heavy yield, but that's what John Kennedy of Edmonton, Alberta, Western Canada, got from 40 acres of Spring Wheat in 1910. Reports from other districts in that province showed other excellent results—such as 4,000 bushels of wheat from 120 acres, or 33 1-3 bu. per acre, 25, 30 and 40 bushel yields were numerous. As high as 123 bushels of oats to the acre were threshed from Alberta fields in 1910.

The Silver Cup

at the recent Spokane Fair was awarded to the Alberta Government for its exhibit of grains, grasses and vegetables. Reports of excellent yields for 1910 come also from Saskatchewan and Manitoba in Western Canada.

Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining pre-emptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre) are to be had in the choicest districts.

Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured, mixed farming a success.

SYNOPSIS.

David Amber, starting for a duck-shooting visit with his friend, Quain, comes upon a young lady equestrian who has been dismounted by her horse becoming frightened at the sudden appearance in the road of a burly Hindu. He declares he is Behari Lal Chatterji, "The appointed mouthpiece of the Bell," addresses Amber as a man of high rank and pressing a mysterious little bronze box, "The Token," into his hand, disappears in the wood. The girl calls Amber by name. He in turn addresses her as Miss Sophie Farrell, daughter of Col. Farrell of the British diplomatic service in India and visiting the Quains. Several nights later the Quain home is burglarized and the bronze box stolen. Amber and Quain go hunting on an island and become lost and Amber is left marooned. He wanders about, finally reaches a cabin and recognizes as its occupant an old friend named Rutton, whom he last met in England, and who appears to be in hiding. When Miss Farrell is mentioned Rutton is strangely agitated. Chatterji appears and summons Rutton to a meeting of a mysterious body. Rutton seizes a revolver and dashes after Chatterji. He returns wildly excited, says he has killed the Hindu, takes poison, and when dying asks Amber to go to India on a mysterious errand. Amber decides to leave at once for India. On the way he sends a letter to Mr. Labertouche, a scientific friend in Calcutta, by a quicker route. Upon arriving he finds a note awaiting him. It directs Amber to meet his friend at a certain place. The latter tells him he knows his mission is to get Miss Farrell out of the country. Amber attempts to dispose of the Token to a money-lender, is mistaken for Rutton and barely escapes being mobbed. A message from Labertouche causes him to start for Darjeeling; on the way he meets Miss Farrell, and at their journey's end asks her to become his wife. A Hindu conducts Amber to a secret place, and into the presence of a beautiful woman who mistakes him for Rutton. Later Amber is drugged. The Hindus plot rebellion, and at Labertouche's instigation Amber returns to the woman Naraini to discover the secret of the conspiracy. He learns they would make him their king, and is found facing a cobra in the Test of Death when rescued by Labertouche and his friends.

CHAPTER XIX. (Continued.)

"You promise not to harm her?"

"Amber!" cried the Englishman, impatiently. "Will you—"

"Please, Miss Farrell!" begged Amber, trying to take the girl's hand and draw her away.

"I won't!" she declared. "I'll not move a step until he promises. You don't understand. No matter what the danger she's—"

"She's a fiend incarnate," Labertouche broke in. "Amber, get that girl—"

"She's my sister!" cried Sophia. "Now will you understand?"

"What?" The two men exclaimed as one.

"She's my sister," the girl repeated, holding up her head defiantly, her cheeks burning—"my sister by adoption. We were brought up together. She was the daughter of an old friend of my father's—an Indian prince. A few years ago she ran away—"

"Thank God!" said Amber from the bottom of his soul; and, "Ah, you would!" cried Labertouche tensely, as Naraini seized the opportunity, when his attention was momentarily diverted, to break for freedom.

Amber saw the flash of a steel blade in the woman's hand as she struck at the secret agent, and the latter, stepping back, deflected the blow with a guarding forearm. Then, with the quickness of a snake, Naraini stooped, glided beneath his arms, and slipped from the cell.

With a smothered oath Labertouche leaped to the doorway, lifting his pistol; but he was no quicker than Sophia, who caught his arm and held him back. "No," she panted; "not even for our lives—not at that price!"

He yielded unexpectedly. "Of course you are perfectly right, Miss Farrell," said he, with a little bow. "I'm sorry that circumstances . . . But come! She'll have this hornet's nest about our ears in a brace of seconds. Hark to that!"

A long, shrill shriek echoed down the gallery. Labertouche shrugged and turned to the left. "Come along," he said. "Amber, take Miss Farrell's hand and keep close to me." He led the way from the cell at a brisk pace—one, indeed, that taxed Sophia's powers of endurance to maintain.

At length they stood on a low, pebbly ledge, just outside the black maw of the passage—an entrance hidden in a curtain-like fold in the face of the cliff that towered above them, casting an ink-black shadow. But beyond it the emblazoned firmament glowed irradiant, and at their feet the encircling waters ran, a broad ribbon of black silk purling between the cliff and the opposing shores, where a thicket of tamarisks rose, a black and ragged wall.

Labertouche strode off into the water. "Straight ahead," he announced; "don't worry—'tisn't more than knee deep at the worst. I've horses waiting on the other side—"

"Horses!" Amber interrupted. "Great heavens, man, you're—you're omniscient!"

"No—lucky," Labertouche retorted briskly. "Where'd I been without Ram Nath? He's taking care of the animals. . . . Come along. What 're you waiting for? Don't you know—" He turned to see the girl hesitant, though with lifted skirts. "Oh," he said in an accent of understanding, and came back. "If you'll help me, Amber, I daresay we can get Miss Farrell across without a wetting."

He offered to clasp hands with the Virginian and so make a seat; but Amber had a happier thought.

"I think I can manage by myself, thank you—if Miss Farrell will trust me."

His eyes met the girl's, and in hers he read trust and faith unending: he was conscious of a curious fluttering in his bosom.

"Trust you!" she said, with a little, broken laugh, and gave herself freely to his arms.

Labertouche grunted and turned his back, wading out into the stream with a great splashing.

Amber straightened up, holding her very close to him, and that with ease. Had she been thrice as heavy he could have borne her with as little care as he did his own immeasurably lightened heart in that hour of fulfillment. The further bank neared all too quickly. He would willingly have lingered to prolong the stolen sweetness of that moment, forgetful altogether of the danger that lay behind him.

Ahead he saw Labertouche step out upon a shelving shore and, shaking his legs with an effort irresistibly suggestive of a dog leaving the water, peer inland through the tamarisks. His low, whistled signal sounded as Amber joined him and put down the girl—reluctantly. Her whispered thanks were interrupted by an exclamation from Labertouche.

"Hang it all! he can't have mistaken the spot. I told him to wait right here, and now . . . We daren't delay." He cast an apprehensive glance across the stream. "Look lively, please."

He shouldered a way through the thicket, and for several moments they struggled on through the hindering undergrowth, their passage betrayed by much noisy rustling. Then, as they won through to open ground, Labertouche paused and whistled a second time, staring eagerly from right to left.

"I'm blessed!" he declared, with a vehemence that argued his desire for stronger language. "This is bad—bad—bad! He never failed me before! I—"

A mocking chuckle seemed to break from the ground at their feet, and in the flicker of an eyelash a shadow lifted up out of the scrub-encumbered level. Sophia cried aloud with alarm; Labertouche swore outright, heedless; and Amber put himself before her, drawing his revolver, heartsick with the conviction that they were trapped, that their labor had gone all for naught, that all futilely had they schemed and dared. . . .

But while his finger was yet seeking the trigger the first shadow was joined by a score of fellows—shades that materialized with the swiftness and silence from the surface of the earth—and before he could level the weapon Labertouche seized his wrist. For an instant he resisted, raging with disappointment; but the Englishman was cool, strong, determined; inevitably in the outcome the weapon was pointed to the sky.

"Steady, you ass!" breathed the secret agent in his ear. "Can't you see—"

And Amber gave over, in amazement unbounded, seeing the starlight glinting down a dozen leveled rifle-barrels, glowing pale on the spiked, rounded crowns of pith helmets, and striking soft fire from burnished accoutrements; while a voice, thick with a brogue that was never bred out of hearing of Bow Bells, was hectoring them to surrender.

"'Ands up, ye bloomin' black beggars! 'Ands up, I sy!"

"Tommies!" cried Amber; and incontinently he dropped the revolver as though it had turned hot in his hand.

"Steady, my man!" Labertouche interrupted what threatened to develop into a string of intolerable abuse. "Hold your tongue! Can't you see we've a lady with us?"

"Uh-lo!" The soldier lowered his rifle and stepped closer, his voice vibrating with astonishment. "Blimme, 'ere's a go! . . . beggar of a nigger givin' me wotfor 's if 'e was a gent! 'Oo in 'ell d'ye think y'are, yer 'ighness?"

"That'll do. Put down those guns, and call your commanding officer. I'll explain to him. Where is he? What troops are you? When did you arrive?"

"What's this?" A sharp voice cut the comments of the Tommies, and they were smitten silent by it. An officer, with jingling spurs and sword in hand, elbowed through the heart of the press. "Stop that row instantly. What's this? Who are you, sir?"

"I sent the message from Kathiapur, and I'm uncommonly happy to meet you, whoever you may be, sir. Tell your men to fall back, please, and I'll introduce myself properly."

Two words secured the secret agent the privacy he desired; the officer offered him an ungloved hand as the troopers withdrew out of hearing.

"Happy, indeed!" he said cheerfully. "I'm Rowan, captain, Fourteenth pioneers."

"I'm Labertouche, I. S. S. This is Miss Farrell, daughter of Colonel Farrell, and this Mr. Amber of New York. We've just escaped from that rock over there and—if you'll pardon—I'd suggest you set a strong guard over the ford behind those tamarisks."

"One moment, please." The officer strode off to issue instructions in accordance with Labertouche's advice, while the woman on his arm clung to him the closer.

"I thought we'd better bring her to you, for she said . . ." Rowan paused, embarrassed, and took a fresh start. "My men got to the ford just as she was coming ashore with three other men, and the whole pack took to cover on this side. Two of the men are still missing, but we routed out the other just now with this—ah—lady. He showed fight and got bayonetted. But the woman—excuse me, Mr. Amber—she protests—by George, it's too ridiculous!—"

"I have claimed naught that is not true!" an unforgettably sweet voice interrupted from the center of the group. It opened out, disclosing Naraini between two guards, in that moment of passion and fear perhaps more incomparably beautiful than any woman they had ever looked upon, save her who held to Amber's arm, a-quiver with womanly sympathy and compassion.

"Aye, I have claimed!" she stormed. "I have claimed justice and the rights of wifehood, the protection of him whose wife I am; or, if he deny me, I claim that he must suffer with me—he who hath played the traitor's part tonight, betraying his Cause and his wife alike to their downfall! . . . I claim," she insisted, lifting, in spite of the soldiers' restraining hands, one small quivering arm to single Amber out and point him to scorn, "that this is the man who, wedded to me by solemn right and the custom of the land, hath deserted and abandoned me, hath denied me even as he denies his birthright, when it doth please him, and forswears the faith of his fathers! I claim to be Naraini, Queen, wife to Har Dyal Rutton, rightful ruler of Khandawar—coward, traitor, renegade—who stands there!"

"For the love of heaven, Rowan, shut her up!" cried Labertouche. "It's all a pack of lies; the woman's raving. Rutton's dead, in the first place; in the second, he's her father. She can't be his wife very well, whether he's alive or dead. It's simply a dodge of hers to gain time. Shut her up and take her away—she's as dangerous as a wildcat!"

"Nay, I will not be gagged nor taken hence till I have said my say!" With a sudden furious wrench Naraini wrested her arms from the grasp of the guards and sprang away, eluding with lithe and snake-like movements their attempts to recapture her. "Not," she cried, "until I have wrought my will upon the two of them. Thou hast stood in my light too long, O my sister!"

A hand blazing with jewels tore at the covering of her bosom and suddenly came away clutching a dagger, thin, long and keen; and snarling she sprang toward the girl, to whose influence, however unwitting, she rightly ascribed the downfall of her scheme of empire. Rowan and Labertouche leaped forward and fell short, so lightning swift she moved; only Amber stood between her and her vengeance. Choking with horror, he put the girl behind him with a resistless hand, and took Naraini to his arms.

"Ah, hast thou changed thy mind, Beloved?" The woman caught him fiercely to her with an arm about his waist, and her voice rose shrill with mocking triumph. "Are my lips become so sweet to thee again? Then see how I kiss, thou fool!"

She thrust with wicked cunning, twice and again, before the men tore her away and disarmed her. For an instant wrestling like a demon with them, still animated by her murderous frenzy, still wishful to fill her cup of vengeance to the brim with the blood of the girl, she of a sudden ceased to resist and fell passive in their hands, a dying flicker of satisfaction in the eyes that watched the culmination of her crime. . . .

To Amber it was as if his body had been penetrated thrice by a needle of fire. The anguish of it was exquisite, stupefying. He was aware of a darkening, reeling world, wherein men's faces swam like moons, pallid, staring, and of a mighty and invincible lethargy that pounced upon him, body, brain and soul, like a black panther springing from the ambush of the night. Yet there were still words that must be spoken, lest they live in his subconsciousness to torment him through all the long, black night that was to receive him. He tried to steady himself, and lifted an arm that vibrated like the sprung limb of a sapling, signing to the secret agent.

"Labertouche," he said thickly . . . "Sophia . . . out of India . . . at once . . . life . . ."

The girl's arms received him as he fell.

Trotted Off Into the Shade of the Tamarisks.

CHAPTER XX.

A Later Day.

A man awoke from a long dream of night and fear, of passion, pain, and death, and opened eyes whose vision seemed curiously clear, to realize a new world, very unlike that in which the incoherent action of his dream had moved—a world of light and lively air, as sweet and wholesome as glistening white paint, sunshine, and an abundance of pure, cool air could render it.

Because he had known these things in a former existence, he understood that he lay in the lower berth of a first-cabin stateroom, aboard an ocean steamship; a spacious, bright box of a room, through whose open ports swayed brilliant shafts of temperate sunlight, together with great gusts of the salt sweet breath of the open sea. Through them, too, he could see patches of unclouded blue, athwart which now and again gulls would sweep on flashing, motionless pinions.

His eyeballs seems to move reluctantly in their sockets, and his head felt very light and empty, although so heavy that he could not lift it from the pillow. But he managed to shift his gaze from the window until it rested upon a man's face—a guant, impressive brown face illuminated by steady and thoughtful eyes, filled with that mystic, unshakable spirit of fatalism that is the Genius of the eastern peoples. The head itself stood out with almost startling distinctness against the background of pure white. It was swathed with an immaculate white turban.

The sick man felt that he recognized this countenance—had known it, rather, in some vague, half-remembered life before his latest death. The name . . . ? He felt his lips move and that they were thin and glazed. Moistening them with his tongue he made another attempt to articulate. A thin whisper passed them in two breaths: "Ram . . . Nath . . ."

Hearing this, the dark man started out of his abstraction, cast a swift, pitiful glance at the sick man's face, and came to hold a tumbler to his lips. The liquid, colorless, acrid, and pungent, slipped into his mouth, and he had to swallow whether he would or no. When the final drop disappeared, Ram Nath put down the glass, smiled, laid a finger on his lips, and went on tiptoe from the stateroom.

After awhile the man without an identity fell asleep, calmly, restfully, in absolute peace. When again he awakened it was with the knowledge that he was David Amber, and that a woman sat beside him.

"Sophia . . ."

His voice sounded in his own hearing very thin and brittle. The girl turned her gaze upon him swiftly, the soft smile deepening, the dream-light in her eyes burning brighter and more steady. She bent forward, placing over his wasted hand a hand firm and warm, strong yet gentle, its whiteness enhanced by the suggested tracery of blue veins beneath the silken skin, and by the rosy tips of her slender, subtle fingers.

"David!" she said.

He sighed and remembered. His brows knitted, then smoothed themselves out; for with memory came the realization that, since he was there and she by his side, God was surely in his heaven, all well with the world!

"How long . . . Sophia?"

"Five days, David."

"Where . . .?"

"At sea, David, on a Messageries boat for Marseilles. Dear . . ."

He closed his eyes in beatific content: "David . . . Dear . . .!"

"Can you listen?"

"Yes . . . sweetheart."

Her voice faltered; she flushed adorably. "You mustn't talk. But I'll tell you. . . . They refused to let us go back to Kuttarpur; an escort took us across the desert to Nok, you in a litter, I on horseback. There we took train to Haidarabad and Karachi. Ram Nath came with us, as bearer, it being necessary that he too should leave India. My father and your man Doggott joined us at Karachi, where this steamer touched the second day."

"You understand, now—?"

"Everything, dearest."

"Labertouche—?"

"He told me nothing. I haven't seen him since that morning, when, just after you were wounded, we started for Nok. He posted off to Kuttarpur to find my father. . . . No; it was you who told me—everything—in your delirium."

"And . . . you forgive—?"

"Forgive!"

He smiled faintly. "That photograph?"

"I had it ready to return to you that morning, David."

"Knowing what it meant to me?"

"Knowing what it meant to me—what it meant to both of us, David."

"So you weren't offended, that night?"

"I loved you even then, David. I think I must have loved you from that first day at Nokomis. Do you remember . . .?"

His eyes widened, perplexed, staring into her grave, dear eyes. "Then why did you pretend—?"

With the low, caressing laugh of a happy child, the girl knelt by the side of his berth, and laid her cheek against his own. "Oh, David, my David! When do you expect to understand the heart of a woman, dear heart of mine?"

Not Plymouth Rocks.

Concerning the age of eggs, there is likely to be much dispute. Very often it seems as if the only trustworthy authority must be the hen herself. If all raisers of chickens, however, were as frank as a certain man, householders would have little of which to complain.

One Saturday one of his customers asked him if she might have a dozen eggs within the next two or three days.

"Oh, yes, ma'am," replied John. "I'll bring you a dozen fresh ones tomorrow morning."

"No," protested the housewife, "I should not want you to bring them on Sunday—not on Sunday, John."

"Well," replied John, "all right, ma'am, if you say so, but it doesn't make any difference to the hens."—Tit-Bits.

Long and Short.

"I understand that little Mabel Jones is engaged to that extremely tall young simpleton, Buddy Browne."

"Yes, and have you heard her excuse?"

"Excuse?"

"Yes. She says she is only carrying out nature's most inexorable law."

"The law of love?"

"No, of contrasts."

Circumstantial Evidence.

A Scotchman and his wife were visiting in a wild, beautiful part of the country. While driving one day with their host, the two men sitting together in the front seat while the lady sat behind, they crossed a high bridge which spanned a roaring torrent. An unusually loud splash caught the gentlemen's attention for a moment, but nothing was said. After several miles the gentleman turned to address a remark to his wife, but her seat was empty.

"Aye," he remarked to his host, "that will be yon splash we heard."—Housekeeper.

Laughing Down a Whiner.

"The bluff, cheery optimism of Senator Frye," said a Lewiston divine, "could not brook a whiner. Once at a dinner here in Lewiston a whiner seated opposite Senator Frye said dolefully:

"'I have only one friend on earth—my dog.'

"'Why don't you get another dog?' said Senator Frye.

Too Much for Bill.

"I dunno how Bill's a-goin' to vote in this election," said the campaign worker. "I've hearn tell he's on the fence."

"He wuz thar," replied the neighbor, "but one o' the canderdates let fall a dollar on the off side of the fence, and Bill got dizzy an' fell over."—Christian Register.

IT WAS an honest count this trip.

AND the next day it did not snow.

OH! YOU School Superintendent!

LIKEWISE Garrett County School Board.

THE people fought for a square deal and won.

THERE is no doubt in the minds of the people when Mr. Browning's term of office expires now.

MR. GORMAN failed in making the Governorship a stepping stone into the United States Senate.

RETURNS from Baltimore city indicate that no vote juggling was indulged in by the election officials.

SHERIFF-ELECT W. A. MAFFETT'S majority, totalling nearly six hundred, is a record to be proud of.

THE ease with which the Republicans walked away from their Democratic opponent on the legislative ticket is truly laughable.

DUE credit is given those Democrats who placed the welfare of the schools above party success, and by their votes made sure the end of the reign of Superintendent Browning.

STATE'S ATTORNEY RENNINGER bore the brunt of the fight and the majority given him is a testimonial of the esteem in which he is held by the people of the county and an endorsement of the conduct of his office.

THUS THE WORLD MOVES ON

Returning from Europe, where he had been spending his first real vacation in twenty years, Thomas A. Edison the other day made the prediction that it is only a question of time, when the airship will supplant the steamship as a swift, safe and practical medium of trans-oceanic travel. As reflecting the marked change that has occurred within recent years in the popular belief in man's ability to accomplish the seemingly impossible, it is significant that no one dissents from "the wizard's" picture of our future means of locomotion.

Yesterday such a prophecy would have been laughed to scorn; today we not only accept it as within the realm of probability but look ahead to the day when the big leviathen of the air will replace not only the steamship but the railroad as well, for all forms of transportation. For the well meaning clergymen and church people who denounced Benjamin Franklin from their pulpits as a usurper of the Divine prerogative, because he showed his fellow countrymen, how by means of a lightning rod they could protect their lives and their property, we have nothing but pity.

Thomas Jefferson tells in his memoirs of one of his neighbors who was "agin" the public schools because, "when everybody gets so they can read and write, nobody will want to work." Bishop Berkely thanked God there was not a printing press in all Virginia, because, "printing presses printed mostly lies and their business was to deceive the people." Even so broad gauged a man as Ruskin declared the introduction of railroads would ruin England by driving the stages out of the business and killing the demand for horses. Peter Cooper, builder of the first locomotive operated in the United States was made the laughing stock of the whole countryside, because in a ten mile race with an old grey horse near Baltimore, his boiler sprang a leak and the horse won. Robert Fulton was declared a fraud by the boatmen of the Hudson River who doubted his ability to make the "Clarement" navigate its waters by steam and without the use of sails. Arkwright who invented the spinning frame which revolutionized the weaving business of the world was mobbed and Jacquard, whose loom is still the world's standard came near being thrown into the river by an angry crowd of fabric workers who feared his machine.

The invention of Elias Howe's sewing machine caused riots in New York and a Pennsylvania woman said of Samuel F. B. Morse's telegraph which the financiers of Wall street believed impractical and refused to finance, "I suppose no one can spank their brats now, without the whole world knowing all about it." Alexander Graham Bell's telephone was said to be a toy until the Emperor Dom Pedro finding it in a corner of the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, pronounced it one of the marvels of the age. Edison was thought to be possessed of a mild form of dementia when he announced that by injecting electricity into the carbon filament of a lamp from which the air had been removed he had discovered the secret of what is today the world's universal illuminant. Patrick B. Delaney excited the same popular misgivings among the unscientific with his multiplex, by which six messages were transmitted simultaneously over a single wire and taxed our imagination to limit by his telepost system of automatic telegraphy by which he sends 1000 words a minute over one wire. Finally when Marconi, the beardless youth from Bologna showed us how without the use of any wires at all, it was possible to communicate over sea, we admitted that there was nothing left to challenge our credulity.

Thus the world has moved on. Each step has broadened our perspective, strengthened our confidence and added to our length of day, our poise, peace, power and joy. No longer do we denounce any one or decry his invention. Rather have we got to that point in our evolution where we believe the apparently impossible is attainable and that mankind, is at last master not only of his own destiny but of that of generations yet unborn.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. ALICE V. MILLER.

Departed this life at Mountain Lake Park, November 4, 1911, Mrs. Alice V. Miller, the wife of George W. Miller, aged 48 years, 4 months and 21 days. Mrs. Miller was a native of Virginia and in her early days united with the Baptist church, of which church she remained a member until her death. She, with her husband and family, removed to this place a little over a year ago in the hope that the climate would benefit her health which had been failing for some time. For a while she did seem to improve, but the disease from which she had been suffering reasserted herself and surrounded by her loved ones she passed away. She was not afraid to die, for she trusted in her Lord for salvation and often said that if it were His will she would be willing to go at any time; but like all mothers her heart clung to the children she was to leave behind. Almost her last words were of admonition and advice to them. May God in His mercy keep them safely and guide them along the pathways of life and comfort them and their father in their bereavement. C. W. HUDSON.

S. FULLER CRANE.

Mr. Fuller S. Crane died last Monday at his home in Parkersburg, West Va., after an illness of about a month, following a stroke of paralysis. His funeral occured yesterday.

WILLIAM BITTNER.

William, aged seventeen years, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Bittner, of near the Red House, died at the Home Sanitorium in Oakland last Thursday evening, his death following an operation for the removal of an intestinal growth. The young man had been ill for many months and in his weakened condition he failed to rally from the anaesthetic. The operation was performed by Drs. Hawkins and Hinebaugh.

MRS. EDWARD GILPIN.

Mrs. Edith Gilpin, wife of Edward Gilpin, of Swanton, died at her home on Saturday afternoon at 5.30 o'clock after a long illness from cancer. The deceased is survived by her husband and two daughters.

Held For Grand Jury.

Jacob Cutter, of Garrett county, who was arrested at Lonaconing on the charge of horse stealing, was arraigned before Magistrate Murphy, Tuesday afternoon. After hearing some of the witnesses, the magistrate held the prisoner for the action of the January term of the grand jury. The charge was preferred by George Warnick, also of Garrett county. Mr. Warnick had gone into Lonaconing on Friday, October 20, to attend the Farmer's Festival. He placed his horse in the stable of Mr. J. J. Winn, on Douglas avenue, and he chargea that Cutter broke into the stable, which was locked, and rode the horse away, which was recovered several hours later. Mr. Warnick also lost a sum of money amounting to about eighty dollars. The money has not been found.

Winter Stops Work.

The state road building which has been underway on the National pike west of Frostburg for the past three months will be abandoned this week and nothing more will be done on the pike until early next summer. Superintendent M. T. McDowell, of Port Deposit, Md., and Inspector W. E. Hawkins, of Baltimore, will leave shortly for their homes. All the road building machinery and equipment will be left along the road during the coming winter in charge of a local man. This road has been completed as far as the Johnson farm, four miles west of Frostburg.

The series of instructive addresses arranged for in connection with the Maryland Week Exposition, December 4 to 9 in Baltimore will be to the farmers who attend the meetings like a school in which the teachers are among the very highest authorities in the several departments of agricultural science in the world.

Among those who have been definitely engaged to talk are James Wilson, Secretrry of Agriculture; W. M. Hays, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; Willis L. Moore, Chief of the United States Weather Bureau; H. A. Huston, former Director of the Indiana Experiment Station; H. A. Waugh, head of the Division of Agricultural College of Massachusetts; R. L. The official program of the Exposition will be issued and mailed out in the ensuing two weeks.

Secretary T. B. Symons, of the State Horticultural Association, says there are enough products of Maryland soil already in cold storage to fill the available floor space in the big Fifth Regiment Armory Building.

Each afternoon an expert packer from the Hood River Valley, of Oregon, will give demonstrations in methods of handling and packing apples and other fruits. The fruit exhibit, as well as corn exhibit, will be the largest ever shown in Maryland.

Several hundred boys of Maryland are entered in a contest to show the best acre product for a valuable prize.

There will be 600 feet of tables for the display of fruit. The moving pictures, and night entertainments will be interesting features.

ROBBERY AND EXCHANGE OF SHOTS

Daring of Postoffice Thieves at Swanton Thursday.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Just think of it, Mr. Editor, some bad fellows have dared to invade the peaceful precincts of Swanton—cute, demure, shy-faced, pretty little Swanton, holding her gracefully poised head as a lily in the mountains—was entered by naughty men, we hope from afar.

Prominent among the more recent of Swanton's public buildings is a new postoffice, fresh from the architect's hands, hugging the south side of Merchant Good's more pretentious building and with that building faces on the railroad platform.

This newly finished office was a neat little structure of two rooms, generously answering all the requirements of the office, with the public in one apartment and the United States officials conducting the affairs of the Government in the other division. Merchant Good with Mrs. Good occupied rooms over the store. These rooms are reached by two long flights of stairways, one from the front and one from the rear.

About two o'clock on the morning of November 2nd, 1911, the merchant was aroused by a jarring crash which he first thought might be from the slam of a door by the postmaster, Mr. Albert Baker, arranging the early mail; but discovering that it was only two o'clock, he went to a window and could distinctly hear the rambling of thieves in the postoffice, but too close under the the side of the store to be seen from the window. He had at command only a small revolver and with it fired through the open down in the direction of the working robbers. An answering fire quickly came from the outside, the ball crashing in destruction through three large glass panels of the window of the store directly beneath Mr. Good. With criminal daring the villians proceeded heedless, apparently, of the ordinary caution of stealth. Soon Mr. Good repeated his fire, drawing again a quick response fire, it seemed, at random. In a short time stillness prevailed, the robbery had been accomplished and under the curtain of night the demons slunk away unseen.

The rascally intention was deliberately planned. Buckets and similar obstructions had been placed along the steps of the two mentioned stairways to trip any one who might run down the steps in the dark.

When Mr. Baker arrived at his usual hour the office was in ruins. The intruders forced an entrance through a back window, then going forward to the public part where a strong iron safe stood. By an explosive, many times more powerful than was needed for their accomplishment, they demolished the safe, blowing parts into fragments and twisting other parts in intricate shapes. The violence of the explosion not only shattered the glass in all the windows, but tore a large hole in the planks of the floor and left the partition in a serpentine appearance with many breaks.

By a fortunate chance only a small amount of change had been left the previous evening in the safe, but the equal of $117 or more was there in stamps and other valuables taken in the haul.

In the future Merchant Good will man his high fortress with heavier artillery bearing more effectively on assaulting parties approaching at his gate as thieves in the night.

And, Mr. Editor, with this simple report of a criminal happening, Rellim breaks his Swantonpen and leaves its fragments with things that aregone.

The killed and wounded of the first day of the hunting season are too numerous. The report show that a good many people were out with guns who were not fit to have them. It looks as if a good many of the people who have a passion for hunting should be examined by a committee of experts and safe hunters and be compelled to get a certificate testing that they are fit persons to be entrusted with a gun, before they are allowed to handle one upon the hunting grounds. Careful hunters are in more danger from the careless or ignorant hunters than is the game the latter seek.

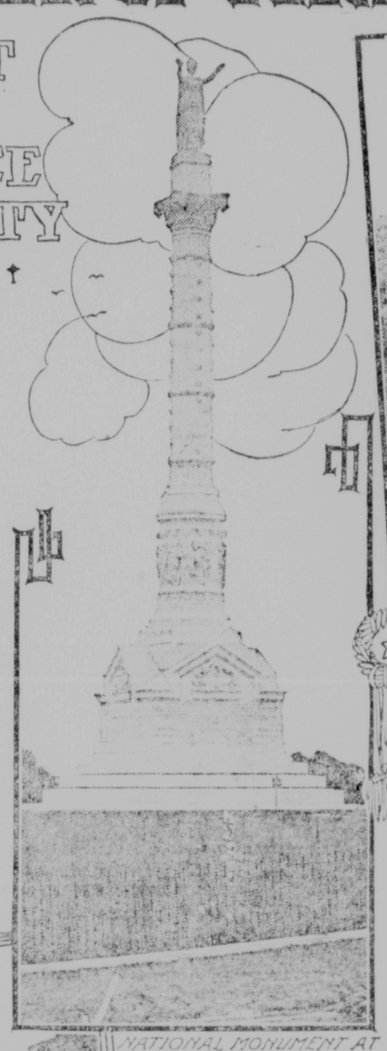
130TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SURRENDER OF CORNWALLIS

GREAT EVENT WHICH MADE INDEPENDENCE DAY A REALITY



By JOHN D. GRANT

THE great event of the Revolutionary war, the event that marked the end of despotic British rule in this country and made Independence day a reality, is to be celebrated this year with a greater display of patriotic enthusiasm than is usual in the commemoration of great historic events in this country. The 130th anniversary of the surrender of Cornwallis will be observed at Yorktown, Va., on October 19 with an inspiring naval and military display. The country's greatest statesmen will participate in the exercises in which the lofty spirit of true patriotism will be the predominating feature.

The pretty little city of Yorktown is enshrined with many memories of this country's desperate struggle for liberty and of its final triumph. Buildings which figured prominently in the negotiations between Washington and Cornwallis, which practically resulted in ending the war, are still standing, preserved as monuments to the patriots who erected on this continent a free and independent commonwealth.

The downfall of Cornwallis, which also spelled the end of British hopes for retaining the colonies under the sway of King George's tyrannical power, was brought about by the masterly tactics of General Washington. The American commander led his adversary to believe he intended to make an attack on New York. Cornwallis, completely fooled by the movements of the revolutionary army, was caught in a trap. Hemmed in on all sides, securely bottled up in Yorktown with communications and food supplies cut off, the British commander was forced to surrender.

Cornwallis' invasion of Virginia followed a long and unsuccessful campaign in North Carolina. The British general made up his mind that his exhausting labors there would prove unprofitable until Virginia was subjugated. On April 25, 1781, he started northward from Wilmington, N. C. He reached Petersburg, Va., May 20, and during the next two weeks attempted to capture Lafayette, who was in command of the small American forces for the defense of Virginia. Lafayette successfully evaded the British and, June 10, was reinforced by General Anthony Wayne with 1,000 infantry and six guns. The British commander so far foiled in his objects, had to march back to Richmond and thence to Williamsburg, near the coast, thus practically abandoning control over any part of Virginia except where naval forces gave possession. Lafayette effected a junction with Baron Steuben on June 18, and thus increased his force to about 4,000 men. The Americans had now become the pursuers instead of the pursued, and followed the British, harassing their rear and flanks.

Soon afterward the British army concentrated at Portsmouth and preparations were under way to transport a considerable portion of it to New York, when Cornwallis received orders from General Clinton, the British commander-in-chief, to fortify Old Point Comfort at the present Fortress Monroe, and if advisable, Yorktown. Obeying these instructions, Cornwallis ordered a survey of Old Point Comfort, but on the advice of his engineers was obliged to represent to Clinton that it was wholly unfit and inadequate for a naval station. Then, following what he believed to be the spirit of his orders, Cornwallis, before hearing from Clinton, moved up to Yorktown and began to fortify it in connection with Gloucester, on the opposite shore.

Meanwhile Washington and Rochambeau, with the allied French and American forces, were at Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., menacing New York city and awaiting the arrival of the promised French fleet under Admiral de Grasse. That officer wrote that he expected to sail for Chesapeake Bay on August 13, but that he would remain in American waters only a short time.

Washington, who had heretofore resisted entreaties to remove the army from New York for operations in the south, determined to cooperate with Admiral de Grasse in an attack upon Cornwallis. With about 4,000 French and 2,000 continentals he started across New Jersey August 19, and by September 26 had joined Lafayette and additional Virginia militia under Governor Nelson at Williamsburg. The French fleet, September 5, defeated the British under Admiral Graves, and then held the Chesapeake to prevent British reinforcements. Washington took position before Yorktown September 28, and the night of the 29th Cornwallis abandoned his outer works before the town. The first of October finds our engineers reconnoitering the position and works of the enemy. The 2d witnessed the gallantry of the Duke de Lauzun and his legion in driving back Tarleton, whose raids so long had been the terror of Virginia and the Carolinas. On the 6th, the allied armies broke ground for their final parallel, and proceeded to mount their batteries on the 7th and 8th. On the 9th, two batteries were opened—Washington himself applying the torch to the first gun; and on the 10th three or four more were in play, silencing the enemy's works. On the 11th, the indefatigable Steuben was breaking the ground for our second parallel, within less than 400 yards of the enemy, which was finished the next morning, and more batteries were mounted on the 13th and 14th. But the great achievement of the siege still awaits its accomplishment. Two advanced British redoubts are blocking the way to any further approach, and they must be stormed. The allied troops divide the danger and the glory between them, and emulate each other in the assault. One of the redoubts is assigned to the French grenadiers and chasseurs under de Viomesnil. The other is assigned to the American light infantry under Lafayette. Both redoubts were soon captured and the fate of Cornwallis was sealed. "A small and precipitate sortie," as Washington calls it, was made by the British on the following evening, resulting in nothing. The next day a vain attempt to evacuate their works and to escape by crossing over to Gloucester was defeated by a violent storm.

At ten o'clock on the morning of the 17th of October, 1781, the British beat a parley, and Lord Cornwallis proposed a cessation of hostilities for twenty-four hours that commissioners might meet at the house of a Mr. Moore in the rear of the first American parallel. Washington replied with a grant of two hours' cessation, that terms might be proposed in writing. Finding their general tenor admissible, hostilities were suspended for the night, and Washington proposed his own terms. Commissioners were appointed, Colonel Laurens, the Vicomte de Noailles, and M. de Grandchain on the part of Washington; Lieutenant Colonel Dundas and Major Ross on that of Cornwallis. The 18th was consumed in negotiations, which Washington brought to a close by having the draft of the agreement copied, sending it on the morning of the 19th, and demanding that it should be signed by eleven, and the garrison march out at two o'clock.

Rochambeau describes the surrender: "The Americans and French took possession of the two batteries at noon. The garrison marched out at two o'clock between the two armies, drums beating, carrying their arms, which were stacked, with about twenty flags. Lord Cornwallis being ill, General O'Hara marched out at the head of the garrison. When he approached me (Rochambeau) he presented his sword. I pointed to General Washington opposite to me as the head of the American army, and said to him that as the French army was an auxiliary on this continent, that it was now from the American general that he must take orders."

The manner of the capitulation was modeled on the harsh terms Cornwallis had imposed on General Lincoln at the siege of Charleston, the previous year. The colors were cased. The defeated army was not permitted to play an American or French tune, and it was to Lincoln himself that the formal surrender was made.

In his general orders of the 20th Washington congratulated the army on the glorious events of the day previous, and expressed his warm gratitude to the French king and his officers, naming each in his orders with suitable phrase and commendation, and requested the Count de Rochambeau "to present in his name to the regiments of Agenois and Deux-Ponts the two pieces of brass ordnance captured by them (as a testimony of their gallantry) in storming the enemy's redoubt on the night of the 14th inst., when officers and men so universally vied with each other in the exercise of every soldierly virtue."

The victors found the little town of York, which at that time contained about sixty houses in a state of absolute dilapidation. They were literally honeycombed by balls. The British officers complimented the French on the precision of their fire, and confessed that they were the first artillerists in Europe, while the French were equally amazed at the wonderful proficiency the Americans had acquired with their limited experience. The house of Secretary Nelson of Virginia, which had served as Cornwallis' headquarters, and the most stately building in the town, remained for years a significant witness of the accuracy of the fire of the allies.

This rare specimen of architecture, built in 1740, was the home of Thomas Nelson, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, a governor of Virginia, and finally a major general in the American army.

This sturdy relic of many wars was the official headquarters of Lord Cornwallis as head of the British army during the siege of 1781. After the close of the war it marked the renewal not only of a friendship between soldiers, but the friendship of nations. The French and the United States were closely cemented together through the visit of General Lafayette to his old-time war friend, Major General Nelson.

In 1881 a centennial celebration of the victory over Cornwallis was held at Yorktown and the cornerstone of the national monument was laid with elaborate ceremonies in the presence of a great concourse of people. On the base of the monument the following inscription is engraved:

"At York on October 19, 1781, after a siege of nineteen days, by 5,500 Americans and 7,000 French troops of the line, 3,500 Virginia militia under command of General Thomas Nelson and 36 French ships of war, Earl Cornwallis, commander of the British force at York and Gloucester, surrendered his army, 7,241 officers and men, 840 seamen, 244 cannon and 24 standards, to his excellency, George Washington, commander-in-chief of the combined forces of American and France, to his excellency, the Comte de Rochambeau, commanding the auxiliary troops of his most Christian majesty in America and to his excellency, the Comte de Grasse, commanding in chief the naval army of France in Chesapeake."

Grace church, which figured prominently in the historic events just related, is still used as a place of worship. The edifice is of marl rock construction and was built in 1700. The old bell was a gift from Queen Anne in 1725. The original communion service is still in use. Curiously carved designs of a head and a lion are easily discernable, but the emblems on the service are indistinct. On the quaint tombstones in the churchyard are the names of many of the famous Nelson family.

The eldest custom house in the United States is situated at Yorktown and is one of the most interesting of the historic buildings. It was built in 1781 and was the port of entry for New York, Philadelphia and many other of our great cities when they were in their infancy.

Yorktown was also the scene of considerable activity at one period during the Civil war. When General McClellan began the Peninsular campaign April 4, 1862, he found Yorktown fortified and a line drawn from the town across the peninsula to the mouth of the Warwick river. Gen. J. B. Magruder, in command of the Confederate forces, had hardly more than 11,000 men in all, of whom 5,000 were at Yorktown. General McClellan, who very much overestimated the Confederate forces, awaited reinforcements and began seige operations. At the end of the month McClellan had in position 115,000 men while Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, who had assumed command of the Confederate forces on April 17, had hardly more than 50,000 men on the peninsula. Just as McClellan was ready to open fire, General Johnston withdrew May 3. His rear guard was overtaken near Williamsburg on May 5, and an indecisive battle was fought.

Yorktown is the county seat of York county, Virginia, and is situated about 70 miles southeast of Richmond, on the York river. Although one of the oldest and most historic towns in the country, Yorktown has never attained the prominence and importance commercially that its founders had prophesied for it, and today it has a population of but a few hundred.

Dew Ponds in Great Britain.

Among the most singular archaeological remains found in Great Britain are the ancient dew ponds, the construction of which is ascribed to the neolithic age. The purpose of these ponds was to furnish drinking water for cattle. An exposed position where springs were absent was selected and a broad, hollowed surface was formed and covered over with straw or some other non-conducting material. Above was spread a thick layer of clay strewn with stones. During the night the cold surface of the clay caused an abundance of moisture to condense from lower layers of the air. Some of these anciet dew ponds are still working.

MUNYON PREACHES HOPE PHILOSOPHY

New Association Gaining Many Members.

FAITH'S CURATIVE POWER

NOTED HEALTH EXPERT GIVES REASON FOR BIG SUCCESS IN MEDICINE

Tremendous success has attended the organization of the new Munyon "Hope Cult." Professor Munyon claims that he has secured more converts than he even anticipated, and says that his "Hope Cult" is growing in leaps and bounds. It is said that the total membership of the association throughout the United States is now well over the half million mark.

In a statement for publication Prof. Munyon said:

"I want to talk to every sick, ailing and despondent person in this city. I want to preach my new creed to them. I want to tell them about my new philosophy of health, which is the fruit of a lifetime of study and experience in dealing with sick folk.

"I want to expound the Great Truth that I have learned that there is more curative power in an ounce of Hope than in pounds of Dope. That sick people should not take medicine except as a medium through which the great curative power of Hope may be made effective. Medicines are necessary in the present state of the world's progress because they give a patient physical support and strength and renewed vigor with which to brace up the will power. One knows, from the action of the proper medicines, that he or she is feeling better by this inspired hope and faith, which complete the cure.

"I think that probably a million persons at least in the United States have declared themselves cured by my medicines, and I know that these people have had the best remedies medical science had to offer. I have always contended that if there is any virtue in medicine my followers should have the best, but I verily believe that more than one-half of those who have been lifted to health from the bondage of chronic illness, through taking my medicines, have been aided more by the knowledge that they had the utmost in medical lore at their command, and the Hope this inspired.

"I am not in any sense a practicing physician. I employ at my laboratories in Philadelphia a large staff of expert physicians and chemists, and I have associate physicians in various cities of the United States detailed to give free advice to the sick and afflicted. My headquarters are at Munyon's Laboratories, 53d and Jefferson Sts., Phila., Pa., and I have there a staff of duly registered physicians and medical experts, and to all who desire it I offer the best of medical advice absolutely free of charge."

Write today, addressing Prof. J. M. Munyon personally, and your letter will have a special care.

HOG RAISER SHOULD CONSIDER WALLOW AS REAL NECESSITY

Concrete Affair Proves Practical Scheme for Killing Vermin and Does Away With Expense of Dipping Tank—Crude Oil on Water Keeps Animal's Skin in Good Condition.

Partial Sectional View of a Concrete Hog Wallow. The Wallow Is Simply a Big Concrete Bowl With a Floor 4 Feet Wide Around the Edge.

The hog has been imposed upon more or less by the expression "as dirty as a pig," for, if given an opportunity, no other animal about the farm is more cleanly within his abode than is the porker. Being unable to perspire, the hog naturally suffers from warm weather more than other animals, and because of the lack of a cleaner place in which to cool his body he takes to the mud.

The concrete hog wallow is an improvement which every hog raiser should consider an absolute necessity. The hogs find great satisfaction in the concrete wallow, lying down in the water, excepting in quite cold weather. The wallow proves a very practical scheme for killing vermin when a quantity of crude oil or other disinfectant is put in and the intake and outlet stopped. This does away with the expense of a dipping tank and the trouble of dipping. Many farmers keep a small amount of oil in the wallow at all times, which keeps the skin of the animals in good condition. The crude oil remains on the surface of the water, and therefore does not escape into the outlet.

The wallow should be located near the water supply, whether this consists of a tank or spring. If the water is received from a tank, the wallow may be emptied and refilled at intervals, the intake and outlet ordinarily being kept closed. If the supply is not limited the water may be allowed to flow through the pool continuously. Where necessary, provision should be made for draining the outlet into the nearest line of tile.

The sectional view shown in figure 16 gives a good idea of the general shape and construction of the wallow. It will be found convenient to make the pool rectangular, with the rounded corners, giving it a depth of not over 18 inches. For the ordinary piggery the pool should be 15 to 20 feet long and 100 feet wide. A concrete floor 4 feet wide should be laid around it to prevent the hogs from burrowing or carrying in mud.

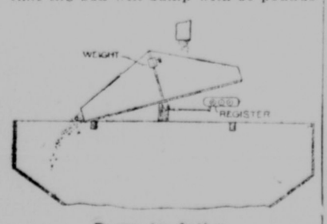
COW MUST BE KEPT CONTENTED

Dairy Animal Must be Catered to if Best Results Are to Be Secured—Three Essentials.

Among the factors that the countryman who feeds animals, whether for growth or for product, finds of basic importance, are the following:

Individual preference on the part of the animal must be catered to if the best returns are secured. The animals must be satisfied, and their likes and dislikes are almost as pronounced as in the human family. Early stockmen, and particularly those handling large numbers of animals, ignored this factor; but, under modern high pressure conditions, it is profitable practice to take the question of individuality into consideration. In the successful dairy each cow must be fed according to her individual needs and humor, because only a contented, satisfied animal gives the maximum milk flow.

The second fundamental is palatability. Experiments have conclusively proved that feed the animal likes will do it the most good. There must be variety to the ration to keep up the appetite and to stimulate digestive processes. This is where corn ensilage has its great merit. As a salad with a pungent odor and characteristic sharp flavor, it is especially an appetizer and keeps the digestive processes in vigorous working order.



In the third place, the feed must be ample in every particular. A deficit in one of the essentials for growth or production, whether protein, carbohydrates, fats or ash, is a weak link in the chain which may make the entire feeding system ineffective.

Nothing is doing more to improve the methods of feeding than the increasing cost of feedstuffs. The stockman must get larger returns from the feeds he uses, and this will compel him to study the science of animal feeding and put his practice upon the right basis.—Saturday Evening Post.

BALANCED FEED FOR LIVE STOCK

Few Farmers Understand Feeding and Medicinal Value of Either Blood or Linseed Meal.

(By E. C. GLITZKE.)

Few farmers understand the feeding and medicinal value of either blood meal or linseed meal. Perhaps no other food contains the necessary food element in such concentrated form.

In order to be successful in their use one must thoroughly understand their composition, for the one is exactly oposite, both in medicinal and food value, from the other.

Blood meal is a highly concentrated form of protein, that most valuable of food elements—the part from which animals receive their muscles. It is the main element that growing stock should have in order to build up a strong constitution.

Where much corn is fed some blood meal should be added in order to balance up the ration, for corn is very rich in fat.

Such young stock as pigs, calves and colts very often get the scours from overfeeding, but a few doses of blood meal will correct the bowels at once and carry the animal safely through this dangerous disease.

In the case of very young stock that follow their mother it should be given to the dam and the young will get the benefit of it through the milk. In all other cases give it directly to the young stock in such quantities as may be needed to suit the size of the animal and severity of the case.

Linseed meal is exactly opposite in all its properties. It has a tendency to loosen the bowels, therefore it is Linseed meal is very rich in fat—the very valuable in cases of constipation. food element that gives heat and energy to the stock.

Where any food deficient in fat is fed to the stock a quantity of linseed meal should be added to balance up the ration.

Hand-fed calves are usually fed on skimmed milk. Now the fat of the milk has been taken out by the separator and therefore the protein remains in excess of all other elements.

A small quantity of linseed meal fed in the milk will balance up the ration and make it practically as good as the whole milk.

In cases of constipation in very young stock that follow their mother it should be given to the dam, as the young will get the benefit of it through the milk.

Where these two articles are kept on hand the farmer need have no fear of either constipation or scours in his stock, for these two articles act exactly as described and no evil results need be feared from their constant use.

TOO MUCH FOR HACK DRIVER

High-Sounding Name Made Old Man Think There Was Something Mysterious in the Wind.

After a long, hot, and dusty journey by train the New York commercial traveler arrived in Richmond, brushed enough dust off his face to make sure that the right man was getting off, and hailed one of the little sea-going hacks common in the Old Dominion city. It was driven by an aged negro. "Drive me to a haberdashery," said the traveling man, surveying his soiled raiment with disfavor. "Yessuh," said the negro. "Giddup." The old horse started off at a little stiff-legged jog trot. The driver seemed to be thinking deeply. By and by he pulled the horse to a stop, and leaned backward to his fare. "Scuse me, suh," said he, "but wey did you all want to go?" "Drive me to a haberdashery," said the traveling man. "Oh, yessuh," said the negro. "To be sure. Giddup." The hack rattled on for a little way, and then the negro stopped, got off the box and poked his head in over the little door. "Mebbe Ah didn't get dat name jus' right," said he. "Would you all mine repeatin' it, suh?" The traveling man said for the third time that he wanted to go to a haberdashery. The old driver shook his gray wool and looked grieved. "Ah'm an ole man," said he. "Youah kin trus' me. Wheah is it you really want to go?"

A FINE NIGHT-CAP

The Best Thing in the World to Go to Bed and Sleep On.

"My wife and I find that 4 teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts and a cup of hot milk, or some cream, with it, makes the finest night-cap in the world," says an Alleghany, Pa., man.

"We go to sleep as soon as we strike the bed, and slumber like babies till rising time in the morning.

"It is about 3 years now since we began to use Grape-Nuts food, and we always have it for breakfast and before retiring and sometimes for lunch. I was so sick from what the doctors called acute indigestion and brain fag before I began to use Grape-Nuts that I could neither eat, sleep nor work with any comfort.

"I was afflicted at the same time with the most intense pains, accompanied by a racking headache and backache, every time I tried to eat anything. Notwithstanding an unusual pressure from my professional duties, I was compelled for a time to give up my work altogether.

"Then I put myself on a diet of Grape-Nuts and cream alone, with an occasional cup of Postum as a runner-up, and sometimes a little dry toast. I assure you that in less than a week I felt like a new man; I had gained six pounds in weight, could sleep well and think well.

"The good work went on, and I was soon ready to return to business, and have been hard at it, and enjoying it ever since.

"Command me at any time any one enquires as to the merits of Grape-Nuts. You will find me always ready to testify." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

NURSE'S STORY OF ULCER CURE

Case of Six Months' Standing Entirely Healed.

After long suffering and the use of many ineffectual medicines, this case from Augusta, Me., comes to light as entirely healed. The authenticity of the case is apparent when you appreciate that the bearer of the tale is a graduate nurse. The following is the letter, as received:

"I must write and tell you the good Resinol Ointment has done. I applied it to an ulcerated leg of six months' standing. Almost everything had been tried to heal it. Resinol was applied twice a day for four weeks, and the ulcers are entirely healed. It is now six months since the treatment and no indication of a return of the trouble. I have used Resinol for eruptions on children's faces, and for everything that seemed to need an ointment, with satisfactory results in every case."

Mrs. I. E. CAMERON, Augusta, Me.

The first application of Resinol will relieve itching and irritation in skin diseases, and stop pain in burns and scalds. Frequently chafing, sunburn and poison ivy eruptions are cured overnight.

It is highly beneficial as a general skin remedy, and after one trial you will appreciate this to such an extent that you will never be without it.

You can procure Resinol Ointment, Resinol Soap and Resinol Medicated Shaving Stick from any druggist. Sample sent free if you will mention Department No. 59. Resinol Chemical Co., Baltimore, Md.

RASH ALL OVER BABY'S BODY

Itched So He Could Not Sleep

"On July 27, 1909, we left Boston for a trip to England and Ireland, taking baby with us. After being in Ireland a few days a nasty rash came out all over his body. We took him to a doctor who gave us medicine for him. The trouble started in the form of a rash and was all over baby's body, head and face, at different times. It irritated, and he would scratch it with all his might. The consequence was it developed into sores, and we were afraid it would leave nasty scars on his face.

"When we reached England we took baby to another doctor, who said his condition was due to change of food and climate, and gave more medicine. The rash got no better, and it used to itch and burn at night so bad that the child could not sleep. He was completely covered with it at different times. It was at this time that my mother advised us to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After using Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment for about nine months the places disappeared. There are not any scars, or other kind of disfigurement, and baby is completely cured by the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. We have no further trouble with baby's skin. Nothing stopped the itching, and allowed baby to sleep but Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment." (Signed) Mrs. Margaret Gunn, 29 Burrell St., Roxbury, Mass., March 12, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to Cuticura," Dept. 14 K, Boston.

Not in Circulation There.

An error of a new clerk in the mailing department of an eastern publisher was responsible, the other day, for the mailing of a prospectus to a world-famous statesman, who had been dead for some years. The letter was returned a few days later with the following indorsement: "In Heaven,——1911. Gentlemen: As your publications are not permitted to circulate here, I believe it would be useless for me to subscribe for them. Yours respectfully," and here followed the name of the famous statesman.

SPLENDID CANADIAN CROPS

Wheat, Oats and Barley Universally Good Throughout Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The reports that come to hand from the wheat fields of the western Canadian provinces show remarkably good yields in all parts. Yields are recorded of wheat going 35 and 40 bushels in many places, and oats from 60 to 100 bushels per acre. Barley and flax are splendid. The thousands of Americans throughout the United States who have friends in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta will be pleased to learn of the great success that has followed their efforts. Many of these have not confined themselves to the growing of grain, but have also gone into the cattle industry. On the luxurious grasses that are so abundant there, in almost all districts, make this industry safe and profitable. The land sales reported by the railway companies and by the different land companies show the great increase that will likely take place during the next year in farming operations. What has been said time and time again may now be well repeated, that there is no place on the American continent where the same opportunities are afforded the man looking for a home, for the young man starting out in life, the man with a growing up family, who desires wider scope for his ambition. The Canadian government agents located at different points in the states will be glad to advise the reader of the conditions, and relate to him instances of the great success that has followed farming in Western Canada.

A Reader Cures His Constipation—Try It Free

Simple Way for Any Family to Retain the Good Health of All Its Members.

The editors of "Health Hints" and "Questions and Answers" have one question that is put to them more often than any other, and which, strangely enough, they find the most difficult to answer. That is "How can I cure my constipation?"

Dr. Caldwell, an eminent specialist in diseases of the stomach, liver and bowels has looked the whole field over, has practised the specialty for forty years and is convinced that the ingredients contained in what is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, has the best claim to attention from constipated people.

Its success in the cure of stubborn constipation has done much to displace the use of salts, waters, strong cathartics and such things. Syrup Pepsin, by training the stomach and bowel muscles to again do their work naturally, and with its tonic ingredients strengthening the nerves, brings about a lasting cure. Among its strongest supporters are Mr. John Graveline of 88 Milwaukee Ave., Detroit, Mich., Mr. J. A. Vernon of Oklahoma City and thousands of others. It can be obtained of any druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, or if you want to try it first a free sample bottle can be obtained by writing the doctor.

SANER VIEWS OF BAPTISM NOW HELD

Baptism Not a Fire Insurance, Says Pastor Russell.

Pastor Russell Repudiates the Theories of the Dark Ages and Advises God's People to Return to the Teachings of the Lord and the Apostles.

PASTOR RUSSELL

LONDON TABERNACLE, Lancaster Gate W., Nov. 5.—"We have done those things which we ought not to have done, and we have left undone those things which we ought to have done." All agree to this and agree also that "we have believed many things which we ought not to have believed and have left unbelieved many things which we ought to have believed," said Pastor Russell.

Saner Views Now Held

Christian-Disciples still theoretically say that everybody not immersed in water is still in sin and bound for eternal torture, although this is not the logic of their teachings. Our Baptist friends no longer believe that only those who have been immersed in water constitute the one "Church of the living God whose names are written in heaven," and that these alone will be saved. Nevertheless, this is still the Baptist theory, and for this reason our Baptist friends still invite only the immersed to the Lord's Supper. Evidently the Apostolic teaching of Baptism got lost. Human speculation and theories buried it in rubbish. In Tertullian's day the Disciple view prevailed, that water baptism cleansed from sin. At that time it was customary to postpone baptism until death was supposed to be near—that all sins up to date might be washed away. Thus it was in Constantine's day. Later came St. Augustine with a different proposition, which swept everything before it. His claim was more nearly that of the Baptists, that only the Church would be saved from eternal torture and that baptism is the door into the Church. Thereafter infant immersion became popular.

Later our Roman Catholic friends declared immersion unnecessary—that a few drops of water would be equally efficacious as protection against the fires of eternal torture. Sentiment ran so strong that it became the custom to perform a sprinkling of an unborn child—in utero—if there were any fear that it would not be born alive.

"John's Baptism" Not For Us

Repudiating all the theories of the Dark Ages, God's people should return to the instructions given by the Lord and the Apostles. A careful examination shows not a single reference to infant baptism in the New Testament. On the contrary, only believers were instructed to be baptized.

Two baptisms are noted, "John's Baptism" and Christ's. The first was for the remission of sins and was applicable to all Jews. By it such Jews as had been living in open sin renounced the sin, and returned to harmony with God, under the Law Covenant. Such as thus sincerely returned to Moses were ready to accept Christ as the antitype and by faith were transferred from Moses to Christ—from the house of servants to the house of sons. (Heb. iii, 5, 6.) These at Pentecost became really, officially recognized as the Church of Christ.

Subsequently Gentiles were invited to be baptized into membership in the Body of Christ, the Church. "John's Baptism" was not preached to them because they did not belong to the holy nation which originally was "baptized into Moses in the sea and cloud." The Gentiles, on the contrary, were aliens, strangers, to the commonwealth of Israel. They were not to come into Christ, through Moses, but to be baptized directly into Christ.

Gentiles Baptized Into Christ

The true theory of Baptism does not exclude saintly Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Lutherans, Catholics, from the one, true Church which is the Body of Christ; neither does it admit to membership in the true Church all who have been immersed into water. Water immersion is merely the symbol or picture of the real immersion. In order to be members of Christ, members of the Church which is the Body of Christ, we must be immersed into Him, but not by water immersion. Hearken to the Apostle's statement: "So many of you as were baptized into Jesus Christ (into membership in His Body, the Church) were immersed into His death." (Romans vi, 3.)

Our immersion into Christ's death begins with the consecration of our wills, our hearts, our all. Then and there God through Christ accepts the consecration and we are reckoned dead according to the flesh and begotten of the Holy Spirit to newness of life as New Creatures in Christ. When the last member of this consecrated "little flock" shall have passed into death the baptism of the Church into Christ's death will be completed and all the faithful ones will then share in "His resurrection" to glory, honor and immortality—"the first (or chief) resurrection."

"His death" was different from the death of others in that He did not die as a "sinner, but as a Sacrifice." Our being baptized into His death signifies that the Church also die, not as sinners, but as sacrifices.

FRIENDSVILLE.

We are ready for election and before this is in print it will be over, so we wont predict.

Mrs. Jessie Frazee was a visitor to Unamus, returning on Friday.

Rev. Oscar C. Dean returned from Synod the latter part of the week.

Miss Margaret Snyder, one of our school teachers, did not arrive until Tuesday, as she remained in Accident over Monday to attend the funeral of her uncle, the late Frederick Ries.

Mrs. King, daughter and son, of Uniontown, Pa., are guests of F. G. Fox and family, and Milton Forsythe.

Misses Laura, Effie and Theresa Fox were visitors to McHenry on Sunday.

Ami Frankhouser and wife returned home from Morgantown, W. Va., where they had been visiting, on Thursday last.

W. F. East and son were in Accident all of last week, doing interior work for Asa Beatly.

An entertainment will be given by the band shortly, that will be excellent. The ladies and members taking part are rehearsing for it. Look for the bills; they will be out soon.

Mrs. Alice Smith, Mrs. Milton Forsythe and Salathial Savage attended the funeral of William Umble at Sand Spring last week.

Mrs. Salathial Savage has been very sick for the past week and is not much better at this writing.

The proposed new county road to Accident is, so some people claim, a thing of the past, but others deny this as the estimate of the cost, sent to the County Commissioners, has never be put before the subscribers for them to decide if they will continue with it or give it up. Several of the subscribers, both in Accident and Friendsville, are ready to increase their subscriptions, and then it is more than probable that some one is ready to make a much lower bid for building the road than the State estimate. The State road has been built for far less, and while it is understood that in some parts it would take considerable more work, yet all the material is right there and from the bridge at the foot of the hill to the end of the survey, they would have no conveyancing to annov the work. A track could be laid from one end to the other, to convey material, withdarawing same as it became completed. Several influential men claim it could in this way be built for much less than the estimate, that seem to have been put at so high a figure.

An Accidental Shooting.

The home of G. W. Broadwater at New Germany was the scene of a very serious accident last Saturday. One of the sons was working with a shotgun when it accidently went off burying an entire charge of shot in Mrs. Broadwater's thigh. An opening several inches in diameter was torn through the flesh, leaving a very serious and painful wound. The wound was dressed by Dr. Bowen, of Grantsville. The exact particulars have not been learned.

MARYLAND WILL LOSE CONSIDERABLE TERRITORY

West Virginia to Get Thirty-Two Square Miles.

The report of the commissioners appointed under the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States to define the disputed boundary line between Maryland and West Virginia has been completed and has been filed under seal with the clerk of the Supreme Court for presentation probably next Monday. The commissioners are Messrs. W. McCullough Brown for Maryland; Julius K. Monroe for West Virginia; and Dr. S. S. Gannett, of the Geological Survey.

Under the mandate of the Supreme Court the line to be drawn by the commissioners was to follow as closely as was found practicable the so-called Deakin line, which the Supreme Court declared after hearing argument on both sides, was in effect the boundary line. Copies of the decision have been sent to the governors of the two states, with a map showing the boundary line.

The decision when approved by the Supreme Court, will end a controversy that has been pending from time to time nearly two centuries. The members of the commission have been steadily at work for months. The new line passes near the towns of Hutton, Md., and Corinth and Cranesville, W. Va. Its southern point is about a mile from Fairfax Station, and its northern extremity is in the vicinity of Markleysburg, Pa.

The territory affected lies in Garrett county, Md., and Preston county, W. Va. The new boundary will deprive Maryland of about 32 square miles of territory, which will be added to Preston county. The boundary is marked by concrete monuments two feet square and four feet high. It is understood that the report of the commission is not unanimous, and that Mr. Brown, Maryland's commissioner, has filed a report differing in some details from that of the other two members of the commission.

Municipal Water Works Fire.

One of the pump houses owned and operated by the city, located at the north end of Third street, caught fire last Thursday night and was considerably damaged as a result. The origin of the fire is unknown but it is presumed that the wood work inside the building was set on fire by a gas jet.

MARYLAND DEMOCRATS ARE LOOKING AHEAD

Planning to Retain Control of all the Offices.

Since the election of last Tuesday, Democrats have been in a bad humor. Of course, they sincerely regret Mr. Gorman's defeat. They regret to a greater extent the loss of patronage which is distributed by the Governor.

There are afloat to hush the cries of the officeholders. A tentative program has been agreed upon in a restricted circle, this program later to be revealed at a conference of leaders. This plan embraces the following program:

Creation of a State Board of Election Supervisers to appoint all county and city supervisors, who in turn will appoint election judges and clerks. The members of this board will be elected by the and to be beyond the power of removal by Governor Goldsborough. If this plan can be carried through the Wilson ballot law may be retained.

Lodging in the State Board of Education (also to be named by the Legislature) the power to appoint the county school commissioners.

This board will also be beyond power of removal by the next governor.

Election of Police Commissioners of Baltimore by the Legislature, thus taking this important department from the executive.

Repeal of the Primary Election Law.

Creation of a new State loan of $5,000,000 for improvements of State roads and retention of the present State Roads Commission through an act of the Legislature.

All this and possibly more is to be accomplished during the first week of the Legislature and before Mr. Goldsborough is inaugurated governor on January 12. The Democrats have a majority in the Senate sufficiently large to enable them to suspend the rules and adopt this program in one day. The Democrats have not enough votes in the House to rush their program so rapidly as in the Senate by a suspension of rules, but they have sufficient legislative days in which to do all they want to do.

FOREST FIRE LOSS WAS OVER $120,000

This Amount Suffered By Land Owners of Garrett County Last Year.

The annual damage caused by forest fires is enormous. Last spring the loss in Garrett county was over $120,000. In view of the fact that most of these fires are from wilfullness, or carlessness, attention is called to the following provisions of the State Forest Laws:

The law requires that "any one who discovers a forest or brush fire not under the control or supervision of some person," shall extinguish it or report it immediately to the local forest warden or patrolman. Failure to do so is punishable by a fine of $10.

The Forest Wardens, or Forest Patrolmen for Garrett county, with their addressess and telephone numbers, as far as can be secured, are as follows:

Silas Arnold, Dobbin, W. Va.; Albert Bolden, Finzel; Alexander Bittinger, Ottaway; J. M. Conneway, Oakland, Nathan C. Browning, Sang Run, (telephone, Garrett county, 837); C. E. Ellithorp, Bittinger; J. M. Falkenstein, Oakland; Charles A. Janoske, Oakland; L. L. Kimmell, Sines, (Garrett telephone 846); Henry Leatham, Grantsville; James Sims, Mountain Lake Park, (telephone, Bell, Oakland, 33-42); Wil-Taylor Sines, Sines, (Patrolman); C. E. Stanton, Grantsville; W. T. Stever, Branard, (telephone, Bell, Oakland, 32-31), Francis H. Turner, Swanton, (Patrolman); Milton Wiley, Grantsville; D. W. Wilson, Wilson, W. Va.

In case of fire the local Forest Warden, or Patrolman should be notified immediately. The law requires that the landowner, or tenant, on whose lands the fire is burning shall do all that he can with the help he has on his place to control the fire, and prevent its escape to other lands. Upon the arrival of the Forest Warden he will assist the landowner and if more help is needed he will obtain the men and direct their work, the expense of such service to be paid by the County and State.

No back-firing is allowed on the lands without the consent of the owner, except under the direction of the Forest Warden, who is authorized by law to start back-fires, plow furrows, tear down fences, (whenever the necessity arises) in order to check a fire.

A strict enforcement of the law will reduce to a minimum the forest fires in the county. It is the duty of everyone, who wants the forest protected from fire, to cooperate with and assist the forest wardens in enforcing the law and to punish anyone who violates it.

NATION'S COAL PRODUCTION

Wonderful Increase Shown by United State Geological Survey.

The United States Geological Survey has issued its annual coal chart, showing the production of coal by states from the year 1814 to 1910. The figures relate a wonderful history of growth. In 1814 a total of 22 tons of coal was produced in Pennsylvania. In 1915 the percentage of increase was good but still only 50 tons were taken out. By 1825 over 100,000 tons were mined in two States producing. In 1850 the figures had reached 7,018,181 tons. In 1876 it was 53,280,000 tons. At the end of the century it was 269,684,027 tons. In 1905 it was 392,722,635 tons. In 1907, which it was supposed would remain the record year for some time the production was 480,363,424 tons but in 1910 the enormous total was reached of 501,596,780 short tons, a production larger by far than that of any other country in the world. So steady has been the increase in American coal production that most of the years have been record breakers. The total production since 1814 has been approximately eight and a quarter billion tons.

Keeping the Dollars AT HOME.

Ten years ago a farmer put his initials on a one dollar bill. The next day he went to the nearest town and spent it with a merchant. Before the year was out he got the dollar bill back. Four times in six years the dollar came back to him for produce and three times he heard of it in the pockets of his neighbors. The last time he got it back was four years ago. He sent it to a retail mail order house. He has never seen that dollar since and never will. That dollar will never pay any more school or road tax for him; will not build or brighten any of the momes of the community. He sent it entirely out of the circle of usefulness to himself and his neighbors.

SYNOPSIS.

David Amber, starting for a duck-shooting visit with his friend, Quain, comes upon a young lady equestrian who has been dismounted by her horse becoming frightened at the sudden appearance in the road of a burly Hindu. He declares he is Sehari Lal Chatterji, "The appointed mouthpiece of the Bell," addresses Amber as a man of high rank and pressing a mysterious little bronze box, "The Token," into his hand, disappears in the wood. The girl calls Amber by name. He in turn addresses her as Miss Sophie Farrell, daughter of Col. Farrell of the British diplomatic service in India and visiting the Quains. Several nights later the Quain home is burglarized and the bronze box stolen. Amber and Quain go hunting on an island and become lost and Amber is left marooned. He wanders about, finally reaches a cabin and recognizes as its occupant an old friend named Rutton, whom he last met in England, and who appears to be in hiding. When Miss Farrell is mentioned Rutton is strangely agitated. Chatterji appears and summons Rutton to a meeting of a mysterious body. Rutton seizes a revolver and dashes after Chatterji. He returns wildly excited, says he has killed the Hindu, takes poison, and when dying asks Amber to go to India on a mysterious errand. Amber decides to leave at once for India. On the way he sends a letter to Mr. Labertouche, a scientific friend in Calcutta, by a quicker route. Upon arriving he finds a note awaiting him. It directs Amber to meet his friend at a certain place. The latter tells him he knows his mission is to get Miss Farrell out of the country. Amber attempts to dispose of the Token to a money-lender, is mistaken for Rutton and barely escapes being mobbed. A message from Labertouche causes him to start for Darjeeling; on the way he meets Miss Farrell, and at their journey's end asks her to become his wife. A Hindu conducts Amber to a secret place, and into the presence of a beautiful woman who mistakes him for Rutton. Later Amber is drugged. The Hindus plot rebellion, and at Labertouche's instigation Amber returns to the woman Naraini to discover the secret of the conspiracy. He learns they would make him their king, and is found facing a deadly cobra in the Test of Death when rescued by Labertouche and his friends. Naraini attacks Amber with a dagger and he falls. After long delirium he recovers to find Sophia at his side confessing her love.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Final Incarnation.

About five o'clock of an evening in April the Cunarder Caronia, four hours out from Queenstown and buckling down to a night's hard work against the northwesterly gale, shipped a sea. It was not much of a sea—merely a playful slap of a wave that broke against the staunch black side and glanced upward in a shower of spray, spattering liberally a solitary passenger who had been showing enough interest in the weather to remain on deck until that particular moment. Apparently undisconcerted by the misadventure, he shook himself and laughed a sober, contented laugh, found a handkerchief and mopped his face with it, then, with a final approving survey of the lowering and belligerent canopy of wind-cloud that overhung the tortured ocean, permitted himself to be blown aft to the door of the first-cabin smoking room. Opening this by main strength, he entered. The gale saved him the bother of closing it.

Removing his raincoat and cap and depositing them on a convenient chair, he glanced round the room and discovered that he shared it with a single passenger, who was placidly exhausting the virtues of an excellent cigarette. Upon this gentleman the newcomer bent a regard steadfast and questioning, but after returning it casually the smoker paid him no further attention. Dissatisfied, the other moved toward him, and the deck slanted suddenly and obligingly the better to accelerate his progress, so that he brought up with a lurch in the seat next the smoker. The latter raised the eyebrows of surprise and hoped that the gentleman had not hurt himself.

"I didn't, thank you, Mr. David Amber."

Mr. David Amber looked the gentleman over with heightened interest.

"You've the advantage of me, sir," Amber summed up the result of his scrutiny.

"It's not the first time," asserted the other, with an argumentative shake of his head.

"No-o?" Light leaped in Amber's eyes. "Labertouche!"

"Surprised you, eh?" The Englishman grinned with pleasure, pumping Amber's arm cordially. "I don't mind owning that I meant to."

"Well, considering that this is positively your first appearance as yourself on the stage of my life, you don't deserve any credit for being able to deceive me. When one gets accustomed to remembering you only as a native—generally as a babu in dirty pink satin— . . . Do you know, I made all sorts of enquiries after you, but they told me, in response to my wires to Calcutta, that you'd dropped out of the world entirely. I had begun to fear that those damned natives must have got you, after all, and that I'd never see you again."

"I'd almost given up hope of ever seeing myself again," said Labertouche drily.

"But why didn't you—?"

"Business, dear boy, business. . . . I was needed for several days in the neighborhood of Kathiapur."

"It seems as though I'd waited several years for news of Kathiapur. The papers—"

"There are a good many things that happen in India that fail to get into the newspapers, Amber. It wasn't thought necessary to advise the world including Russia, that half the native potentates in Hindustan had been caught in the act of letting the Second Mutiny loose upon India." A network of fine wrinkles appeared about his eyes as he smiled enjoyment of what he seemed to consider a memorable joke.

"Go on," pleaded Amber.

"Kathiapur was a sort of mousetrap; the brutes came out by two and threes, just as I said they would, for the better part of three days. It was either surrender or starve with them, and after five-sixths of them had elected not to starve we turned a couple of companies of Tommies into the place, and I don't believe they left unturned a stone big enough to hide a rabbit. One by one they routed 'em out and booted 'em down to us. Meanwhile we had rushed enough troops to Kuttarpur to keep their tails quiet."

"And Salig Singh—and Naraini?"

"Salig Singh, it turned out, was the chap that got bayoneted in the tamarisks. Naraini managed somehow to steal away the next night, under the noses of any number of sentries; beauty such as hers would bribe her way out of hell, I think. What became of her I don't know, but I can prophesy that she won't live long. She was rather too advanced in her views, for India—some centuries ahead of her race. She and Salig Singh had it all planned, you know; his was the master-mind, hers the motive-power. They were to crown you, instead of Salig's son, the next day—in the name of Har Dyal Rutton; and then you were to die suddenly by virtue of hemp poison or some other contagious disease, and Salig was to step into your shoes as Emperor of Hindustan, with Naraini as his Empress. . . . She should have stayed home and been a suffragette."

"David!" She Said.

"Better for her," said Amber. "Of course I've found out about her, from Farrell. It seems that she was brought up in England, with Sophia, and always given to believe she was his own daughter, but she was a wild thing and hard to handle. One day she found out about her parentage—how, it's not known, but Farrell suspects that the men who were hounding Rutton got into communication with her. At all events, she brooded over the thing, and when, five years or so ago, Mrs. Farrell died and the colonel sent for Sophia to join him in India, Naraini—well, she rebelled. He refused to let her leave England, and she finally took the bit in her teeth and ran away—vanished and was never heard of again until Sophia recognized her in Kathiapur."

"I myself can fill in the gap," Labertouche volunteered. "She joined some of Salig's underlings in Paris and went thence direct to Khandawar, assuming the name of one of the old queens who had elected opportunely to die. . . Queer case—singular instance of reversion to type."

"A mighty distressing one to the old colonel; you know Rutton kept religiously to his promise not to see the child after he'd given her into Farrell's care. Farrell lost all track of him and was unable to communicate with him, of course, when Naraini chose to strike out for herself. . . . One thing has always puzzled me; the girl called me by her father's name, pretending to recognize me as her husband; you can't reconcile such conduct."

"You can, easily enough—beg pardon, my dear fellow. Neither she nor Salig Singh was for an instant deceived. But Salig had to deliver up a Har Dyal Rutton to the Council, so Naraini was set to seduce you. Their plans only required that you should be madly infatuated with her for a couple of days; after that . . ." Labertouche turned down his thumb significantly. "I fancy there must have been a family secret or tradition, handed down from father to son in the Rutton line, that some day one of the family would be called upon to raise the standard of the Second Mutiny. That will explain why Har Dyal Rutton, a gentleman of parts and cultivation, dared not live in India, and why—because he was sworn to keep the secret—he laid stress on the condition that you were not to mention his name."

"Still, he gave me permission to talk to Dhola Baksh."

"True; but it seems that Dhola Baksh had been his confidential body servant in Kuttarpur; during his too brief reign. Rutton thought he would be able to help you, and knew that he would be loyal to his master's memory."

"Finally, what about that photograph?"

"You've Salig Singh to thank for its return, I fancy. I had nothing to do with it. But they were bent on luring you to Naraini's bower, and they figured that after receiving it you'd go anywhere to meet the man who returned it. By the way, where's Ram Nath?"

"He's staying in England as body servant to Colonel Farrell."

"He's well off, so; his sphere of usefulness in India was at an end. So in fact, was mine. That's why I'm here—on indefinite leave of absence. One or two things grew out of the affair of the Gateway to make me a person of interest to the natives, and when that happens in India it's just as well for the interesting person to pack up and get thence with all possible expedition. It's too bad; I was really doing some good work there Well . . . ! When the East gets into a fellow's blood, he's a hopeless incurable case; I shall go back, I presume, some day. If the big trouble comes in my lifetime—and I think it will; come it will unquestionably soon or late—I shan't be able to keep away, you know." He glanced at his watch and rose. "Time to dress for dinner," said he; and as they were moving to the door, he added: "What ever became of that emerald ring, Amber?"

"The Eye?" Amber laughed. "Well—it was silly enough; but women are superstitious, you know — Sophia dropped it overboard one day as we were coming through the Mediterranean. She said she was afraid of it . . . and I don't know but I sympathize with her."

"I'm certain I do. And yet, in your case, it was the means of introducing you, wasn't it? . . . But there! It's been on the tip of my tongue a dozen times to ask, but other things got in the way. . . . How is Mrs Amber?"

"You shall see for yourself," said Amber, "when we meet for dinner."

THE END.

For Pantry Shelves.

The shelves in the pantry often mean a great deal of scrubbing. This need not be so if the shelves are covered with white oilcloth, such as is used for tables. Cut the oilcloth in long strips about three inches wider than the shelves. Make flour paste and with it stick the oilcloth on the shelves, covering the front edge and pasting it underneath, and letting the oilcloth come up about an inch against the wall at the back. Shelves covered with oilcloth will keep tidy for years and only need wiping over with a cloth and warm water to clean them.

Motor Costume

A neat, natty and practical headwear for women automobilists is this cap, which is modeled after the soft material college hats of dressy youths and retains all the jauntiness of the latter.

It is made of soft white felt, having a colored band; the veil being attached by an elastic silk weave; the color of both to match that of the machine.

The coat shown in the picture is of light weight Vienna, pliable and warm. It is cut pretty and has spacious pockets. The whole get-up is as workmanlike as it is fetching.

SAVE MONEY ON STOCKINGS

Judicious Selection Will Accomplish Wonders of Economy During the Year.

Many women do not give much thought to the matter of buying stockings. Their cost is so little that it would seem as if one could not save much, even if she were careful in this matter. But more can be saved by judicious selection than is thought, and in the course of a year or so this saving mounts up.

If suspension garters are worn, choose the double top, garter-welt stocking, and then do not fasten the garter below the garter top. Some buy the garter top stocking and then fasten the garter below it, where it immediately proceeds to tear out. Stockings without the garter top can be made strong at this point by running two or three rows of machine stitching where the garter fastens.

The white-foot stocking does not wear quite so well as the all-black foot. The white part is heavier than the black part, and is apt to break above the joining. Then, too, at the joining there is a slight thickening of the fabric scarcely visible to the eye, but the sensitive foot soon becomes conscious of it.

For an inexpensive dressy stocking the mercerized lisle is quite satisfactory. It has almost the luster of silk costs less and wears better.

A PRETTY HAT.

Styles in Negligees.

The new season has opened up with few radical changes in style features, but with a stronger indorsement than ever of all kinds of the laces and soft clinging fabrics so favorable to negligee construction, says the Dry Goods Economist. Long tunics are again incorporated in the highest grade garments, all-over laces and fancy printed silks being largely used for these over draperies. While the strong colors are usually toned down considerably, brighter colors than usual are being shown this season, doubtless owing to the vogue of East Indian effects.

EMPIRE BAG HERE TO STAY

In Present Stage It Is Thing of Beauty and Joy of the Season.

There is no end to the variety of form and color assumed by the ever increasingly popular empire bag. In its present stage it is a thing of beauty and a joy of the season, though, being a child of Dame Fashion, it cannot be a joy forever.

You have no idea how much money can be centered on the development of these handsome and thoroughly charming envelopes. Costly gilt ornaments are seen on many of the more elaborate ones, some of which are made entirely of gold, silver, copper or steel colored lace. Semi-precious stones are used to carry out a flower pattern or to highten the effect of conventional designs. Inside are trappings of silver, gold or ivory, tiny vanity cases, mirrors, powder puffs, lip pencils and the like.

Another idea that has caught the fancy of the woman who counts not cost, is an empire bag of brocade, either velvet or satin, to match her hat or its trimmings. Usually this hat is one of the small bonnetlike models edged with bands of fur, such as moleskin, Persian lamb, chinchilla or ermine. A band of the fur outlines the bag and the flap, which buttons over envelope fashion. Of course, the plainest of autumn suits would assume a smart tone when worn with such ultra fashionable foibles.

Bags of broadcloth of the same material as the suit have deep chenille fringes around the sides and bottoms, and correspondingly plain mountings of gun metal, old gold or frosted silver.

Any odd piece of silk or velvet picked up on the remnant counter may be transformed into a strikingly handsome empire bag in an afternoon. And there is a splendid chance for a display of individuality.

Favorite Dishes.

A woman who enjoys having friends to lunch or dinner has the happy faculty of hitting on just the things her guests enjoy eating. For some years she has made it a point to jot down the favorite dishes of this friend or that in a tiny note book in her desk. When her cousin Molly is coming to lunch she looks up her name, and there finds recorded that the aforesaid Molly is particularly fond of custard desserts of any kind; clam is her favorite soup, and in meats she dotes on anything cooked en casserole. With these hints spread before her the matter of planning a meal is considerably simplified.

Another friend has often said she never tastes such pies as are served by her hostess; another likes tomatoes in any form, and still another prefers fish to meat.

The guests little know that they themselves have at some time given the hint as to their likings.

Backache Means Dying Kidneys

A Remarkable Treatment That Saves the Kidneys. How You May Cure Yourself Quickly and Thoroughly.

With the progress of science comes one remarkable treatment for kidney diseases. It has been so thoroughly tested and its results have proven so revolutionary that a well-known firm in Michigan has undertaken its distribution into every part of the country.

Those who suffer from kidney trouble and the diseases resulting from it will be pleased to know that every package of this treatment is thoroughly guaranteed. This should assure at last a positive cure to every sufferer.

Every man and woman should know that backache is usually a well-defined symptom of advancing kidney disease which may end fatally unless treated in time; that rheumatism and bladder trouble are caused from nothing more nor less than kidneys that do not filter the poison from the blood; that dropsy, Bright's disease, diabetes and bladder-stones are caused by bad kidneys.

Once they are made to work properly, these diseases should quickly disappear.

This is done by the new treatment, Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills.

We urge everyone who has pain in the small of the back, profuse or scanty urination, pains in the bladder, cloudy or foul urine, not to fail to get a package today of Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills, and drop all other kidney treatments.

Senator Stevenson of Washington writes from Olympia: "There is no question about the efficacy of Dr. Derby's Pure Kidney Pills in curing kidney and bladder trouble. I know whereof I speak."

Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills are now sold at all drug stores—25 and 50 cents. If you would like to try them first, ask your druggist for a free sample package. Then buy a package; you will not regret it. Derby Medicine Co., Eaton Rapids, Mich.

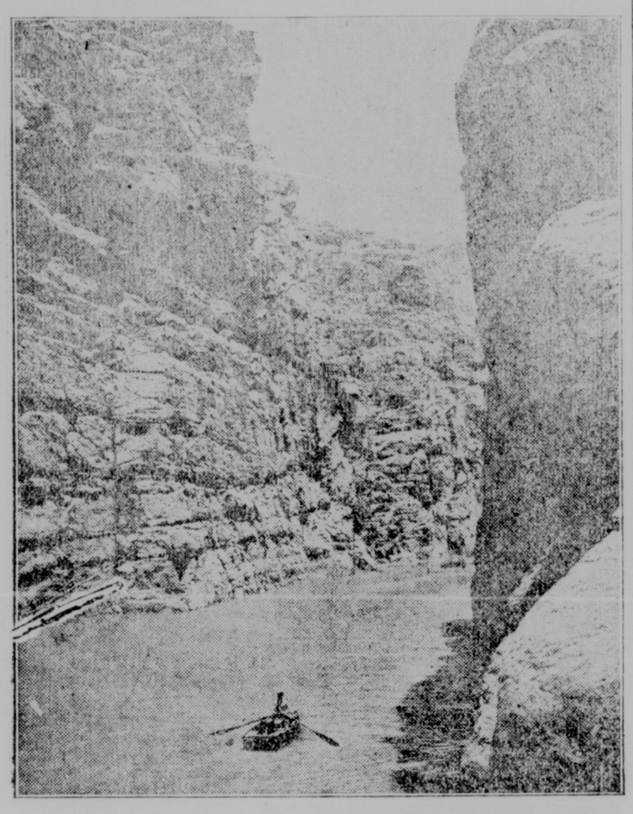
Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—Mrs. Chas. Barclay, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.



For more than 30 years it has been curing woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Things Queer and Curious

Gorge of the River Arnon

The gorge of the River Arnon is one of the chief points of interest about the Dead sea, for it can boast the finest natural scenery in Palestine. The vari-colored sandstone sides of the canyon rise perpendicularly to a height of 300 feet in places, and at some points are only about 20 feet apart. Should there be any truth in the assertion that Germany is coveting the Dead sea and its neighborhood, here, surely, her tourists would find a veritable Mecca, to which pilgrimages of pleasure would be made.

MONUMENT TO BLACK HAWK

On the banks of the Rock river in Illinois, at a beautiful spot known as Eagle's Nest, stands a remarkable monument to Black Hawk, the famous Indian warrior. The statue is the work of Lorado Taft, the well-known sculptor, and is the first ever constructed of reinforced concrete. It is 45 feet high.

DEATH FORETOLD IN DREAM

A fatal accident that was foretold in a dream was described at an inquest at Oak Hill, near Birmingham, on the body of a miner named Benjamin Westwood, who was killed at the Fly colliery, says the London Chronicle.

His brother, William, said that on Tuesday night he had a dream, and in it he saw his brother killed. He added: "I did not go to work on Wednesday morning, for my dream made me so ill that I was unable to leave my bed, and have been unable to do any work since.

"In my dream I saw a considerable quantity of coal fall from the roof onto my brother, knock him down and kill him, and from what those who witnessed the accident have told me, my dream was fulfilled. I did not go to my brother's house to warn him, as I was too ill to leave home."

SHEEP DOG'S GREAT FEAT

Left one night on Wagontire mountain, Scotland, with 3,086 sheep by the death of John Sagoday, her master, one female shepherd dog two weeks later delivered to Manuel Saunders, owner of the sheep, 3,085 of the animals, having lost only one during two weeks of privation. The dog's achievement was carried out despite the fact that she was the mother of puppies only a few days old when her master died.

CAPTAIN ROGERS' SLIDE

Bald Mountain or Rogers' Rock on the west shore of Lake George rears its ponderous bulk of granite to an almost perpendicular height of 1,100 feet, being matched by a similar bulk and height on the east, half a mile away. Here Captain Rogers and his small army on snowshoes were defeated by a large army of French and Indians. The small remnant were scattered through the forest at the top of the mountain, and a party of Indians tracked the marks of the snowshoes of the refugees. When Rogers became aware that he was likely to be driven over the precipice, he made his way to the brink, threw his pack and accoutrements down the slide to the lake. He then turned his snowshoes around and, after stealing along the edge of the hill, made his way down the lake, picked up his pack, reversed his snowshoes and sped southward to the Narrows, where he was met by Captain Stark with reinforcements and provisions. The Indians followed Rogers' tracks to the brink, where, seemingly, were two tracks to the precipice. They concluded that two white men had slid down to the ice below. While gazing, they saw a mile away the form of Rogers. But considering him under the special protection of the Great Spirit, they made no further pursuit.

SHE FED ON HARDWARE

The London Lancet reports an extraordinary case of swallowing foreign bodies on the part of a mulatto woman admitted to one of the Missouri state hospitals. From the time she was admitted, suffering with dementia, until she died in the hospital, she never showed the least sign of disease of the digestive system. The attendants often saw her picking up nails and pins, but no one had seen her swallow any. After death, in addition to the foreign bodies in the stomach, there was a needle in the oesophagus and another at the base of the left lung. The foreign bodies in the stomach weighed five pounds avoirdupois, and consisted of 453 nails, 42 screws, 136 ordinary pins, 115 hairpins, 105 safety pins, 62 carpet tacks, 63 buttons and a miscellaneous collection of bolts, metal nuts, teaspoon handles, thimbles, needles, beads and all sizes and shapes of similar objects, the total number being 1,446.

LIGHTNING CALCULATORS

The clerical staffs of many of the big insurance companies have of late years been considerably reduced by the employment of mechanical calculators.

One of these, the invention of a German, is a compact little affair resembling a music box. It may be made to perform almost instantaneously the most portentous sums in addition, subtraction, multiplication by one or two factors, division, squaring and cubing. It is required, for instance, to multiply 531,975 by 924. The first factor is set by touching little knobs representing 531,975.

To multiply by the other factor you turn a handle four times, push a long slide one place and turn the handle twice, then push the slide another place onward and turn the handle nine times. The long multiplication is now done without the possibility of error so far as the machine is concerned and the dial shows 491,544,900. In the same mechanical way may be done all the other arithmetical processes.

NOVEL WEDDING CEREMONY

To the long list of weddings in automobile, on horseback, in balloons and in other surroundings selected because of love of notoriety, has been added the marriage ceremony by telephone. Out in Iowa a minister yielded to the novel request to declare a man and a woman husband and wife "by wire." The three were separated by a very few miles. There is nothing in the accounts of the affair to show that they might not have met and gone through the ceremony in something like the usual manner. But they earned notoriety.

SNAKES FOND OF HONEY

Three men in cutting down a bee tree in Venango county, Pa., discovered in opening it that a big black snake had devoured almost all the honey. The bee hole was forty feet from the ground and the men averred that the snake, attracted by the honey, had climbed the tree, had its feast, and when discovered by the bees they set upon him to drive him away, and literally covered the snake when found.

"GOLDEN GATE" NAMED HERE

Joaquin Miller, the poet of the Sierras, has erected several interesting memorials on his estate near San Francisco, and among them is the tower here pictured. It stands on the spot from which General Fremont first saw and named the Golden Gate, the strait that connects the Pacific ocean and the Bay of San Francisco. The tower faces due west and has an unobstructed view of the strait. To the spectator, looking from it, the sun seems to set at the Golden Gate.

Catching Fish With a Pony

Fishing with the aid of horses as practiced at Mar del Plata in the Argentine arouses the amused interest of travelers in that country. The pony is ridden into the sea till the water is about three feet deep. The net is attached to the saddle and held at the other end by a man wading in the surf. After dragging the net some distance, the pony gradually comes to the shore and the fish are brought to land.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

There are two ways to tell if you have weak kidneys. The first is through pains in the back. The second by examining the kidney secretions. If you suspect your kidneys, begin using Doan's Kidney Pills at once. Mrs. J. L. Warrick, 406 W. Mulberry St., Lebanon, Ohio, says: "No tongue can tell the agonies I suffered. My feet and limbs were lifeless and there were weeks when I could not put my feet to the floor or stand alone. As a last resort, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. In six weeks I was as free from kidney trouble as if I had never had it."

PIMPLES ON FACE 3 YEARS

"I was troubled with acne for three long years. My face was the only part affected, but it caused great disfigurement, also suffering and loss of sleep. At first there appeared red, hard pimples which later contained white matter. I suffered a great deal caused by the itching. I was in a state of perplexity when walking the streets or anywhere before the public.

"I used pills and other remedies but they failed completely. I thought of giving up when nothing would help, but something told me to try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I sent for a Cuticura Booklet which I read carefully. Then I bought some Cuticura Soap and Ointment and by following the directions I was relieved in a few days. I used Cuticura Soap for washing my face, and applied the Cuticura Ointment morning and evening. This treatment brought marvelous results so I continued with it for a few weeks and was cured completely. I can truthfully say that the Cuticura Remedies are not only all, but more than they claim to be." (Signed) G. Baumel, 1015 W. 20th Place, Chicago, Ill., May 28, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 28 K, Boston.

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit. Ingredients printed on wrapper.

GORMAN'S TELEGRAM STIRS UP COMMENT

Friends of Governor-elect Goldsborough are not enthusiastic over the wording of the telegram of congratulation sent him by his recent opponent, Arthur P. Gorman. Senator Gorman wired:

"I congratulate you upon your being returned elected as Governor."

"Being returned elected" is though to convey an insinuation. Everybody else who sent greetings to Mr. Goldsborough congratulated him on "his election."

Such a message was not expected from what one of Mr. Gorman's advocates in the campaign—perhaps his most earnest champion — termed "a bluff, honest, young follow." Such a message, some think, was more in the line of Mr. Gorman's own thought when he described former Judge Laird Henry's protest against vote buying in Dorchester counny as "the squeal of a loser."

One explanation of the wording of the telegram was that it was sent without bing submitted to the official press agent, and that it was the "real" Gorman message.

TALK OF A CONTEST IS BOTH RIDICULOUS AND CONTEMTIBLE.

The talk of a contest over the Gubernatorial election is confined entirely to politicians and officeholders. No one else takes it seriously. No one with a grain of humor or the slightest idea of fair play could take it seriously. There is rather too much respect for the better class of politicians to believe that they take the matter seriously.

For a political organization which has depended upon trick ballots to keep in power to squeal merely on suspicion that it has been caught in its own trap, by a ballot sanctioned by its own election supervisors, concerning which everybody was informed against which there was no protest, is worse than playing the baby act. It deserves the contempt and derision of right-minded men.

If all the people of Baltimore understood fully the trick ballot which white and black men in the eleven Wilson law counties have been compelled to vote, there would be a chorus of laughter at the idea of a contest because "Progressive Democrat" appeared on the Baltimore ballot and fooled a number of voters. In those counties on a ballot without party designations Republican voters must pick out candidates and then across a big blanket sheet without guiding lines find the box directly opposite. To make the feat more difficult, fake candidates are put on the ballot at the last moment with names differing from regular candidates, possibly only in one initial.

The arrangement of the ballot is secret except to Democrats. Black lines are used so that the illiterate vote of that party may not go astray. They are helped by the way the ballot is folded. No trick is too cheap if it will disfranchise a Republican, white as well as black. Out of a total registered vote of 60,000 in the Wilson law counties in 1909 only 30,000 had their votes counted.

The trick ballot has been indorsed by many people under the mistaken assumption that only the negro vote is affected by it. This is far from being the case. It is a disgrace to the State.

It is responsible for much of the cynical disregard of the sanctity of the ballot which has been witnessed here. It seduously cultivates the lowest political standards and breeds over a large part of the State belief that defilement of the suffrage is not a crime.

For politicians who have approved and applauded this sort of cheating to talk about a contest because in Baltimore city, with a presumably intelligent electorate, they lost a few votes with a ballot so fair that they would not dream of submitting its counterpart to the Wilson law counties is to make themselves both ridiculous and contemptible.

SAYS DISFRANCHISING AMENDMENT HARMS PARTY

Declaring that the decisive defeat of the suffrage amendment in Maryland last Tuesday should show Maryland Democrats that the passage of such a measure is hopeless and one which probably works irreparable harm upon the party that fosters it, the New York Evening Post last Friday printed the following editorial:

"In Maryland the election of a Republican Governor, for the first time since the Civil War, with the single exception of the election of 1895, it is not the only interesting result of Tuesday's voting. In addition to that, the disfranchising amendment has been snowed under, the vote in Baltimore being 43,671 against it and only 23,120 in its favor. It is to be hoped that ordinary horse sense exists in sufficient quantity among Maryland Democrats to make this latest verdict on the perennial nuisance of disfranchisement agitation for good and all.

"The negrophobia, real or pretended, which underlies these ever-repeated attempts to get around the Conttitution of the United States is peculiarly indefensible in a State in which the colored population is not much more than one-sixth of the total; but, be that as it may, the way in which the attempts have been defeated, time after time, in spite of the most desperate endeavors of legal lights to devise some plan that would go down, ought to suffice to make any sane Anglo-Saxon drop the thing at last in sheer disgust if for no other reason. This latest scheme was in open defiance of the Federal Constitution, and doubtless thousands of Democrats refused to vote for it on this account alone.

"As for the defeat of Mr. Gorman, that was undoubtedly accomplished by the independent Democrats—the same element in the population that had fought the elder Gorman so persistently and which was stirred to renewed energy by the exhibitions of ring politics recently given at Baltimore and at Annapolis."

COMPLEXION OF THE NEXT GENERAL ASSEMBLY

House Will Have 60 Democrats And 42 Republicans.

The political complexion of the next House of Delegates will be 60 Democrats and 42 Republicans, while in the Senate there will be 19 Democrats and 8 Republicans.

The Democratic majority in the Senate will be larger than it has been for years, while in the House it will be slightly less than it was at the past two sessions.

In the Senate the Democrats have far more than a three-fifths majority, which is enough to override a Governor's veto, but in the House of Delegates they lack two votes of such a majority.

The Legislature will convene in Annapolis on January 3 and already there is much speculation as to who will be President of the Senate and Speaker of the House. The Democrats will organize both branches and appoint all the subordinate employes.

A boom has been launched for the election of Senator Blair Lee, of Montgomery county, as President of the Senate. There is no doubt that if he would accept the Presidency he would be unaimously elected. He has served three terms and is popular with his colleagues and with party people because of the active support he gave Senator Gorman in the general camsaign.

Senator John P. Moore, of Worcester county, is also being mentioned for the Presidency. In point of service he outranks every member of the Legislation. Another mentioned is Senator Jesse D. Price, of Wicomico county.

It is thought that the Democrats will have more trouble in agreeing upon a speaker than they will be in agreeing on a President. Only a few men with legislative experience have been elected to the House. Two of the most prominent and conspicuous are Mr. Harry Osborne, of Harford county, and Mr. Ogle Marbury, of Prince George's county. Both were members of the last Legislature and their friends point with pride to their records

The personnel and party affiliations of the next Legislature is as follows:

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Monday was the coldest day of the fall so far, the thermometer registering 8 degrees at 6 o'clock a. m. Considerable damage was occasioned by the bursting of water pipes. The water back in the range in Miss Belle Pritchard's cottage exploded Monday morning, wrecking the range and doing considerable damage to furniture in the room. No one injured. One of the bathrooms in Mr. J. L. Echard's cottages was injured by bursted water pipes, and the postoffice was flooded Monday morning by frozen and bursted pipes in Mr. Bittner's barber shop on the second floor of the building. Other slight damage occured in many places in the park from frozen water pipes.

Passage of Local Option Bill Certain.

The Anti-Saloon League announces that it not only has a majority, but has a comfortable working margin in favor of local option in both houses of the next Legislature. The Republican city organization advised its candidates for the Legislature in the Second and Third districts to keep quiet on local option. Of the twelve candidates for the House in the two districts five took the advice of the League and declared for local option. The League elected four of them. Of the seven who took the advice of the city organization and remained quiet, the politicians did not elect even one. The League supported one of the Democratic candidates in Baltimore City in the Second District and he was the highest man on the ticket.

The League won a notable victory in Washington county in defeating Dr. Miller, the author of the notorious "gag" bill introduced two years ago to kill the League movement by making it an offense to ask candidates where they stood on the temperance question. The League also elected the Republican Senator and four Delegates from Carroll county pledged to local option. In Harford county, Mr. Osborn, Democrat, indorsed by the League was hundreds of votes ahead of anybody else. The next candidate was a local option Republican and the one Democrat who had a bad record was defeated. And there were numerous lesser victories.

The League reports that its position has been greatly strengthened throughout the state on its acceptance of pledges from the Gubernatorial candidates and remaining neutral in the contest for Governor, and that the Democratic party owes its defeat to the prominence of Mr. Mahon, the city boss, who used its party organization to defeat the local option bill in the last two legislatures.

ARRESTED FOR SELLING BOOZE.

C. D. Gillespie Under Bond for His Appearance This Morning.

C. D. Gillespie, who has had varied experiences in selling liquor in Garrett county, his latest being that of erecting a saloon and dispensing whiskey and other intoxicants at a point on the old Northwestern Turnpike in District No. 8, was arrested yesterday morning by Sheriff Shartzer on a warrant charging him with a violation of the local law prohibiting the sale of liquor in District No. 8 within a radius of three miles of any church.

Mr. Gillespie was brought to Oakland by the Sheriff and waived a hearing upon the charge until today, entering into a bond in the sum of $1,000 for his appearance. Gillespie claims that he measured the distance intervening between his place of business and the church which shows something over three miles. The Sheriff, however, employed a surveyor and by an air line the distance is slightly over two and a-half miles.

In one of the prominent department stores the Speicher boys attracted a good deal of attention and elicitated much admiration for their manliness and good manners. The Senator returned this afternoon to his Garrett county home. He thinks Cumberland is all right as a shopping center and often comes here to purchase commodities not carried in the local stores of his county.—Saturday's Cumberland Times.

"Uncle" Jacob Hershberger was in Oakland last Thursday, having arrived with the first snow of the season, and gave his forecast of the weather we are to have this winter, which is rather disheartening, especially to those who have failed to lay in a supply of coal or other fuel. "Uncle" Jake's forecast includes thirty-two snow storms, with a blizzard or two thrown in for good measure, rains by the score and general bad weather for the next four or five months. It will be remembered that two years ago his forecasts were treated as a joke by a great many people but before the winter had passed the scoffers came to realize that as a weather prognosticator "Uncle Jake" was there with the goods.

HEARTY WELCOME TO NEW PREACHER

Delightful Reception for Rev. Mr. Williamson and Family at Meadville.

Thursday evening the members and friends of the congregation of the First Methodist Church gathered in the large chapel of the church to officially welcome their new pastor, Rev. Gilbert R. Williamson, and his family. It was an informal gathering, as the pastor had already become acquainted with a large number of the members and attendants at the church, and a most pleasant gathering was heartily enjoyed.

It was more of a "get acquainted" affair than a reception, and this was the goal which those in charge had planned to reach. From 8 o'clock until 9.30 a large number arrived, until the chapel was filled with men and women, boys and girls who greeted each other with the spirit of good fellowship that pervaded the whole atmosphere.

A punch bowl at the west end of the chapel proved a pleasing attraction, and the young ladies in charge were busy welcoming those who surrounded the table.

Mr. and Mrs. Williamson were constantly surrounded by friends and they had for each a hearty handshake and greeting. The reception was a most pleasing success and all were delighted. Over 300 passeed in and out of the large room between 8 and 11 o'clock.

Rev. Gilbert R. Williamson and his family, consisting of his wife, two sons and one daughter, the oldest of the children being 11 years, have recently removed to Meadville from Oakland, Maryland, where he occupied the pulpit of St. Paul's Church. At the last meeting of the Erie Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. Mr. Williamson was transferred to the Erie Conference and appointed to Meadville. He has been preaching from the pulpit of the Stone church for the past month.

Rev. Mr. Williamson is a preacher of repute, both for force and delivery of his remarks, and for the broadness and and depth of his thought. He attended West Virginia Weslevan College, being a member of one of the first classes, graduating in 1896. Since that time he has been actively engaged in the ministry and he comes to Meadville with the reputation of being a good preacher.—Meadville (Pa.) Exchange.

THE SIZE OF THE WORLD

By Rev. William Spiegel
of the Old First Church, Cincinnati.

Just as the moon appears to different people to be of various sizes, from that of a dime to that of a washtub, even physical qualities and quantities of this world and the other material worlds of the universe vary in their apparent dimensions with the varying capacities of physical, mental and imaginative eyesight.

A given individual's world and all there therein is will always vary in accordance with that individual's subjective proportions.

In a very real and deep sense every one builds his own world. Some build it exceedingly small and others, with a better grasp of the meaning of life, build it big. And I would that we might all have that broad conception which not only means a big world for us, but the doing of big things in it by ourselves. We all delight in the master minds that are doing the big things in the material world, and they are truly great; but greater than these wonderful feats of engineering skill which can tunnel the Hudson or dam the Ohio are those other deeds by master minds whereby this world is made the better—the more nearly perfect.

It is this aspect of increasing the size of our world, the moral and spiritual, to which I would draw attention. Obviously, then, our world varies in size according to our knowledge. Anything that lies outside of our knowledge is evidently no part of our conscious world. We have widened the boundaries of the little world of the ancients and have accurately measured and weighed it.

We have found something of the magnitude of the other worlds of the universe and compute distances in interstellar space in years of light velocity. And this inconceivably big world of ours has a vast influence upon our thoughts and life. The greater our knowledge the bigger our world; and the Christian especially should keep his mind alert and alive to this growing world and ever strive to build it on a larger scale and fill it with greater meaning.

Then, too, our world grows with our interests. This is even a closer relation than knowledge, implying care, concern, participation. There are necessarily large areas of knowledge which lie outside of our interest, but as interest lays hold of us and controls thought, motive and conduct our world is large or small according to the area of our interest. In this respect people differ tremendously.

The interest of a great many people in the material things is so great that it absorbs their whole thought, ambition and action; and a world whose absorbing interests are in material things, however great its business and however immense its wealth, is essentially small and insignificant. The man in the big world is the one who is thoroughly interested in his business or profession, but whose interests also reach out into the worlds of science, literature, art, politics, social progress, education and religion.

Then again our world enlarges with our sympathies. Sympathy is closer still than interest, as it involves our hearts. People who lack sympathy live in a small barren world, but those who have wide and warm sympathies melt easily into the lives of others and thus enlarge and enrich their own world. And in our sympathies we ought to be bigger than the mere circle of our own friends, our church or our country. Whoever cuts another human being out of his sympathy by so much narrows and impoverishes his own world, and by as much as we make our sympathies broad and tender we enlarge our world and make it rich.

Finally let us ever remember with the psalmist, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." That lifts it into divine relations and worth. From this point of view we see the world falling fresh from the creative hand of God, developing under his providence, redeemed by his grace and being rebuilt even in our day, into a universal kingdom of brotherhood and love. We are co-workers with him and are now building this new and better world, however insignificant or dark, in the light of his plan and presence, and this fills our world with divine purpose and grace.

Our world thus widens out until it is lost in the full splendor of God and is great with his greatness.

Thus our world is little or big, according to our knowledge, interest, sympathy and faith, and by increasing these we enlarge and enrich our world. A big soul will build a big world. One of large vision and wide interests, or tender sympathies and a masterful faith cannot be shut up within the narrow confines of personal self-interest and littleness of spirit, but will ever build a large and richer world. Then, too, a big world helps tremendously to make a big soul. Our environment calls us out, as it were, so that we stretch our powers to match its appeals. Soul and world thus work together to widen each other out into larger relations. We should work at both ends of the problem, striving to build a bigger world and grow a larger soul.

Self.

We judge others by our own ideal standards, and in our misjudgment sound the depths of our own shallowness.—Rev. C. J. Harris, Unitarian, San Francisco.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

DRINK HABIT AMONG WOMEN

Americans Consume More Liquor Than Do Their English Sisters—Much of It Is Done Openly.

American women drink as much as, if not more than, English women, according to Dr. John D. Quackenbos, who has made a study of the question. Unlike Dr. Murray Leslie, a London physician, who asserted that there is far more secret drinking among women than his generally known, Dr. Quackenbos says that in America women make no effort to conceal their drinking, but proclaim their overfondness for highballs, cocktails and champagne by indulging to excess in public cafes, restaurants and the big hotels. Smoking, too, he says, is a vice coupled with the drink habit that is working havoc among women as well as girls.

"There is not so much secret drinking here as in England," Dr. Quackenbos said, "because women can be seen any night drinking what they fancy and without trying to keep any one from knowing what they are drinking. American women in doing anything good or bad generally go to extremes, and my experience in New York shows it is very difficult to control the drink habit among them because of their unwillingness to make any social sacrifices.

"For instance, they keep going to social functions where punch and other alcoholic drinks are served, and they give wine dinners themselves. They will play with fire and tempt Providence continually. There is one woman now who is a patient of mine who will take as many as ten glasses of brandy at a sitting. And the most unfortunate thing about it is that the habit is developing among young girls, and debutantes at their luncheons and dinners couple it with smoking cigarettes and playing games of chance for money.

"The women of the middle classes in America drink beer, but not to excess, as a rule. It is a custom to have beer with dinners, and if the stuff were pure the harm would be less than it is.

"But tobacco is doing just as much harm as alcohol, for the two go together. And I know that too much tobacco leads to too much alcohol, because the tobacco habit depresses the nerve centers and causes a demand in the system for an antidote, and the antidote for tobacco poison is whisky.

"I can safely say that 75 per cent. of the drink trouble among men, and women, too, is due to tobacco. Where women are not so particular about concealing the fact that they drink they are careful to conceal the fact that they smoke.

"I know that many raise the question as to whether a woman hasn't as much right to smoke as a man. It doesn't turn on the question of moral right. The answer turns on the effect smoking has on the woman's character. It destroys womanliness."

Drunkenness Not Found Alone.

Drunkenness is never to be found alone, never unaccompanied by some horrid crime, if not by a wicked crowd of them. Go to the house of the drunkard, consider his family, look on his affairs, listen to the sound that proceeds from the house of drunkenness as you pass, survey the insecurity of the public ways and of the night streets. Go to the hospital, to the house of charity and the bed of wretchedness. Enter the courts of justice, the prison and the condemned cell. Look at the haggard features of the ironed criminal. Ask all these why they exist to distress you, and you will everywhere be answered by tales and recitals of drunkenness. And the miseries and the vices and the sorrow, and scenes of suffering that have harrowed up your soul were, almost without exception, either prepared by drinking or were undergone for procuring the means for satisfying this vice which sprang from it.—Archbishop Ullathrope.

German Social Life.

Writing on German social life in the English press recently, Sir Henry Johnston says: "I am told by so many thoughtful Germans that the abuse of alcohol still strangles the mental and physical efficiency of a large proportion of German men in the upper and lower classes, that I am compelled to believe in an evil which is only just lessening its hold over our own people, and which is being fiercely chased out of the United States. Yet I am pleased to state that I never encountered a drunken person in Germany throughout my recent tour, though I was aware from the newspapers and reviews that a growing indignation was making itself felt among the bourgeoisie and professional classes against the senseless eighteenth-century traditions of German studenthood."

Cause of Misfortune.

When a man says that misfortune drove him to drink the chances are that drink first drove him to misfortune.

Baneful Effects of Alcohol.

A recent convention of teachers in Indiana adopted resolutions favoring a course of education concerning the baneful effects of alcoholism.

DEMAND FOR HEAVY DRAFT HORSES STILL CONTINUES BIG

No Mechanical Contrivance or Motor Vehicle Has Yet Been Discovered to Replace This Magnificent Animal—Most Valuable Asset the Farmer Has Who Breeds Him Properly.

One of Clydesdale Geldings That Bring High Prices for Six-Horse Team.

(By CAPTAIN A. H. WADDELL.)

Never in the history of this country, or any other, for that matter, has the heavy draught horse been in such demand or so valuable as he is today. Indeed, he is the most valuable asset the farmer has who breeds him right.

No mechanical contrivance or motor vehicle has been discovered that will fill the place of this magnificent, animate creature of flesh and blood, or will any contrivance of any kind be perfected for many a long day, that will accomplish what he can, and do the work as well and so thoroughly, as well as, as cheaply as he can.

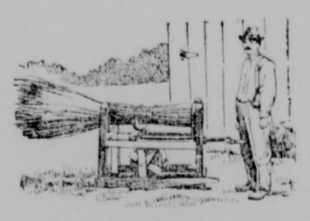
Motor trucks have failed not only to cope with the heavy loads imposed upon the brewers dray for instance, and the hauling of cumberous and heavy machinery, but have been unable to handle them in the narrow and congested thoroughfares of the great cities, where backing and twisting and turning is absolutely necessary. Besides the great service and imperative use of these mighty animals in the large towns and cities of the country where their demand and value is increasing day by day, they are a power that cannot possibly be done without in the agriculture districts where the farm produce requires great hauling power; and in those sections of the country which have as yet not yielded to the plow, they are a pre requisite that cannot be done without.

The farmer who purchases one or more of the biggest, best, and most suitable individuals of the western grade mares, and breeds them to one or other of the great imported stallions of the Clydesdale, Shire, Suffolk, Percheron or Belgian breeds, will, in three years from the time of foaling have a youngster that is worth from $300 to $400, or if more mares have been bred, pairs that are worth from $600 to $800, and which he would have no difficulty, whatever, in selling.

Being able to work his mares up to within a short time of their foaling, he is making good and certain money at both ends, for the young stock cost him comparatively little to keep, and if he has been careful in his selections and wise in his breeding, there is no telling what he might not produce in valuable heavy draught horses. Look for instance at the geldings that go to make the great six-horse teams of the country, the horses that constitute the teams of the great packers. These animals fetch great prices. The heavier, the stronger, the better boned, and more active they are, the better they are for such work, and the more money will they fetch in the market.

Borers Injure Trees.

While the trees are not always killed when infested by the borers, their vitality is lowered, so that they become liable to some other attack, and futhermore they do not produce the amount of fruit which might otherwise be expected.



MUCH PROFIT IN BASKET WILLOW

American Grown Rods are of Good Quality When Proper Care Is Taken in Their Culture.

(By WILLIAM F. HUBBARD.)

Willow growing gives an uncommonly high margin of profit. A large demand for willow is now supplied by import, and as American grown rods are of good quality when proper care is taken of their culture, there is no reason why the further development of the industry should not be possible, if more American farmers can be convinced of its practicability.

Of late years willow furniture has sprung into fashion, and today no minor industry is more prosperous than that devoted to its supply. The

This is now almost entirely received from France at a price which will give the entire trade to the American if he can equal the quality.

Experience has proved that no stock is equal to a willow when durable baskets are demanded. The high-class basket has made a place for itself in the market even under present circumstances, and the entire decline in the trade has been in the low priced basket, which competes with the foreign willow product or the American made wooden basket.

To put a low priced basket on the market with raw willow at its present price the wages must be cut lower than the normal standard in America.

For this reason the trade is almost entirely in the hands of immigrant basket makers, who know no other trade and who are seldom or never reinforced by native workmen.

The remedy lies in a reduction in the cost of the raw material. The cheaper the willow (when good in quality) the better the wages which can be paid to produce a low priced basket, and a low priced basket of good quality will find an almost unlimited market. On this point the entire trade agrees.

Great care should be taken in the selection of the willow bed. Rich, permanently moist sandy loam gives best returns, though ordinary moist, sandy land often yields profitable crops of willow.

Poor soils produce paying crops where there is a market for short rods. Avoid land on which water is stagnant during the summer. If by drainage the water level on land can be lowered at least six feet below the surface, the situation may be considered appropriate.

Do not plant willows in localities where early frosts occur. The tender shoots are easily injured by the cold.

Plow 10 or 12 inches deep in the fall, prior to planting the following spring. This turns the top layer of the soil so deep that weed seeds cannot spring up.

Returns depend very largely upon the method of culture, but more upon the variety of willow planted, because the shoots of even the best varieties and in the most suitable soil grow brittle after the stools become old.

Rabbit Now of Value.

Rabbits which have been a great pest in Australia have now become of commercial value. During the past five years, 45,400,000 frozen rabbits were exported, mainly to England, with 98,000,000 rabbit skins. The United States last year bought skins to the value of $48,000.

HALLOWE'EN Day of Mirth and Mystery

EACH successive year sees an increasing observance of Hallowe'en—a holiday which rivals any on the calendar as an occasion for pranks and pastimes. The growing disposition to devote more attention to the celebration of Hallowe'en is not strange, for the occasion with its quaint customs has much to commend it as a break in the routine of the year. For one thing, this fateful day of mirth and mystery is the first of the autumn and winter holidays, and yet more significant, it is for the young folks the first break in the school year. Withal, its festivities are for the most part reserved for the period after nightfall, so that even the individuals who are occupied during the day may participate.

The festival of the night of October 31 is in its origin and traditions one of the most picturesque which now finds observance in this country. It has a number of different designations, among which are Hallowe'en, All Hallow Even, Nutcrack Night and Snap Apple Night. It derives it most common name, however, as the eve or vigil of All Saints' or All Hallows Day (November 1). From time out of mind this has been heralded as a night when witches, devils and other michief-makers are abroad on their baneful midnight errands, while the fairies are supposed to hold on that night a grand anniversary.

To accept the spirit of the season the devotee of Hallowe'en must concede that on no other night of the year do such supernatural influences prevail as after dark on the closing day of October. According to ancient beliefs the spirits of the dead then wander about and in some instances the spirits of living persons are supposed to have the temporary power to leave their bodies and join the ghostly throng. Especially gifted with the power to converse with airy visitants are persons who have had the good fortune to be born on Ooctober 31, but other folks, also, tradition hath it, may be warned or advised by the elves.

For all that such awesome doing are attributed to the mysterious spirits that are abroad on Hallowe'en these supernatural beings cannot be altogether ill natured, since they are willing without fee or reward, and on the condition of the performance of a very simple ceremony, to disclose to any curious young man or woman most interesting particulars concerning their future life partners. Indeed, Saint Matrimony is the patron saint of Hallowe'en, and it is the night of all nights for peering into the future, and particularly for discovering just what sort of husband or wife fate has decreed for the unmarried.

Hallowe'en appears to be in its origin a curious combination of classic mythology and Christian superstition. For instance, the Romans had on November 1 a feast to Pomona, the goddess of fruits and seeds, at which time there was a formal opening of the stores of eatable laid up in the summer for use in winter. This may explain the origin of the very appropriate plan of using nuts and apples in connection with the Hallowe'en festivities. On this same date occurred the great autumn festival to the sun, with which the Druids or ancient Ceits celebrated thanksgiving for their harvest. On the eve of the day the Lord of Death called together the wicked souls that within the twelve months had been condemned henceforth to occupy the bodies of animals.

Especially quaint has been the observance of Hallowe'en in Ireland, where from the earliest days it was the custom for each household to set out on Hallowe'en the best viands it could afford, and apples and nuts were devoured in abundance. In some instances peasants went from house to house collecting bread, cake, butter, cheese, eggs and other eatables for a feast. In many parts of Great Britain bread or cake has long been associated with Hallowe'en, and to this day the women of some districts in England observe the custom of baking on that night a cake for every member of the family. Centuries ago it was the practice to ring the church bells all night, but King Henry VIII. of England put a stop to that.

In the United States at the present time there is comparatively little thought given to the history of Hallowe'en in connection with its twentieth century observance. Today it is above all else an occasion for sport and frolics and feasting in various forms. The customs which were once ceremonies of belief are now observed in jest. Particularly is this the case with respect to the matrimonial forecasts, but naturally interest in these methods of learning fate's verdict is not lessened by the knowledge that the same expedients were employed in deadly earnest by the belles of several hundred years ago. The roasting of nuts is a time-honored Hallowe'en practice, and many of the ruses for learning fate's decree in the matter of matrimony are identified with this feature. Inquisitive maidens are wont to place a number of nuts, each bearing the name of a lover, on the bars of a grate among the embers. According to the ritual if a nut cracks or jumps the lover will prove unfaithful, whereas if it begins to blaze or burn he has a regard for the person making the trial. If the nut burns quietly and brightly especial sincerity of affection is indicated. Similarly, if the nuts named after a girl and her lover burn together an early wedding may be looked for.

Apples, next to nuts, are the favorite vehicles for discovering on Hallowe'en the intentions of Cupid. Indeed, at the present time perhaps the best known and most generally practiced of all the Hallowe'en recipes is that which admonishes the credulous maiden to eat an apple before a looking glass while combing her hair with the promise that if these directions be followed explicitly the face of her destined conjugal partner will be seen in the mirror as though peeping over her shoulder. Equally well known is the scheme whereby any maiden may find out the first letter of the name of her future husband by peeling an apple, taking the paring by one end in her fingers and after swinging it three times around her head allowing it to fall in whatever fashion it may. A little imagination may be necessary to construe the position of the paring as indicative of a desired letter, but usually this mental aid is readily supplied.

Another mode of peeping into the matrimonial lottery has been transplanted to America from Scotland. By this plan the young women go hand-in-hand, blindfolded, or at least with eyes closed, to the cabbage patch and each pulls the first plant met with. Earth on the root of the cabbage thus selected signifies dowry. The shape and size of the vegetable denote the appearance and size of the future spouse, while the taste of the heart and stem indicate his disposition. The Irish girls have a scheme for catching a glimpse of a future husband by throwing a ball of yarn out of the window, holding the end of the yarn and then rewinding it saying the Pater Noster backward. If the ball of yarn, outside in the darkness, be watched carefully the young woman may hope to be rewarded by seeing the desired apparition. In this same old-fashioned category is the legend which admonishes a girl to wet the sleeve of a shirt and hang it on a chair before the fire ere she retires on Hallowe'en. Then if she remain awake until midnight she may see her future helpmate enter the room and turn the drying garment.

Entirely erroneous is the impression prevailing in some quarters that all matrimonial prognosticating, as carried on at Hallowe'en, is for the benefit of the fair sex. As a matter of fact there are numerous forms of divination designed for the use of arden' swains. The best known of these is that wherein the smitten youth descends cellar stairs with a candle in one hand and a mirror in the other, hoping to find the face of a sweetheart reflected back to him. Especially adapted for practice by farmer lads is the hemp-seed ordeal. The youthful optimist must go out alone and unperceived with a handful of hemp seed, which he sows, the while repeating "Hemp seed, I sow thee and her that is to be my true love come after me and pull thee." Whereat, upon looking over his left shoulder he ought to see a likeness of his future sweetheart pulling the freshly sowed seed. If the experimenter sees nothing he must perforce conclude that he is never to marry or else that he has not followed directions explicitly enough in his test.

There has been increasing appreciation during recent years on the part of hostesses of all ages that Hallowe'en—a night of laughter and jollity and mystery—affords a most delightful opportunity for entertaining in a unique way. The quaint conceits in the amusement line which have already been improvised for this mystic occasion prove how inviting is this field for individual ingenuity. Hallowe'en has become especially popular at the schools and colleges of the country. It is a brief season given over to the pranks of the students, and each student body tries to outdo the others and at the same time surpass the exploits of its predecessors. Particularly at the boarding schools for girls and at women's colleges is there a fantastic observance of Hallowe'en.

The invitations to a Hallowe'en party must above all else have the requisite of novelty. The wording may hint of dark secrets to be unfolded, and as symbols of the occasion there are representations of witches riding brooms, blinking owls, broad-winged mats, or pumpkins. For decorative purposes nature provides at this season of the year a wealth of vivid-hued material, such as cornstalks, pumpkins, carrots, russet oak leaves and green pine boughs. Similarly the autum products—apples, nuts, grapes, etc—afford ample menu for refreshments for guests imbued with the spirit of the occasion.

A favorite means for lighting at Hallowe'en parties is afforded by candles set in hollowed carrots and jack-o'-lanterns. The jack-o'-lanterns are fashioned, as most of our readers are aware, by removing the pulp from pumpkins and squashes; cutting openings to represent eyes, nose and mouth and fastening a lighted candle inside. If desired, the bizarre effect may be emphasized by adorning the visage of the pumpkin lantern with painted white or black eyebrows and mustaches. Sometimes a hostess ambitious to make her Hallowe'en entertainment unique in every respect elects to hold it in a barn or attic, or even in a cellar. Black draperies and the symbol of the skull and cross-bones have likewise been used on occasion to add to the "creepy" atmosphere.

No Hallowe'en party would be complete without certain time-honored pastimes on the program. Conspicuous among these is the perennially popular prank of ducking for apples. The apples are set afloat in a tub and each person essays to catch one of the floating prizes with the teeth. The hands must not be used at all in this attempt. It is said that the only sure way to capture an apple is to force it to the bottom of the tub and there hold it close while it is caught with the teeth. However, very few contestants employ this method and their antics in pursuing the elusive apples are often amusing in the extreme. Zest may be given to the apple ducking by providing a grab bag of prizes, which is open to the contestants in the order in which they capture apples.

An apples tied to a string and swinging in a doorway is another variation of this diversion, and yet another trick is to suspend a stick by a string tied in the middle. An apple is placed at one end of the stick and a lighted candle at the other, and the stick is then whirled around rapidly. The object, of course, is to catch the apple with the teeth and not inadvertently grasp the candle. When a cake is baked at home for a Hallowe'en party it is customary to place a ring in the loaf just as in a wedding cake, and also a key. The ring, of course, signifies marriage, while the key signifies a journey for the finder.

To Farm Out Copper Lands.

A party of Houghton capitalists have under consideration the establishment at a point on the Copper Range railroad south of Houghton a 600-acre experimental farm. The lands have already been secured, but are at present heavily timbered.

Steps will be taken during the coming winter to cut the timber and early next spring the stumps will be removed and the land made ready for cultivation. It is hardly probable that crops will be planted before 1913, but the enterprise when established will prove one of the biggest from an agricultura' standpoint in the copper country.—Michigan Manufacturer.

The Angler's Bait.

A well-known angler at Peterborough having obtained a wasps' nest containing a large number of grubs, placed the nest in the kitchen oven to kill the grubs so that he could use them for bait.

The next morning he went to get the grubs, but on opening the oven door a swarm of wasps flew out. The oven was not hot enough to kill the grubs, but was sufficiently warm to hatch them.—London Daily Mail.

Some Coffee Facts From the Lone Star State.

From a beautiful farm down in Texas, where gushing springs unite to form babbling brooks that wind their sparkling way through flowery meads, comes a note of gratitude for delivery from the coffee habit.

"When my baby boy came to me five years ago, I began to drink Postum, having a feeling that it would be better for him and me than the old kind of drug-laden coffee. I was not disappointed in it, for it enabled me, a small, delicate woman, to nurse a bouncing, healthy baby 14 months.

"I have since continued the use of Postum for I have grown fond of it, and have discovered to my joy that it has entirely relieved me of a bilious habit which used to prostrate me two or three times a year, causing much discomfort to my family and suffering to myself.

"My brother-in-law was cured of chronic constipation by leaving off coffee and using Postum. He has become even more fond of it than he was of the old coffee.

"In fact, the entire family, from the latest arrival (a 2-year-old who always calls for his 'potie' first thing in the morning), up to the head of the house, think there is no drink so good or so wholesome as Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Famous Old Morocco City

Was in Its Day One of the World Capitals of Islam and Still Interesting to Europeans.

Morocco City, the capital of the southern half of the Moroccan kingdom, is a far more interesting city than Fez, says the New York Sun. Architecturally its monuments, including the famous Kutubia tower, the counterpart of the Giralda in Seville, the famous mosque of Muley Abdallah and a hundred other ruined or semi-ruined edifices surviving from the days when the city had 700,000 inhabitants and was one of the world capitals of Islam, are the most considerable and magnificent in Morocco. Equally beautiful is the site of this city in the upper valley of the Tensift river, surrounded in a half circle by the great wall of the grand Atlas mountains, whose snow-clad peaks are seen beyond a foreground of large farms and fertile fields. A city far less given over to war, with a population less ferocious, less fanatical than that of Fez or Mekinez, Morocco City has been much more frequently visited by Europeans than its northern rivals. Geographically, Morocco City is the real gateway to the Sahara. By the famous Glawi pass one road climbs over the Atlas to Tafilet, and the caravan route continues to Timbuktu. A second road descends to the Draa crossing the Atlas chain, while a third leads to Tarudant and the Sus country. Close communication with the south has left its mark upon the people, who are darger and show more patently the infusion of African blood than the Berbers and Arabs of the north.

Care of Canaries.

In selecting a canary one of the cross-breeds, pure canary with a strain of goldfinch or bullfinch, is the best to choose, as they are much hardier than the pure canary and have splendid voices. The best food for canaries is canary and rape seed, one part of rape to three of canary. From April to September they should have a little fresh green food every day, either chickweed, watercress or lettuce. A lump of sugar should always be kept between the cage wires within easy reach.

Always give a canary a bath the first thing in the morning. After cleaning the bottom of the cage should be sprinkled with gravel and sand (not sand from the seashore, as the salt will kill the bird).

Never hang the cage in a draft or a stiff breeze, as canaries are very susceptible to cold. Neither should it remain uncovered in a lighted room at night, as the bird's song is liable to become impaired.

GREATEST THING IN THE UNIVERSE.

Not Justice, Not Power, Not Wisdom, but—Love.

Pastor Russell Says That It, and It Alone, Caps the Climax of Our Creator's Adorable Character—Mistakes of the Past and How We Are Mastering Them—Crowds as Usual.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Nov. 12.—"The Greatest Thing in the Universe" was Pastor Russell's theme in the London Tabernacle last evening. He had as usual a crowded house of most attentive listeners. His text was: "That in the Ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His grace in His loving kindness toward us in Christ Jesus." (Ephesians ii. 7.) He claimed that all Christendom has erred in respect to the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of the love of God, which passeth all understanding." (Ephesians iii. 18, 19.) This is evidenced by our conflicting Creeds, not one of which is rational enough to be defended by one in a hundred of its own clergy, who profess that they believe it and are teaching it.

This, he declared, is driving many noble souls away from the Bible, which has been misinterpreted by us all. Our difficulty has been that we looked at the unfinished parts of the Divine Program and have neglected to properly use the telescope of God's Word, which would have enabled us to see the coming features of that Plan, without which the whole would be incomplete and unsatisfactory both to God and His creatures.

The Pastor reminded his hearers that none of us would judge of a new building by the first story of the structure, incomplete and surrounded by scaffolding. On the contrary, we would inquire for the architect's drawings and consider them prophecies of the building to be. We should do likewise in considering the work of the great, Divine Architect of the Universe.

God purposes the development of the church class first, as a new creation on the spirit plane and higher than the angels, "partakers of the divine nature." "Ye are the Church of the living God, a kind of first-fruits unto God of His creatures." (II Peter i. 4; James i. 18.)

Then the World's Salvation.

The Pastor impressed upon his hearers the fact that the Bible declares the Church to be the "First-borns," the "first fruits" of God's creatures. Thus does God positively declare a secondary part to His great Plan of Salvation—in which "free grace" and fullest opportunity for reconciliation to God will be granted to the non-elect.

But their salvation will be not heavenly, but earthly. Their resurrection will not mean a "change" of nature, but a raising up to the perfection of human nature to be enjoyed in a world-wide paradise, by all the willing and obedient. Nor will the unwilling and disobedient be tortured to all eternity, but as the Scriptures declare, "All the wicked will He destroy;" they shall "perish like brute beasts," in the "Second Death."—II Peter ii. 12; Psalm ix. 17, R. V.

In order to judge of the Divine character we must see the Divine Program, and not merely a primary section of it. The Jewish Age and its people, its Law, its priesthood and its Jubilee were only rough, outline sketches of the Divine Plan, which had not then even begun. The Redeemer is the Foundation for the great structure; as said St. Paul, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid—Jesus Christ."

Love the Principal Thing.

However, a God of Justice, Wisdom and Power, devoid of Love, would be as cold and unsympathetic as a marble statue. The greatest thing amongst men is Love. Neither palace nor cottage could be a real home and a place of joy and peace and refreshment without love. We cannot even suppose the heart devoid of love without supposing it under the control of selfishness, and selfishness is merely another name for sin.

The greatest men and women who have ever lived, and who have done the most to bless our race, have been men and women of heart, of Love. Surely Love is the principal thing in all this world, without which none can be truly happy under any condition, but with which happiness is possible under almost any condition. Whence came to man this quality of Love, unless from his Creator?

Purport of His Text.

The speaker declared that God's Love will be most wonderfully displayed in His gracious kindness in the resurrection of the Church, to glory, honor and immortality. Then will come a further display of "Love Divine, all love excelling," when mankind in general shall be blessed under the Messianic Kingdom. But God's Love is great and our text declares that in coming Ages God will display the riches of His grace, His love, toward us, His Church, the Bride.

"Let us not receive the grace of God in vain." Let us count the necessary sacrifices as a very reasonable service

There are now 435 subordinate granges and 28 Pomonas in the state of Maine with a total membership of about 60,000. State Master Stetson says: "The grange has taken into its fold all members of the farmer's family group on a footing of equality. It has improved the condition of all our people, making more productive farms, more suitable farm homes, more acceptable farm conditions, better roads, more helpful schools and a nobler citizenship." Speaking on co-operation he says:

"The benefits to be derived from intelligent co-operation cannot be overestimated. As its scope is enlarged the interests involved should receive the most painstaking attention and affairs be conducted on the soundest business principles. Co-operative stores, new and old, are doing a large business, and to the financial benefit of Patrons. At least 100 granges are buying in carload lots and delivering directly to members. Co-operative fire insurance has saved thousands of dollars to the farmers of Maine. We have three grange fire insurance companies doing a business of over $20,000,000 risks in force. The most of our granges own large, commodious halls, and the value of all grange property is estimated at over $1,000,000."—Tribune-Farmer.

A GREAT POTATO REGION.

Visited by a Well Known Patron, Who Tells What He Saw There.

Past National Lecturer Whitehead, one of the early organizers of the grange movement, made addresses in Maine as well as in other states the past summer, and here is what he found up in the great potato region of Aroostook county. "The crop," he says, "is estimated this year at 15,000,000 bushels on 750,000 acres. I saw rows of potatoes there a mile long. One Patron had a little patch of 206 acres in potatoes. The grange has taught the farmers how to sell their crops, and last spring over 100 cars of seed potatoes were shipped direct to their brother Patrons in New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland." He also found that Aroostook county Patrons have been very successful in their other co-operative business enterprises. Four of their stores this year will do a business of about $300,000. At Houlton they have a grange gristmill. It is estimated that the co-operative business of the Patrons of Maine this year, through their stores and in handling western grain and feed, also fertilizer, farm implements, etc., will amount to at least $1,000,000. Their three grange fire insurance companies are now insuring $28,000,000 worth of grange property. The grange halls of the state have cost over $1,000,000. Mr. Whitehead also found autos owned by Patrons no uncommon sight in Maine. Why not? They evidently can afford autos better than many who are not farmers and drive machines covered by mortgages.

A County Legislative Committee.

The Columbia county (N. Y.) grange legislative committee, composed of one member from each grange, held its first meeting Oct. 19, ten of sixteen granges being represented. It was voted to ask the state grange legislative committee to send copies of all bills before the legislature this winter in which the grange is interested to the secretary of the committee, who in turn will distribute them among the granges for consideration. All resolutions intended for introduction at the state grange are to come before the county committee for consideration before the state grange meeting. The committee also adopted a resolution in favor of direct primaries.

The Oppidist.

[A New Jersey woman suggests the term "oppidism," from the Latin word oppidum, meaning a town, to express devotion to one's home place.]

Ho, I'm a jolly oppidist!
All ye who hear my lay,
I do beseech ye, lean and list
To hear what I shall say.
I love the town I'm living in
All other towns above;
It is the place I make my "tin,"
And that's the place to love.

I'm such an oppidist, in fact,
My town I never roast,
And when by others it is whacked
I then begin to boast:
I brag about our public square;
I boost the schoolhouse, too;
I say our girls are very fair,
And that is simply true.

I'm oppidistic every time
I get a chance to be,
I oppidize in prose and rhyme,
And do the same with glee.
An optimistic oppidist
Am I from top to toe.
My oppidism they can't resist
Wherever I may go.

And mine's the sort of oppidism
That helps the town along,
Opposing every sort of schism
That looks awry or wrong.
And—stick a pin here, man or maid—
Herein a secret lies:
You've got to patronize home trade
If you would oppidize.

FOUR SONS TO BE DOCTORS

Three Daughters of Dr. McComas to be Nurses Too.

The following interview with Dr. H. W. McComas was published in last Sunday's Baltimore Sun:

That the physicians of this country, of Maryland especially, are participating too much in politics is the belief of Dr. Henry W. McComas, of Oakland, Md., who spoke feelingly on the subject yesterday, while on a short visit to his family, now in this city.

"It is greatly to be deplored," said Dr. McComas, who is a cousin of the United States Senator Louis E. McComas, "that members of my profession are taking a prominent part in the political life of our State. It is true, unfortunately, that in almost every county physicians are either candidates for high offices, which take up a large share of their time, or are regarded by the party workers as the principal vote-getter on their lists.

"I have been Mayor of Oakland several terms, but I shall never again be a candidate for the reason that I do not conceive it to be right for physicians to mix in affairs of government, however simple.

"The practitioner of medicine should keep out of politics just as carefully as members of that higher profession who wear the 'cloth.'

"Physicians playing politics can not find the time necessary for the proper care of their patients. They reach a state of stagnation. It is well known, too, that the physician who does not read and keep abreast of the thought of his time cannot do justice to his clientele, or make any progress that is worth while.

"I have four sons and three daughters, and each one will be identified with medical work, either in the capacity of physician or nurse. Several are students now in this city. Their names are Harry W., Joseph West, Carlton, Henry, Annie, Nellie and Martha McComas. I think that is pretty nearly a record."

Dr. McComas is a son of Dr. Josiah Lee McComas, of Oakland, who is 87 years old. He is a graduate of the University of Maryland and was one of the first students at the Johns Hopkins Medical School. Having practiced for 27 years in Western Maryland, he is widely known in that section, and conducted for many years the first hospital in Garrett county.

WARFIELD AGAINST AN EXTRA SESSION

Former Governor Says He Can See No Necessity For Calling It.

Asked Tuesday by a Baltimore News man what he thought of the discussion for an extra session of Legislature, former Governor Edwin Warfield said:

"I am unalterably opposed to an extra session of the Legislature. I am opposed to it because I can see no necessity or just reason for it. It would be an unnecessary expense on the taxpayers of the State, especially when no unusual conditions exist that require an extra session. Hasty legislation is dangerous.

"The burden of the taxpayers is already heavy enough. Governor Goldsborough can be relied upon to appoint honest and decent men to office. All of his utterances justify the belief that he will perform the duties of his office to the best interests of the people. With a Democratic Senate to confirm his appointments there should be no fear of his getting incompetent or unfit men.

"The people will not tolerate anything that is not clean and honest at this time. Public officers are going to be held to strict accountability.

"The voters have evidently shown that they have faith in Goldsborough by electing him. I have no fear of the result."

HELD FOR COURT

C. D. Gillespie, Liquor Dealer in District No. 8, will Be Tried in December

Charles D. Gillespie, of District No. 8, who was arrested last Wednesday, charged with selling liquor at a point in District No. 8 of Garrett county, within the three mile limit of a church building, had a preliminary hearing before Justice Teats last Thursday afternoon.

Quite a number of witnesses from the locality where the saloon is located were present at the hearing, their testimony being that the place conducted by Mr. Gillespie is within the limits prohibiting the sale of liquor. The justice held that he had no jurisdiction in the matter and sent the case to Court, Mr. Gillespie entering into a bond for his appearance.

CHARGED WITH HOUSE BURNING.

Mrs. G. W. L. Lohm, of Deer Park, Arrested in Connection With the Savage Fire.

Mrs. George W. L. Lohm, of Deer Park, was arrested last Friday by Sheriff Andrew Shartzer upon a warrant sworn out by Deputy Fire Marshall Thomas Yewell, of Baltimore, charging her with having fired the building of Charles R. Savage, at Deer Park, some months ago.

Mrs. Lohm was brought to Oakland by the Sheriff and detained until Saturday when she was released upon habeas corpus proceedings and a bond in the sum of $2,000 for her appearance at the December Term of Court.

Fire Marshall Yewell was at Deer Park last week and investigated the burning of Mr. Savage's two buildings. The evidence against Mrs. Lohm is entirely circumstantial, based upon letters mailed at the Deer Park postoffice, in which threats were made if Mr. Savage rented his property to certain people it would be burned.

THE DEATH RECORD.

NELSON STATTON CLARY.

I have lost a friend. Mr. Nelson Statton Clary, the son of Rev. W. H. Clary, of Deer Park, died after a short illness last Friday morning at the home of Mr. Lester Yutzy in Loch Lynn where he and his wife were on a visit. They had come over from his home in Mountain Lake Park to spend Sunday afternoon with the family of Mr. B. F. Crane, the father of Mrs. Yutzy, and then intended to attend the meeting which was going on at the Baptist church in the evening. Before supper he was taken worse with a bad cold which he had had for several weeks, which grew rapidly worse until before morning pneumonia set in. Everything was done that could be done by physicians and friends to aid him in his fight against the disease, but to no avail. On the morning of November 17, he passed away aged 37 years, 10 months and 29 days. His widow and two baby girls have the sincere sympathy of all their friends. It is sometimes hard to understand God's dealings with his people, but we know that all things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are called according to his purpose, and that sometime we will understand. Sorrows many and heavy have come upon the devoted wife and mother in the last few years. First a baby girl was taken and then a little son, and now the husband. As she thinks of her loved ones who are spared to be with her may God give her strength to endure and faith to trust that she may provide for their needs. May she look forward to the future with faith until she can say:

Forward, go forward, O Time in your flight
Out of the darkness into the light.
Out of the griefs, out of the tears;
Out of the sighing, out of the fears,
Into the marvelous future give birth
When the soul shall be free from the confines of earth.

Forward, go forward, O Time in your flight
Hasten the day when faith shall be sight;
Hasten the joy, hasten the praise.
Hasten the song the redeemed shall raise
When the angel shall stand on earth and sea
And announce that no more shall time ever be.

Forward, go forward, O Time in your flight,
To all of God's people the future is bright.
Darkness has gone, the day draweth near.
Doubting has passed; redemption is here.
For Satan is conquered, his throne is cast down;
Jehovah has taken his sceptre and crown.

C. W. HUDSON.

THEODORE MCROBIE.

The remains of Theodore McRobie, who died at his home in Keyser, West Va., last Monday morning after an illness of a week of pneumonia, were brought to Oakland yesterday morning and interred in the Oakland cemetery. The deceased was aged about forty-five years and was a son of the late William McRobie of Oakland. About a month ago Mr. McRobie burried his eldest son in Oakland, who died of typhoid fever. The services yesterday were in charge of Garrett Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., of which deceased was a member for a long number of years. He was also a member of the Methodist church, the pastor of which, Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker, officiated in the services at the grave.

JAMES KERENS.

Mr. James Kerens, an old and highly respected resident of the Loch Lynn Heights community, died yesterday morning after a week's illness of pneumonia, aged sixty-two years. He is survived by his widow, two sons and six daughters. Mr. Kerens was born in Ireland and has been a resident of Garrett county for a long term of years. He was a staunch Catholic, being a member of the Oakland church from which edifice his funeral will occur Friday morning at ten o'clock after service to be conducted by the pastor, Rev. James E. Connell.

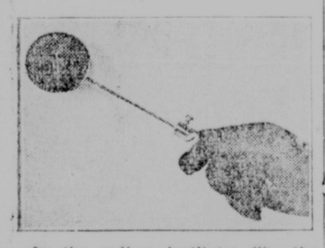
Strange Cactus in Arizona



Those who are familiar only with the small cacti of the ordinary garden must find it difficult to realize the great size attained by the cacti in the southwest, notably in Arizona. For that reason this photograph should be interesting as showing a giant of the species compared with a horse. It should be ramarked further that the form taken by the plant—that of a spur—is decidely curious. This was brought about by strong winds, which gradually bent the cactus over until its top touched the earth, when a second root formed. The type illustrated grows with remarkable rapidity.

WHERE MANITOU SPEAKS

A familiar landmark near Hayton, Wis., is the old "Council Elm" that stands at a bend in the Manitowoc river a short distance below Hayton. The Pottawotomie Indians who once occupied this region regarded the tree with awe and veneration, believing it endowed with special attributes by the Manitou or Great Spirit. Under its shade all important councils of the tribe took place. As a meeting place for representatives of the different northwestern tribes who wished to enter the Pottawotomie territory, it must have witnessed some strange scenes. Each spring and fall all the Pottawotomie clans were wont to gather at the spacious camping ground near the tree. For days the beating of drums, the chanting of barbaric songs and fantastic dances occupied the attention of the savages. Among the many Indian legends concerning the tree one of the few that has survived is to the effect that the Manitou speaks to his people in the rustle of its leaves and the sigh of the winter wind through the bare branches.

FORTUNE IN A SMALL DISC

In the radium institutes like the one recently opened in London there is nothing more wonderful to the visitor than the little square or circular trays of metal containing specks of radium in shellac varnish whose rays hold such vast possibilities in the future of mankind's struggle against disease. The disc illustrated contains 70 milligrammes of radium, worth £1,350. The trays when applied to the patient are covered with metal caps or screens which lessen or intensify the power of the rays according to the nature of the disease. In the basement of the London institution is a strong room holding the largest stock of radium in the world. The scale-room where these tiny black specks of radium are weighed is a broad, lofty, white-tiled room absolutely vibration-proof.

WHERE EGGS ARE BLACK

Every one has heard of the black broth of the Spartans over which the fastidious Dionysius made a wry face, and was not convinced when told that it was enjoyable with Spartan sauce, the ingredients of which, in the Syracusan's opinion, could little alter the taste. The housewife would, however, probably be shocked to find the eggs left by the milkman jet black. The black Cayuga duck, a South American bird, frequently lays black eggs. The black coloring does not penetrate the shell, being due to an oily pigment which can be rubbed off. In successive layings the coloring fades and disappears.

SOUTHERN POINT OF NATION

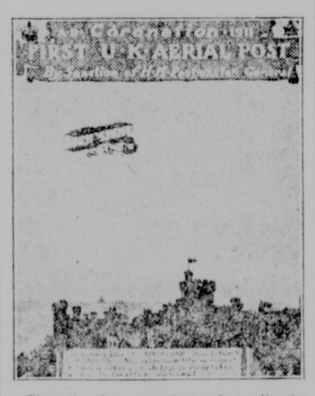
The most southern point of mainland territory in the United States is on a sharp bend of the Rio Grande river about 20 miles southwest of Brownsville. The government official survey shows that its latitude is 25 degrees and 9 minutes, which places it below the most southern part of the peninsula of Florida, but not as far south as Key West. The spot is marked by a group of picturesque Mexican ranch buildings with their thatched roofs. Growing upon the land are groves of wild palm trees which lend to the beauty of the tropical scene. The distance between Brownsville and the mouth of the Rio Grande in a direct line is approximately 22 miles, but the river has so many curvatures that its course between the two points covers 110 miles, according to the survey of the international boundary commission, which is composed of the representatives of the United States and Mexican governments. Before the river empties into the gulf it makes a sharp bend to the south, and this rounded peninsula forms the most southern mainland of the country. Most of the territory between Brownsville and the Rio Grande's mouth is covered by a dense winderness of chaparral. The soil is of primitive richness, caused by the periodical deposits of silt from the stream's overflow. Owing to the inaccessibility of the little Mexican ranch, which holds the distinction of marking the most southern spot, the place has been visited by very few Americans.

MULE AND BEAR FIGHT DUEL

The story of a duel to the death between a mule and a bear comes from Chambersburg, Pa. The mule came out victorious. Aroused by a commotion in his barn, Dan Shawley, lumberman and farmer, found the bear in combat with his pet mule. Contrary to the established custom the mule was using his front feet in the battle and peppering bruin a regular tatto over the head. One savage slap by the mule broke one of the bear's front legs and the bulky animal fell prostrate. Then the mule reversed himself and let loose the death dealing assault from his hind quarters. The bear died shortly after Shawley reached the scene. It weighed 262 pounds and showed the marks of eight bullet punctures.

KICK THAT SAVED A LIFE

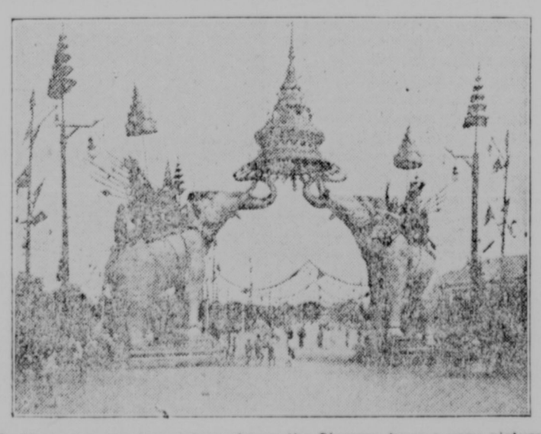
While running his train out of Dent, Minn., the other day, W. A. Beardsley, engineer on a freight train, saw what seemed to be a blue parcel lying between the rails about twenty car lengths ahead. But it turned out to be a child, who arose and sat down on one of the rails. The emergency brake was applied, but it was impossible to stop in time. Beardsley ran out on the pilot, intending to pick the child up. He reached the pilot too late, but had time to extend his foot and kick the child off the rail and down the embankment. The train was stopped, the child picked up and brought back to Dent. A doctor was summoned and it was found that the child was unhurt except that it had a bruise where the engineer's shoe had struck it.



ARIZONA BRIDGE OF AGATE

The petrified forests of Arizona present some of the most marvelous evidence of volcanic action known to the world. Groves of giant trees, becoming solidified, have fallen of their own weight. One log which is probably the largest example of petrification has recently come to attention. It is 110 feet long, spans a "box canon" 60 feet wide, forming a convenient foot-bridge, and is really a mass of fine agate weighing hundreds of tons. The huge roots of the fallen monarch rise to a height of eight or ten feet at one end while the upper extremity of the trunk is buried in the soft formation of the land in which it grew. Its diameter is from five feet to two at the smaller end.

LOBSTER THREE FEET LONG



The Portland (Me.) fishing steamer Carrie and Mildred a few days ago brought in a lobster from outside that was the largest taken off the Maine coast for a number of years. The crustacean weighed a strong seven pounds and was nearly three feet in length. The legs were nearly as large as the claws of an ordinary lobster, while the claws were huge affairs.

FIRST AERIAL POSTCARDS

Though the carrying of mails by aeroplane has been tried in America, France and Germany, England was the first to establish a regular aerial postal service, that between Hendon and Windsor. For this service the British postoffice issued the very attractive postcards here illustrated, and they proved decidedly popular both with the English and with visitors from other lands who wished to send a novel communication to friends at home. The profits of the cards are devoted to charity.

Triumphal Arch in Bangkok

As the accompanying picture shows, the Siamese have a very picturesque notion of street decoration for processions and other ceremonial occasions. This triumphal arch in Bangkok has a barbaric splendor much more striking than the arches that are erected in Occidental lands.

GENERAL GRANT ON DRINKING

Does Not Touch Liquor and Has Not for Over 18 Years Because He Is Afraid of It.

"Tell the young men through your paper that General Grant does not drink a drop of liquor—has not for 18 years; because he is afraid to drink it.

"Now you listen," continued the general. "When I was a boy at School, and at West Point, I was a pet because of the greatness of my father. I was given every opportunity to drink, and I did drink—some. As I got older and mixed with men, war-scarred veterans who fought with my father would come up and, for the sake of old times, ask me to celebrate with them the glory of past events, and I did—some.

"Then when I was made minister to Austria the customs of the country and my official position almost compelled me to drink, always. I tried to drink with extreme moderation, because I knew that alcohol is the worst poison a man could take into his system; but I found out it was an impossibility to drink moderately.

"I could not say, when drink was placed before me: 'No, I only drink in the morning,' or at certain hours. The fact that I indulged at all compelled me to drink on every occasion or be absurd.

"For that reason, because moderate drinking is a practical impossibility, I became an absolute teetotaler—a crank, if you please. I will not allow it even in my house. When a man can say, 'I never drink,' he never has to drink, is never urged to drink, never offends by not drinking; at least that is my experience.

"Give me the sober man, the absolute teetotaler every time. He's dependable. If I had the greatest appointive powers in the country, no man would get even the smallest appointment from me unless he showed proof of his absolute teetotalism.

"If I could, by offering my body a sacrifice, free this country from this fell cancer, drink, I'd thank the Almighty for the privilege of doing it."

SCIENCE IS AGAINST ALCOHOL

United States Government Publishes Some Valuable Papers Read by Sincere Temperance Workers.

Some valuable papers, read by Dr. F. D. Crothers and others at the semi-annual meeting of the American Society for the Study of Alcohol and Other Drug Narcotics held at Washington, have been published by the United States government in pamphlet form. Dr. Crothers, who is the superintendent of the Walmet Lodge hospital, Hartford, Conn., and an earnest worker for temperance, contributes a suggestive paper on "The Future of the Alcoholic Problem." There are enough facts in this booklet gathered by experts, damaging to the drink traffic to destroy it many times over. Here is one of them: "The Maoris of New Zealand, according to Captain Cook, were at the time when he first visited the island almost perfect in physique. Even the old men, he states, possessed the endurance of youth. They numbered then over 120,000. Alcohol and tobacco found their way to them as the island became inhabited by the white race. Men, women and children began to drink and smoke, in their innocence believing it a blessing. Today the Maoris are a race of physical and moral degenerates, numbering only 41,000." Thousands of tippling members of the white race are as truly, if not as visibly, degenerating.

Swallowing the Farm.

My homeless man with the chromatic nose, while you are stirring up the sugar in a 10-cent glass of gin let me give you a fact to wash down with it. You may say you have longed for years for the free, independent life of the farmer, but have never been able to get money enough together to buy a farm. But that is just where you are mistaken. For some years you have been drinking a good improved farm at the rate of 100 square feet a gulp. If you doubt this statement, figure it out yourself. An acre of land contains 43,560 square feet. Estimating, for convenience, the land at $43.56 an acre, you will see that it brings the land to just 1 mill per square foot. Now pour down the fiery dose and imagine you are swallowing a strawberry patch. Call in five of your friends and have them help you gulp down that 500-foot garden. Go on a prolonged spree some day and see how long it requires to swallow enough pasture land to feed a cow. Put down that glass of gin; there is dirt in it—100 feet of good, rich dirt, worth $43.56 per acre.—Robert J. Burdette.

Agree on Anti-Alcohol Plan.

Members of the anti-alcoholic congress held at The Hague signed a declaration in favor of the general adoption of Judge Pollard's plan for suspending court sentences in the case of drunkards who sign a total abstinence pledge. Judge Pollard was one of the speakers under the general subject, "The Judge and the Alcohol Patients," and his specific topic was "Alcoholism in the Light of the Study and Treatment of Inebriety by the States."

ALMOST CRAZY WITH ECZEMA

"I, the undersigned, cannot give enough praise to the Cuticura Remedies. I had been doctoring for at least a year for eczema on my foot. I had tried doctor after doctor all to no avail. When a young girl I sprained my ankle three different times, paying little or no attention to it, when five years ago a small spot showed upon my left ankle. I was worried and sent for a doctor. He said it was eczema. He drew a small bone from the ankle about the size of a match and about an inch long. The small hole grew to about the size of an apple, and the eczema spread to the knee. The doctors never could heal the hole in the ankle. The whole foot ran water all the time.

"My husband and my sons were up night and day wheeling me from one room to another in the hope of giving me some relief. I would sit for hours at a time in front of the fireplace hoping for daybreak. The pain was so intense I was almost crazy, in fact, I would lose my reason for hours at a time. One day a friend of mine dropped in to see me. No more had she glanced at my foot than she exclaimed: 'Mrs. Finnegan, why in the world don't you try the Cuticura Remedies!' Being disgusted with the doctors and their medicines, and not being able to sleep at all, I decided to give the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment a trial. After using them three days that night I slept as sound as a silver dollar for eight long hours. I awoke in the morning with but very little pain, in fact, I thought I was in heaven. After using the Cuticura Remedies for three months I was perfectly restored to health, thanks to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I will be sixty-four years of age my next birthday, hale and hearty at present." (Signed) Mrs. Julia Finnegan, 2234 Hebert St., St. Louis, Mo., Mar. 7, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 12 K, Boston.

An Unbeliever.

"Sir," said the haughty American to his adhesive tailor, "I object to this boorish dunning. I would have you know that my great-great-grandfather was one of the early settlers."

"And yet," sighed the anxious tradesman, "there are people who believe in heredity."—Argonaut.

When Friendship Counts.

The doors of the deformed man are always locked, and the key is on the outside. He may have treasures of charm inside, but they will never be revealed unless the person outside cooperates with him in unlocking the door. A friend becomes, to a much greater degree than with the ordinary man, the indispensable means of discovering one's own personality. One only exists, so to speak, with friends. It is easy to see how hopelessly such a sensitiveness incapacitates a man for business, professional or social life, where the hasty and superficial impression is everything, and disaster is the fate of the man who has not all the treasures of his personality in the front window where they can be readily inspected and appraised.—From the September Atlantic.

A Broken Bone.

Your first duty, after notifying a surgeon, is to provide support for the injured member in the form of an improvised splint. Flat pieces of board, as broad, if possible, as the limb and slightly longer than the broken bone, canes, umbrellas, in fact anything that will accomplish your end may be used. In adjusting these, pad with any soft material that is at hand; straw, leaves or cushions made of grass may be used. Avoid any pressure on the injured part, cover it with a cloth, and keep wet with clean, cold water.—Woman's Home Companion.

Too Late to Change.

"A man can no more change his reputation than he can change his face or his arms," said Senator La Follette at a banquet in Madison.

"There was once a wicked old Madison millionaire who took his pastor aside and said:

"'I am going to devote the remainder of my life to doing good.'

"Dr. Thirdly, outspoken man, retorted:

"'Do you mean John H. Good, the wealthy farmer ,or young Sam Good, the Socialist millionaire?'"

She then gave lectures and has for 20 years been lecturer on the history of civilization at the Popular University of Stockholm.

SHIFT
If Your Food Fails to Sustain You Change.

One sort of diet may make a person despondent, depressed and blue and a change to the kind of food the body demands will change the whole thing

A young woman from Phila. says:

"For several years I kept in a run down, miserable sort of condition, was depressed and apprehensive of trouble. I lost flesh in a distressing way and seemed in a perpetual sort of dreamy nightmare. No one serious disease showed, but the 'all-over' sickness was enough.

"Finally, between the doctor and father, I was put on Grape-Nuts and cream, as it was decided I must have a nourishing food that the body could make use of.

"The wonderful change that came over me was not, like Jonah's gourd, the growth of a single night, yet it came with a rapidity that astonished me.

"During the first week I gained in weight, my spirits improved, and the world began to look brighter and more worth while.

"And this has continued steadily, till now, after the use of Grape-Nuts for only a few weeks, I am perfectly well, feel splendidly, take a lively interest in everything, and am a changed person in every way." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Lofty Plumage

In spite of the efforts of the Audubon society on this side of the Atlantic, and kindred organizations on the other, there is a very decided return to plumage decorations in the latest swell autumn millinery. And when fickle fashion calls, sense and sentiment have to give way, as is shown in this instance.

In the picture above is seen one of these latest hats. The feathers are those of the ordinary rooster, shaped and trimmed to a height that is in direct contrast to the broad, low confection of last year. There is apparently no limit to the lofty altitudes to which these hats may reach. The body of the hat is of bronze-brown velvet, with an upturned brim that rises front and rear.

NEW TRICK IN MILLINERY

Long Strings of Black Velvet Are Seen on Little Bonnets This Season.

"Straws show which way the wind blows." So, also, do the little bonnets of tulle, coquettishly set upon the waved and puffed coiffure and engarlanded with myosotis, and the large tagals lined with felt, that have quite taken the place of almost all other forms of headgear during the last few weeks.

Every one of them have long strings of black velvet which are tied at the side and at the back and have thin long ends floating, or caught with a jeweled pin high over the bust and on the left side.

The "sleeve" string is simply a very long loop of broad velvet ribbon, through which the arm is slipped. It hangs loosely on the left side under the arm.

This new trick in millinery is causing not a little comment regarding its probable popularity, but withal seems to be finding favor in the eyes of the truly great dictators of styles.

A SPORT'S COAT

This useful coat might well be made in tweed or rough serge. It has the upper part set to the basque under the waist-band, which is of material cut the reverse way, as also are the cuffs and collar.

The cap is of the same material as coat.

Materials required: 2 yards 48 inches wide.

Angora Wool.

Angora wool, ever so beautiful, soft and fleecy, is made up in many attractive forms. A dull green sweater coat is $22, but it is the loveliest thing of its kind. Unlike all the awkward things that are accustomed to being crowded under coats and make the wearer entirely miserable, this one is soft and pliable, clinging to the figure in nice lines. It has pockets and belt and is finished down the front with small smoked pearl buttons. There are scarves, too, of this fleecy Angora yarn, long and soft and loosely woven, though warm as toast. They come either in pure white or with a purple striped border.

TIMELY TIP ON LINGERIE

Among Prettiest Corset Covers Are Those That Fit Into Peplum at Waist.

The busy "bachelor maid," who has no one to look after the little details of her wardrobe, but must attend to them in the bits and edges of time after business hours when she would be glad to stretch out and relax in place of fussing with tapes and ribbons, continues to buy or make her corset covers and "combinations" with beadings or casings at waist and neck edges, in which ribbons must be run if they are to be worn with any comfort.

Yet among the prettiest corset covers of the present day are those that fit into a peplum at the waist line, a narrow insertion or tiny band of folded lawn covering the join and rendering a "draw tape" superfluous, and those that have the fullness at the upper edge gathered daintily, to fit once and for all, under a similar finishing band to which the lace or embroidery around the neck is joined.

Reference is not made to the close fitting corset cover, which reminds one of a fitted lining. These peplum corset covers have a slight fullness at the waist line, gathered into the band, and almost as much at the upper edges, before finishing, as if the beading were to be used, with baby ribbon to draw it close. And they yield nothing to the other style, either in prettiness of appearance or perfection of finish. Moreover, they quite eliminate all unnecessary "bunching" at the waist line, which advantage, considering the present styles, is recommending them more and more to "those who know."

A Good Hint.

In an emergency, where one has to evolve a "fancy" costume with little time and apparently less material, something very lovely can be made of several of the beautiful evening scarfs, either the spangled ones or plain ones. Nearly every woman will possess a scarf of one kind or another and these can be borrowed, as no damage need be done to them. Over a white dress hang two or more of the silver spangled ones, so that they fall from the shoulders down as far as possible on either side. Then wind others about the hips and around the head, crossing a piece over the forehead and another over the chin and lower part of the face. The eastern effect is graceful and usually very becoming.

White Felt Hats.

Although every one may not accept the fashion for white felt hats in hot weather, it is probable that they will be the first choice as soon as the cool weather comes back. They will make admirable early fall hats, simply trimmed, with a bow of black velvet or taffeta ribbon.

One should not attempt to put anything ornate on them, although it is probable we shall see them trimmed in morning glories, in cherries, in plums, and in small red apples.

The Resourceful Girl.

She is a perfect treasure, and far more necessary for the comfort of a home than a patent carpet sweeper or even a telephone. Her suggestions in an emergency are always sensible and to the point; she does not waste time in moaning and groaning over what can't be helped, and makes the best of whatever material comes to hand.

The KITCHEN CABINET

SOME people are always grumbling because roses have thorns. Let us be thankful that thorns have roses.

We need never bear more than one kind of trouble at a time. Some people bear three kinds—all they have had, all they have now, and all they expect to have.

Well, he was a brave man who first did eat an oyster.

THE OYSTER SEASON.

Spindled Oysters.—Drain a quart of oysters from their liquor and handle each one, to be sure there are no bits of shell to cause discomfort; then dry between the folds of a towel. Cut pieces of bacon half the size of the oysters and arrange the oysters and bacon in alternate layers on wooden skewers, being careful to pierce the hard muscle of the oyster. Place in a hot pan and bake until the bacon is done. Serve a skewer on a slice of toast to each person. The oyster liquor may be heated and poured over the toast just before serving.

Supreme Oysters.—Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter and fry until a yellow color, two tablespoons of minced onion; add four tablespoonfuls of flour and when well blended a half cup each of cream, chicken stock and oyster liquor. Season with salt, cayenne and nutmeg. Cook five minutes, then add half a cup of finely cut chicken, the yolks of three eggs well beaten; when thick, cool. Parboil a pint of oysters dry and cover each with the chicken mixture, dip in egg and crumbs and fry in hot fat. Serve on a hot dish, garnish with lemon and parsley.

Oyster Soup Amsterdam Style.—Clean, pick over and chop one quart of oysters, parboil, drain and add to the liquor enough water to make a quart. Brown three tablespoonfuls of butter and add three and a half tablespoonfuls of flour. Pour on gradually, stirring constantly the oyster liquor. Let simmer a half hour. Season with salt, paprika, celery salt, and just before serving add a cup of cream.

Oysters are valuable in the diet, as they add to the flavors and variety and are easily digested. As to nutriment, there is not much in a pint of oysters.

The juicy smell, the spice and taste,
You must be patient till the fiery core is cool,

PIES GALORE.

The time draws near when the mince meat for the time-honored day o Thanksgiving must be prepared. In each family the cherished recipe is carefully read and materials gathered, and, strange to say, there is no mince meat which tastes quite like that "that mother used to make." Here are a few which are handed down, and those who have no cherished one, may perhaps find one which sounds good:

Mix all the following ingredients together and cook slowly two hours: Three pounds of lean beef cooked and finely chopped; two pounds of suet chopped, three quarts of good, tart apples finely chopped; three pounds of raisins, seeded; two pounds of currants three pounds of citron cut in pieces, half a cup each of candied lemon and orange peel chopped, a half cup of lemon juice, the same of orange juice, two tablespoonfuls of salt four cups of brown sugar, one cup of coffee (liquid), two cups of sweet cider, a teaspoonful each of cloves and allspice, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon and a cup of jelly and three cups of the liquor in which the meat was cooked.

Mince Pie Meat.—Cook together four pounds of lean beef and two pounds of suet cooked; chop and take twice the amount of chopped baldwin apples. Add three chopped quinces, three pounds of brown sugar, two cups of molasses, two quarts of cider, four pounds of raisins, three pounds of currants, half a pound of citron finely cut, a quart of stock in which the meat was cooked, a tablespoonful each of cinnamon, mace and cloves, two grated nutmegs and salt to taste. Cook all together two hours, except the cider, which is added at the last.

Mock Mince Pie.—Roll four milk crackers, add one and a half cups of sugar, a cup of molasses, a third of a cup of lemon juice, one cup of raisins, half a cup of butter and two well-beaten eggs; salt to taste. Bake with two crusts. This makes two pies.

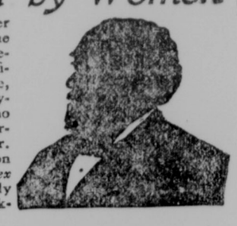
Mildly Censuring Him.

"My goodness!" she says, with a pretty scowl, "I think a girl would feel dreadfully foolish if she proposed to a man."



"I should think so, too," replies the diffident youth.

"But then I suppose there are some girls who are just simply compelled to do the proposing," she sighs.

After an hour's consideration of that remark he realizes what she really means.—Woman's World.

If You Have a Sickly Youngster Try This Free

The family with young children that is without sickness in the house now and then is rare, and so it is important that the head of the house should know what to do in the little emergencies that arise. A child with a serious ailment needs a doctor, it is true, but in the majority of instances, as any doctor knows, the child suffers from some intestinal trouble, usually constipation.

There is no sense in giving it a pill or a remedy containing an opiate, nor is flushing of the bowels to be always recommended. Rather give it a small dose of a mild, gentle laxative, tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which, by clearing out the bowels and strengthening the little stomach muscles, will immediately correct the trouble.

This is not alone our opinion but that of Mrs. N. H. Mead of Freeport, Kans., whose granddaughter has been taking it successfully and of Mrs. J. R. Whiting of Lena, Wis., who gives it to her children and takes it herself. It is sold in fifty cent and one dollar bottles at every drug store, but if you want to test it in your family before you buy it send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will forward a supply free of charge.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1911.

WHEREIN MARYLAND IS NOT UNLIKE MISSOURI.

Continued talk of an extra session of the Legislature will be taken to mean that there is a tentative purpose to hold one.

An extra session manifestly should be held only when, in the meaning of the Constitution, an extraordinary occasion is presented. A change in the head of the State from a Democrat to a Republican certainly cannot be regarded as such an occasion.

Governor Crothers has been in office four years. His party has been in complete control of the State government and both branches of the Legislature for 12 years.

The calling of a special session now to put into effect reforms which his party had the power to carry out for so long a time would be a remarkhble confession of neglect of sworn public duty. The whole State would want to know why, if these things are so imperative, they have not been done before.

Nevertheless, a fair-minded public should wait until more light is shed on the reasons for the proposed call. If it can be shown that conditions justify the move, the peculiar and suspicious circumstances in which it is made should not condemn it.

But for the time being the people of Maryland are from Missouri and want to be "shown."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Republicans everywhere are jubilant over the returns from the elections of Movember 7th. The victories in New York and New Jersey were most significant and if maintained, point to a gain of two Republican United State Senators. Maryland elected a Republican [illegible] for the first time in many years, but Rhode Island, where the tariff was the whole issue, went decisive Republican. The majority of Governor Foss in Massachusetts was cut down from 35,000 to 7,000 but all the rest of the Republican ticket was elected and Massachusetts will be in the Republican column next year, as will all other New England States with New York and New Jersey.

The Congressional elections resulted very favorably from a Republican standpoint. In the first New Jersey District where H. C. Loudenslager received only 840 plurality last year, W. J. Browning received 3,000 this year. A Republican was elected to succeed a Democrat in the fourteenth Pennsylvania District. In the second Kansas District a Democrat was elected to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Mitchell, due to a factional fight, but the district will elect a Republican next year—and the indications are that the Republicans will have a good substantial majority in the next House of Representatives.

President Taft and his friends consider his trip a great success from every standpoint. It brought him close to the people and showed them what an earnest, honest, candid President they have. Mr. Taft explained his views of public questions and his arguments were unanswerable. Especially clear did he make his reasons for vetoing the Democratic tariff bills of the extra session. He showed that the enactment and operation of those bills would have brought destruction to our industries and inadequate revenue to the Treasury. The bills were simply a hodgepodge of hasty framing—and were devised with no idea of justice or right.

Much has been said of Mr. Taft's jocular allusion next year. It was a semi-facetious remark and nothing more. Mr. Taft is a very generous, whole-hearted man. He is not a politician who goes about claiming everything. He is the most modest President we ever had. But he is none the less confident that he will be reelected and with him a Republican House of Representatives. He believes in and relies on the common sense of the people.

The President's trip was beneficial not only to himself but to the people. It brought him into close touch with the masses and he found out what they wanted and these wants will be reflected in his message to Congress upon which he is now at work. It will perhaps be the most important message of his first term. He will probably not allude to the tariff, making that the subject of a special message afterwards. But he will advise legislation that will help business and carry greater benefits to the people. As the message will be before the people in a few days it is useless to discuss it at this time.

No previous Administration can show such advanced and progressive results as the work accomplished by President Taft and his Cabinet officers. Of course as we increase in population, wealth and power there is more work to do and greater responsibilities to meet, but the present Administration has not only been equal to the task but has taken up new plans and put them into execution with most satisfactory results.

In all this work the President and his Cabinet have moved from a non-partisan standpoint. The trust prosecutions; The Tariff Board; The Conservation Measures; The economy and efficiency plans, by which millions have already been saved; The Postal inquiries; The Monetary Investigation, and various Commissions have all been inaugurated by the President for the ultimate benefit of the whole people, and it may be added that all of the appointments of President Taft have been nonpolitical, selecting and appointing in every case the man best equipped for the position.

The people can safely trust such a President and it is no wonder that his renomination and reelection is already conceded. A President cannot do all he would wish in a single term and it is a cause for universal satisfaction that President Taft is willing to carry on the work so well begun by him and his associates in the Administration.

Miss Daisy Grant favored us by playing several beautiful selections on our two pianos on Thursday morning. Our principal sang "The Holy City" the same morning, the school enjoying it very much.

On tomorrow (Friday) night, the High School will present an exceptionally fine program, consisting of readings, solos, both vocal and instrumental, quartets, choruses, etc. Any one of these features is worth the small admission price, and the principal confidently expects a full house. TO FORM A FARMER'S ASSOCIATION

Meeting Will Be Held in Lonaconing Tomorrow For This Purpose.

The following circular letter, self-explanatory, has been issued by a committee of Lonaconing residents and is given publicity through these columns as a matter of interest to Garrett county farmers:

"The recent Farmers' Festival held at Lonaconing has demonstrated that to properly further the agricultural and horticultural interests of Garrett and Allegany counties, an organization should be formed by those interested—the farmers and gardeners and other citizens who are desirous of advancing the welfare of the tillers of the soil.

"It has been proven beyond all doubt or conjecture that these two counties have all the advantages of the most favored sections of the country for the production of fruits, grain and vegetables. What is ruquired is more education along advanced lines. The old methods will not avail in this day.

"To do this we should unite for mutual benefit.

"In order to effect such an organization, a meeting will be held at Lonaconing on Friday, November 24, 1911, in Firemen's Hall, at 1 o'clock p. m.

"You and your neighbor are urgently requested to attend.

The sudden death of N. S. Clary, last Friday, at the home of his brother-in-law, Mr. Lester Yutzy, in Loch Lynn, cast a gloom over this entire community where he had spent most of his life. The cause of his death was an attack of pneumonia only a few days before. The body was taken to the home of his parents in Deer Park Saturday evening, and the interment was in the Deer Park cemetery Sunday after services in the M. E church conducted by Rev. C. W. Hudson. Much sympathy is felt for his young wife (nee Alma Crane) who only recently followed two of her little children to the grave. Two children remain with the mother. Deceased was about thirty-eight years of age, and leaves besides his wife and two small children, a father, mother and a number of brothers and sisters.

Don't forget the Union Thanksgiving service at the M. E. church at 11.00 a. m., Thursday, Nov. 30th. Rev. Bauman, of the U. B. Church, will preach.

Mr. Harman, who recently purchased the Gordon farm, adjoining the Park on the East, is repairing the house and installing natural gas. Mr. H. expects his wife soon when they hope to be visited by their new neighbors.

Don't be in too big a hurry to buy your fresh pork. There's a large crop of hogs in the country and corn is too high to feed them through the winter. We confidently look for the price of fresh pork to go as low as seven cents before next April.

The special services at the Baptist church are still in progress and may continue throughout next week.

There is a strong probability that the next annual conference of the M. E. church will be held at Mt. Lake Park.

Lumber is on the ground for a new bridge over Little Yough river at Pilgrim's Rest.

A well-known woman explains that one reason for long hatpins is that the stores won't sell any other kind The probability is that this indictment of our merchants puts the cart before the horse. They aim to please. Perhaps the lack of demand for any but long pins has something to do with the matter.

The winter schedule on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad will go into effect Sunday, the 26th inst., when the time of nearly every train on this division division of the road will be changed. The changes, however will be but three or four minutes. Trains No. 5 and No. 6, running on Sundays, will be abadoned for the winter months.

A Missouri young lady is suing a man to recover $2857.15 each for seven kisses. The defense is that she has already been paid for them at a flat rate of 50 cents each. The St. Paul Dispatch is seriously perturbed over the discrepancy between the two valuations and wonders whether a masculine jury and a Far West feminine jury could possibly arrive at the same conclusion as to the worth of an osculation. Certainly they could not. But one mixed jury could.

Messrs. U. M. Stanton and Elijah Livengood, the former of Grantsville, and the latter, known throughout the country as the "Maple Sugar King," of Elk Lick, Pa., came up to Oakland last Friday in Mr. L. H. Deifenbaugh's auto to transact some business with the County Commissioners. Notwithstanding the horrible condition of the roads between Oakland and Grantsville the run was made here in a little less than two and a-half hours. The party returned to Grantsville the same afternoon.

The Thanksgiving turkey promises to be even cheaper in price this year than the average beefsteak, the latter selling in our local markets at eighteen to twenty cents per pound. Turkeys will likely be lower than twenty cents, the top prices being paid for the birds in the city markets today is but twenty-one cents and they have to be prime to bring this price. The farmers of Garrett county raised a large number of the fowls this year and they are in excellent condition, made possible by the large crop of chestnuts and other mass.

New Roads in Deer Park.

The scarcity of vacant houses in Deer Park is attracting attention, and some attribute it to the road improvements now going on under the direction of Mayor William W. Hennen, and the members of the Town Council. Improvements in a town, such as the systematic road building on the streets and roads adjacent, always have a tendendy to attract people desiring a residence, and it is though that in the coming spring, there will be an impetus in building operations. Mr. Charles A. Ashby's new home in Deer Park, is an example. It is an attractive dwelling, up to date in every particular, and its owner is interested, naturally, in the town improvements.

Every fair day is availed of by Mr. Hennen and his force of workers, and before winter sets in there will be ample evidence, as indeed there is today, of the serviceable work performed.

SUIT FOR $10.000 DAMAGES.

Suit Entered By Mrs. Louis Bush Against the City Council.

Yesterday papers were served upon the Mayor and members of the City Council of Oakland making them defandants in a suit for $10,000 damages brought in the Circuit Court by Mrs. Lewis Bush of Oakland.

The suit is based upon an injury sustained by Mrs. Bush early last winter when the lady passing along in front of the Montgomery Coddington property trod upon a broken platform board and fell, breaking her ankle and sustaining other painful injuries. As a result of the accident Mrs. Bush has been more or less of an invalid ever since.

Messrs. Renninger & Offutt appear as counsel for Mrs. Bush. The municipality will be represented by Mr. George W. Legge, city attorney.

INJURY WILL BE PERMANENT

James Boyle, Hurt at Foot Ball Will Be Deaf for Life.

This morning Mr. Michael Boyle, of Oakland, was in receipt of a letter advising him that the injury sustained by his son James, aged eighteen, who was injured about two weeks ago in a foot ball game at Mt. St. Joseph's College, near Baltimore, and who has been a patient in St. Agnes' Hospital for a week, would be permanent, there being no possibility of the young man regaining his hearing.

James Boyle is the youngest son of Mr. Michael Boyle and has been a student at Mt. St. Joseph's College for two years past. Last year a ban was placed upon foot ball by the school authorities, participation in the game by the students being prohibited. Upon the day the young man was injured a crowd went to a distant field and were engaged in the game when young Boyle was struck in the head by a fellow-student. For a week he kept to his bed in the school and later was sent to St. Agnes' Hospital for treatment, where he has been a patient for a week or more. An examination by the surgeons has revealed the fact that both ear drums were ruptured and that he will be permanently deaf. Young Boyle is quite a favorite with the Oakland people and his affliction is sincerely regretted by all.

WHAT IS RIGHT?

By Rev. Stephen Paulson

TEXT—Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.—Philippians, IV, 8.

There are today more people than ever before asking the question, "What is right?" They have been led to ask this question by an arousal of conscience from lethargy that at one time seemed to be as binding as prison chains. In this reawakening the church has played a most important part, but its appeals have been seconded by moralists and even by statesmen. Today the question, "What is right?" is asked not only in personal morals, but in the larger affairs of life, and to the extent that there is greater effort for higher standards of morality and of religious practices.

The question is an old one. It has been asked by man since first he knew there was right which might be distinguished from wrong. It has been discussed in all its phases, and St. Paul in his letter to the Philippians exhorts them in the words of our text. He tells them that right is "what is true, what is honest, what is just, what is pure and lovely and of good report." His exhortation is as pertinent today as then, and his definition as complete. Let us first consider men, not things.

A great many men are true so far as their standards permit them to be. There are others who seek constant elevation of standards so that they may be nearer the ideal true man. To be a true man means to be truthful in thought, in speech, in act, to be devoid of dissimilation, to be right and to be just what you seem to be; to be loyal to all that is good and devoted to the furtherance of good. Such a man invariably answers the question "What is right?" correctly, and his answer has the respect of his fellow men.

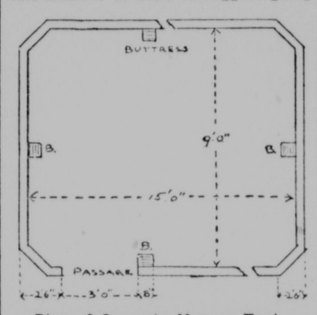
A great many men are honest so far as the demands of relationship with other men may go, and few go beyond this point and are honest with themselves as well as with their fellows. In their transactions they have no doubts, no regrets, no sufferings of conscience. They make every transaction a closed transaction in every sense of the word. They are right. Such men are the examples of honesty that should be emulated.

Men are just in the measure that they mete to their fellow men; and some of them are just to the extent that they heap the measure to overflowing. They neither weigh to the ounce, nor exact their pound of flesh as old Shylock did. If anything, they are just to the point of generosity and have the satisfaction of knowing that they have given full value or full credit to all with whom they come in contact.

Most men are pure to the extent that they have no faults or vices that stamp them as immoral. There are others whose thoughts even are pure and to whom impurity is absolutely obnoxious. They think good, and as the thought is the father of the act, they act well. These are the men at whom the finger of suspicion never points, but are always held as models after which we should pattern.

Men who are truly honest, just and pure, men whose thoughts are always upward, are men of good report. They have unassailable reputations supported by unimpeachable characters. They ask the question, "What is right?" from the innermost recesses of their souls, and answer it with all the enlightenment of conscience and spiritual guidance that God can give them. They are always men of good report and always will be so long as they possess the virtues that the apostle has enumerated.

I know that the apostle tells the brethren to "think of things that are true, honest, pure, lovely and of good report." It is by thinking of these things that men become honest, true and just. The apostle asks them not only to think but to reason, for he says that "if there is any virtue in these things, if there be any praise" thinking of them will bring them into their lives and cause them to be grateful for the good they receive. Men who think honestly, men who try to be conscientious gain for themselves all the good that can be derived from right thought and pure thinking. And that good is ability to think straight, and answer correctly the question, "What is right?"



Of course there is no absolute right. Men do not think alike. They have not the same standards, nor the same conceptions, and yet they have one standard of right and their conception of that standard will always grow better and better the more they study it. That standard was set by Christ. Paul studied it, and his wonderful growth in spirituality enabled him to tell the Philippians what they should think about, for he knew that the man who was true, honest, just and pure, the man who regarded things that were elevating and of good report, would become the man who would be able sooner or later to answer more exactly the question, "What is right?"

You can follow Paul's prescription, especially if you ask for that guidance which has been promised you by that greatest exemplar of right.

CONSTRUCTION OF CONCRETE TANK FOR STORING MANURE

Detailed Instructions Given for Making Suitable Receptacle on Farm Where Six Horses are Kept—Most Satisfactory Bottom is Clay—Tank and Section of Wall Shown.

We give a plan of concrete manure tank, and also a section through one of the retaining walls, writes George F. Weston in the Country Gentleman, in response to a query. This is designed to take care of the manure from six horses on a farm. Since nothing is said about any neighboring residence or dairy, we have not considered it advisable for so small a surplus as is likely to accumulate from this number of head to suggest going to the expense of roofing over or screening from flies. The proportions or area are to be modified to meet the special demands of the farm.

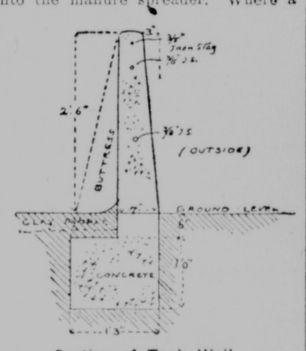
It is expected that the usual custom will be followed of hauling direct to the field, and that the tank is used simply for storage during bad weather or press of other work. Allowing that the manure is removed from the stalls in a wheelbarrow, a three-foot entrance for same is shown, which should be located at the most convenient corner.



The longest diameter should be in the same direction or parallel with the most convenient road for the teams to travel, and each corner should be protected from the wheels by sinking a conveniently shaped stone in the ground at points of probable contact.

As economy is insisted on, diagonal corners are shown, but the general appearance of the tank will be improved by rounded corners, at an increased labor cost for making the forms. If the horse stalls have drainage for urine, this can profitably be conducted to a small concrete cistern built just inside the wall of tank, entirely below grade, and covered with slotted plank, so as to also drain from manure. The contents can then be pumped over the manure, should it appear to be heating unduly. With this we should advise a shed over tank, on six by six-inch concrete supports, re-enforced with a three-eighths-inch iron rod in each corner, and inserting half-inch bolt and washer in each for tying down rafter plate.

The sides are re-enforced concrete, cheap foundation for which can be made by breaking field rock in the trenches for the first four-inch layer, grouting same with a cement grouting, then continuing to fill in the layers with roughly-broken rock, and grouting solid. Each layer should be settled lightly. The walls should be made from a fairly rich mixture, say one part cement, two sand, and four of screened gravel.

The most satisfactory bottom for this tank will be a layer of clay, thoroughly puddled, and about four inches thick. The seepage will not be material, and there is quite a saving in first cost. If of concrete, there is danger of the bottom heaving during winter, unless it is kept covered with manure. Anyway, it will be well to try the clay, as the concrete bottom can be added at any time.

The labor of handling the manure on a place where many animals are kept is a much heavier and more costly job than many would believe who have not kept an account, and it should be lightened in every way possible. One method is to use a manure carrier, and unload direct from this into the manure spreader. Where a hillside site can be secured for the storage pit or tank, a "gravity" system of loading may be put in by scraping out a road on the lower side, that will allow the top of the bed of the spreader to be a little below the level of the bottom of tank.

BACTERIA ON ROOTS OF CORN

Supply Sufficient Nitrogen to Serve Abundantly Their Purposes When Soil Is Exhausted.

(By WALTER B. LEUTZ.)

How the clover acted as a fertilizer was not known until about fifteen years ago. Since that time our knowledge upon the subject has very considerably increased and every year now something more is learned.

Leguminous and pod-bearing plants unaided have no more ability to help themselves to the nitrogen of the air under any circumstances than have other green plants.

Certainly bacteria existing in the soil penetrates the soft tissues of young roots of legumes and mutiply within these lively tissues so as to form a little mass of gelatinous substance. Responding to the irritation produced the plant builds a nodular structure about the bacterial invaders, not unlike the formation of a gall consequent upon the sting of an insect.

Numerous nodules may be formed on the roots of one plant and they have characteristics peculiar to the species of plant on which they occur.

In some way not well understood these plants with nodules or tubercles are capable of getting sufficient nitrogen from the air to serve abundantly their purposes when the soil has no supplies, and when other plants must die from the want of it.

Either the bacteria are the direct agents in the process or they aid the plant itself to do what, without such aid, it cannot do. May there legumes organisms or some of them be made to form tubercles or other plants for instant maize? Here is a matter of the greatest moment. Undoubtedly they have some times in the past become adapted to leguminous vegetation. There is nothing to prevent corn from gathering tubercles.

We know now that corn can be very decidedly modified in its chemical composition by processes of breeding. Types of grain can be produced in which for instance the nitrogen percentage is greatly increased and so a long way improved as food for man and beast.

If, in addition to this, Indian corn can be made to furnish itself, through accommodating bacteria, with this higher nitrogen content directly from the exhaustless storehouses of the air, the agricultural miracle of the age will have been wrought.

No one can predict whether or not this will ever come to pass, but from what is now known, the endeavor to bring it to come to pass seems at least worth while.

CARING FOR MOLTING HENS

Require Large Amount of Feed Containing Nitrogen, Such as Oil Meal and Protein Feeds.

(By J. BAILEY BRUCE.)

Most people believe that if they can force their hens to molt early they will lay more eggs during the season, but this is not true. Hens that have molted late will lay more eggs during the winter than the early molters.

This has been shown by the most careful experiments, but the facts are not generally known.

Molting hens require a large amount of feed containing nitrogen such as oil meal, meat and other feeds rich in protein. Molting can be forced by cutting down the feed of hens as it has been shown by experiments that scantily fed hens begin molting earlier than those on full feed, but the former do not finish molting much earlier.

Starved hens molt more uniformly than others and this is particularly noticeable in hens two or three years old.

In an experiment conducted by the Cornell experiment station it was found that on a basis of 100 hens the fed flock produced eggs to the value of $29.27 more than by the starved flock.

The total income from all the birds was $278 for the starved flock and $350 for the fed flock, a difference in favor of natural molting for the year of about $95.

A western poultryman of long experience gives his method of controlling molting as follows:

As soon as the hens are through laying he turns them out in alfalfa, feeding them dry bran only, in addition. Under this treatment they get thin. Then he feeds them a mixed ration of grains and meat, giving a light feed in the morning and all they will eat at noon and night. Under this treatment they finish molting quickly, get new feathers and begin laying in September. By October 1 they are all in good laying condition and make a profit through the fall and winter.

Only Peppermint Raiser.

The only successful peppermint raiser in the United States is said to be Miss Mary Clark of Berrien, Mich. She has twenty-eight acres of the herb and runs her own distillery, which produces from three to four hundred pounds of oil every year.

Produce Fine Meat.

With alfalfa pasture, corn is the only thing needed to produce the finest of beef and pork.

SKIN AFFECTIONS ARE OFTEN CONTAGIOUS

How to Prevent Them.

The skin and its millions of pores are open to every form of contagion, from the accidental cut, sore, scald or burn, or the appearance of boils, carbuncles or felons, to the more serious diseases of the skin. It is not necessary to more than suggest that every family and every one, carry, ready for immediate use, the world's great standard skin remedy—Resinol Ointment. This ointment, indorsed and recommended by thousands of physicians, nurses and experts, remains the standard of standards. It is scientifically compounded from natural ingredients, each one, and all together, particularly adapted to the skin. It is put up in screw-top opal containers, selling for fifty cents and a dollar, according to size. Resinol Ointment is as easy to apply as cold cream. It is utterly impossible for it to harm the most delicate skin, for it contains only the highest grade of remedial agents, without even a trace of mercury or lead, or any other poison. The ointment is sold by all druggists. Sample sent free if you will mention Department No. 51. Resinol Chemical Co., Baltimore, Md.

A FRONTIER HERO

Reminiscences of "Wild Bill" Hickok by his old Friend Buffalo Bill

BY WALTER NOBLE BURNS.

W. F. CODY (BUFFALO BILL)

"WILD BILL" HICKOK

(Copyright, 1911, by W. G. Chapman.)

"WILD BILL was the greatest gun fighter the west ever knew. I don't know how many men he killed, but it was more than thirty. That number is exclusive of the men he killed in the Civil war. He is credited as a sharpshooter with having killed 35 men, including the Confederate General McCullough, in the battle of Pea Ridge alone. I don't know how true that is. It is impossible for anyone to tell how many men he kills in a battle when thousands of men are firing. But he killed more than thirty in personal encounters. He killed ten in one fight single handed. That was when he wiped out the McCandlass gang at Rock Springs, Kan., in 1861, and it was the most heroic single-handed fight in all the history of the frontier. Imagination has not colored or enlarged his record. It is a sure-enough record of men killed in fair, stand-up fights. If one cares to search, one can find their graves with their names neatly carved on little headstones scattered from the Missouri river to the foothills of the Rockies."

Col. William F. Cody, better known all over the world as Buffalo Bill, was in reminiscent mood. He paid this tribute to the prowess of his dead comrade of early days on the plains. He was intimately associated with Wild Bill. He fought by his side in the Civil war, he scouted with him in the Indian campaigns, he shared the same blanket beside many a lonely camp fire. For years there was a bed and a chair and the table for Wild Bill at the ranch of Buffalo Bill's mother near Fort Leavenworth, and to the very end of his stormy and wandering career Wild Bill thought of this spot as home.

Buffalo Bill is himself one of the most picturesque characters of the old west left to these piping, prosaic times. Though the public knows him chiefly as a showman, he is the last of the great scouts. His life has not been all blank cartridges and calcium lights. Back of his spectacular career as an exponent of wild west drama is a frontier life of daring, hardship and danger. He is an old man now, only a few years on the sunny side of three score and ten. His sweeping mustaches and imperial and his long hair that falls upon his shoulders in the waving abundance of early years are as white as snow. But his tall figure is still stalwart and as straight as a young pine on the mountains, his step is elastic and his eye bright, and he still wears his white sombrero tilted at a jaunty angle on the side of his head as in the brave days of his youth.

"I was eleven years old when I first met Wild Bill in 1857," said Buffalo Bill. "I was making my first expedition across the plains. It was the expedition led by General Albert Sydney Johnston, afterwards killed at Shiloh, against Brigham Young and the Mormons in Utah. I was connected with the supply train as the driver of the extra cattle. A big bully in my mess seemed to think I was meant to be his servant and ordered me around at every opportunity. I grew sulky and resentful under his badgering, but I was a mere kid and was helpless. One evening as we were eating supper he ordered me to get him another cup of coffee. 'Get your own coffee,' I said. He reached over from where he sat and slapped me over. I rolled into the ashes at the edge of the camp fire and narrowly escaped getting badly burned. I ran to the big coffee kettle, caught it up, and stepping up behind the bully, doused the scalding coffee over him from head to foot. He roared with pain. Then he rushed for me. A young man stepped between us. I knew him casually as Jim Hickok. The men of the wagon train called him 'Jimmy.'

"'Say,' he said, facing the bully squarely, 'you leave that kid alone.'

"My unexpected champion was about twenty years old, tall, slender, bronzed and athletic looking. The powerful brute he confronted would have made two of him. The bully stopped in surprise. He sized up the stripling with a glance. The inventory doubtless convinced him he had nothing to fear.

"'What have you got to do with this?' he bellowed and he charged at the youth like a mad bull.

"The men of the outfit expected to see Hickok beaten to a jelly or killed. He gave us the surprise of our lives. He proved to be the quickest man I ever saw. A catamount could not have been quicker. He stepped into the bully fearlessly. He was all over his man. He rocked his head with terrific blows. He ripped punches into his midsection. He closed his eyes, bloodied his lips, knocked the teeth down his throat. He ended by dropping the bully to his knees and making him blubber out, 'I've got enough' and beg for mercy. After the fight my ancient enemy was the worst battered up man I ever saw. Hickok didn't show a mark. He walked away and sat down on a wagon tongue and smoked a pipe serenely. That was my introduction to the man afterward known all over the west as Wild Bill, and from that day we were fast friends.

"I enlisted in the Union army in 1863 and was sent to Tennessee. I was employed as a scout and spy. I was peculiarly fitted to play the part of spy in Confederate camps. Most of the people with whom I had been thrown all my life on the plains were from Missouri, Kentucky or Tennessee. It was second nature for me to talk in the drawling lingo of the south.

"On one of my excursions as a spy I was disguised as a Tennessee farmer boy with a ragged hat, a homespun shirt and pants of butternut jeans. I was riding along a road when I came to a farm house. Hitched to the palings of the fence was a fine horse, saddled. Through a window I saw a man in the uniform of a Confederate officer sitting at a table eating. Something about his face looked familiar. I dismounted and stepped to the door of the house and asked for a drink of water. As I was drinking I took a good look at the man. It was Wild Bill. He shot a quick glance at me. But I had grown since he last saw me and in my disguise he did not recognize me. I waited till he had finished his meal and followed him to the road. As he prepared to mount his horse I stepped close and said in a low tone, 'Bill, don't you remember me?' I thought I saw a gleam of recognition in his eyes, but he said simply, 'No, I don't.' 'I'm Billy Cody,' I said. 'Well, well,' returned Wild Bill, 'are you little Billy Cody?'

"Then he gave me a dressing down. 'You haven't any business in this part of the country,' he said. 'You ought to be in the Union army.' 'How do you know I'm not?' I asked. 'You in the Union army?' he said. 'Maybe I am,' I answered. 'What are you doing in those clothes, then?' he asked. 'I suspect I'm doing the same as you,' I replied. Bill smiled. 'Get on your horse,' he said. And we rode together back into the Union lines. For the remainder of the war we did much scouting together in Missouri and the southwest.

"When I joined General Sheridan as chief of scouts in the campaign against the Indians of the northwest in 1868 I found Wild Bill with the command. I went to General Sheridan and 'General,' I said, 'Wild Bill is the best scout, the best shot and the bravest man in the western country. He is seven or eight years older than I and I have always looked upon him as my superior in everything that goes to the making of a plainsman. I don't like to give orders to such a man. I would rather serve under him. Make him chief of scouts.'

"'Well, I won't,' said General Sheridan. 'You are chief of scouts of the United States army. When you get ready to give Wild Bill an order, give it.'

"I went to Wild Bill and told him how I felt about the situation and what the general had said."

"'Why, that's all right, Billy,' Wild Bill said. 'I'm a soldier and I'll take orders from anyone who has the right to give me orders. I'd just as lief work under you as anybody I know. I'll obey you as my ranking officer as readily as I'd obey the commanding general of the United States army.'

"And he did. He did fine work under me through that stirring campaign. He held in check that turbulent spirit that brooked dictation from no one and obeyed my orders like the soldier that he was.

"I first entered the show business in 1872," Buffalo Bill continued. "General Sheridan had been ordered to Chicago to take command of the Department of the Lakes and I went with him as inspector of horses. Ned Buntline, whom I had known out west, had written a drama of the border named 'Scouts of the Plains.' He offered me $500 a week to take the leading role. I hesitated to ask General Sheridan for permission for fear he would laugh at me and perhaps refuse. I finally got Col. Mike Sheridan, his brother, to prefer my request. It was granted readily.

"The drama was produced in Nixon's amphitheater, which used to stand near the site of the modern Hotel Sherman. On the opening night when I was to make my bow before the footlights for the first time the immense theater was packed to the walls. General Sheridan and all the officers of the post occupied boxes in all the glory of full-dress uniforms. I was worse scared as I stepped out of the wings and faced that great audience than I ever was in an Indian fight with bullets and arrows singing about my ears. But I carried it off as bravely as I could. What I didn't know about acting I made up for by strutting about the stage, storming out my lines and firing my navy revolvers after every other sentence. There was an amazing amount of gunpowder burned in that play. After it was all over I imagined I had scored a triumph. Next day the Chicago papers said the play was so bad it was good. But we packed the theater nightly and the reserve police had to be called out to quiet the crowds that fought at the doors for admission.

"The management offered me $1,000 a week to go to St. Louis, where our success was repeated.

"I decided at the opening of the next season that it would be a money-making scheme to have Wild Bill as a member of our troupe. He was then in Hays City, where he had killed several people, and I wrote him telling him of the money he could make by appearing on the stage. 'You won't have to do much acting,' I told him. 'You will only have to shoot and pose around.' He wrote back that he would accept my proposition. I wrote him he would have to agree to stop fighting and killing while he was with the show. He sent me an agreement to that effect by return mail. Then I sent him money to come to New York, where the show was to open. In this last letter I gave him instructions as to what he must do when he reached the city.

"'I am stopping at the Brevoort hotel,' I wrote him, 'and you will land in New York at the Forty-second street depot. To avoid getting lost in the big city, take a cab at the depot and you will be driven to the hotel in a few minutes. Pay the cabman $2. These New York cabmen are regular hold-up men and your driver may want to charge you more, but don't pay him any more than $2 under any circumstances.'

"I was glad Wild Bill was coming. I hadn't seen my old pal for a long time, and I looked forward with pleasure to meeting him again. I told everybody about the Brevoort hotel that Wild Bill was coming and in the evenings as I sat about the lobby I recounted some of his wonderful fights and adventures. I wanted Wild Bill to feel easy as soon as he arrived at the hotel, and I told the proprietor if I didn't happen to be around to welcome Bill and make him feel at home.

"Wild Bill arrived in New York on schedule time. He had my last letter in his pocket and had committed to memory my instructions as to what he should do. As soon as his train arrived he stepped into a cab and ordered the cabman to drive him to the Brevoort house. When the cab drew up in front of the hotel and Bill stepped out he handed the driver a $2 bill. He was bent upon following my instructions to the last detail.

"'Here's your pay,' he said.

"'Pay nothin',' said the jehu. 'My charge is $5.'

"'Well, $2 is all you're going to get,' said Wild Bill.

"'Well, Rube, I'll just take the rest out o' your hide,' said the irate cabman, and he leaped from his box and made at Wild Bill. Wild Bill punched him around the sidewalk unmercifully and wound up by knocking him under his cab horses, where he lay unconscious until pulled out by onlookers. Wild Bill walked quietly into the hotel. The proprietor, who had witnessed the fight, came running up to my room where I was having a nap and thumped at my door.

"'Say, Mr. Cody,' he shouted, 'I guess that gentleman you have been expecting has arrived.'

"Wild Bill was a bad actor most anywhere, but he was an especially bad actor on the stage. Jack Omohundro, known as Texas Jack, was with the show, and when the curtain fell at the close of the first act he and I and Wild Bill were supposed to stand out near the front of the stage clasping rescued maidens to our breasts in the white glare of the calcium. But Wild Bill was never out there where he belonged. He invariably hung back in the shadows at the rear or remained half-hidden behind a painted tree or rock. He was a poor hand to pose or show off and hated to have a lot of people staring at him. One night when the spot light found him leaning against a gnarled oak in the background it made him mad, and he took a shot at the spot-light machine in the central aisle of the balcony, shattered the bull's eye and broke the machine. The play had to go on to the end without the usual calcium effects.

"Wild Bill remained with the show three or four months. By that time he had demonstrated that he was impossible as a member of a traveling theatrical company. I tried to make him do better, but I couldn't do anything with him and he was released. He was glad of it and turned toward the west with a light heart.

"A little while before Bill joined the show he had killed Phil. Cole, a wealthy Texas cattleman of Abilene, Kan. Bill was marshal of Abilene, and Cole, who was a desperado himself, had threatened to kill him just to show the frontier he could do it. They met on the street. Bill's partner was with him. As Bill started to shoot, his partner stepped in the line of fire. Bill killed him accidentally, fired over his body and killed Cole with his second bullet. Cole's brother and a number of his cowboy friends came up to Abilene from Texas to avenge his death. They found that Bill had gone east to become an actor. They boasted about Abilene that they had come to kill Bill and he had been scared and had run away. Bill heard of this talk and as soon as he left the show he started for Cheyenne by way of Abilene. He sent word to the Kansas town that he would be glad to meet Cole's brother and friends or any one else who had any scores to settle with him. Bill went into Abilene standing out on the rear platform and there was a great crowd at the depot to greet him. He was dressed in his most dandified style and looked extremely well as he smiled placidly and surveyed the throng. He remained standing up above the heads of the crowd where everybody could see him for a few minutes and then stepped off upon the depot platform and shook hands with everybody. When the train pulled out he stood again on the rear platform and waved the crowd good-bye. If there were any friends of Cole or enemies of Wild Bill in Abilene that day they kept carefully out of sight. Not a shot was fired. Nothing happened. Wild Bill's reception at Abilene was a regular ovation.

"That little trip that Cole's brother and friends had made from Texas to Abilene to avenge Cole's death was no bluff. They went to Abilene again the following year expecting to find Wild Bill there. Whey they learned that he was in Cheyenne, Cole's brother and two of his close friends started off for the Wyoming town. Wild Bill's friends in Abilene wired him to be on the lookout for them.

"Bill was standing against the bar of a saloon in Cheyenne drinking a glass of beer when the three Texans stalked in. Bill recognized Cole's brother by his resemblance to the Cole he had killed. But Bill made no move. He merely fingered his glass lazily and watched the three strangers out of the corner of his eye. The Texans separated slightly and closed on Bill in a semi-circle. 'Get him now!' said their leader suddenly. All three whipped out revolvers. But—would you believe it?—they did not fire a shot. Bill was the quickest man 'on the draw' that ever lived. He fired so rapidly that others in the saloon testified afterwards they heard but one report. His bullets found the Texans between the eyes and they fell dead in their tracks. Wild Bill killed these men with a six-shooter I had given him when he quit the theatrical business.

"Wild Bill was one of the best revolver shots ever in the west," Buffalo Bill went on. "He certainly was the best revolver shot in a fight."

"The man of today wonders why Wild Bill got into so many fights. One naturally figures he must have been a quarrelsome man. On the contrary he was distinctly likable and amiable. But out west in early days there were many men who took pride in bloody exploits and killed men simply to make a record. In the spirit of gamblers these men swore to kill each other to decide which was the better man. They hunted each other often and traveled hundreds of miles to fight it out with a rival killer. A number of these professional bad men tried to kill Wild Bill for the reputation it would give them. Other men tried to kill him as a result of disputes. Still others sought his life to avenge the deaths of relatives who had fallen before Wild Bill's revolvers.

"He was killed in Deadwood by Jack McCall on August 2, 1876. With a party of friends he had entered a saloon to play poker. The card table was in a corner at the rear of the place. Captain Durfee, an old Missouri steamboat man and a friend of Hickok's, took the seat in the corner. Wild Bill tried to get the seat first. When he failed, he asked Captain Durfee to let him have it. Captain Durfee suspected Bill wanted the seat to have a certain man at his right to cut for him and perhaps stack the deck. Captain Durfee refused to give up the seat. Then Bill without more ado sat down in a chair with his back to the front door. In that position he could not see McCall enter. The assassin stepped up behind him and fired a bullet in the back of his head, killing him instantly. McCall was hanged in Yankton not long after. The fatal bullet, after passing through Wild Bill's skull, broke Captain Durfee's arm.

"Captain Durfee said afterward that he did not realize until too late that Wild Bill wanted the chair in the corner so he could command a view of the bar and all who entered from the street. If the captain had known this he would have surrendered the chair and Wild Bill would not have been assassinated."

WHAT I WENT THROUGH

Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Natick, Mass.—"I cannot express what I went through during the change of life before I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a nervous condition I could not keep still. WAVES AND BILLOWS ON THE ATLANTIC

"As Well as Ever," Is Pastor Russell's Message.

On the Atlantic Returning From Most Successful Lecturing Trip Abroad—Says That Church's Present Experiences Are by Way of Preparation For Her Future Work.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Nov. 19.—"As well as ever, thank God," was Pastor Russell's message to the millions who read his sermons weekly in the secular press. His text was from Psalm xlii, 1-8, especially the words: "All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me." St. David spoke of his own experiences, his own tribulations; but prophetically he represented the Messiah—Head and Body—Jesus and His saintly few gathered during this Age out of all nations, seets and parties—"the Church of the First-borns, whose names are written in heaven."—Hebrews xii, 23.

In Love Not In Anger.

The Prophet's experiences—wave after wave of trouble, disappointments, etc.—he knew were not evidences of God's disfavor, but contrarywise proofs of the Heavenly Father's love and care—evidences that he was being taught of God, in preparation for a work which he was to do. He was pursued by Satan's devices and was like an antelope in the chase, famished for water. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, oh! God;" "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God. When shall I come and appear before Thee, oh God? When will my trials, my testing be finished? When shall I be received into everlasting fellowship as the Son of the Highest."

The people in general could not understand how Divine favor could be with one so tempted, so tried, so beset by persecutors, so maligned; as he said, "Mine enemies speak evil of me: When shall he die and his name perish? If he come to me as a reporter, he speaketh falsely; his heart gathereth iniquity to itself; when he goeth abroad he telleth it." "All that hate me whisper together against me."—Psalm xli, 5-7.

Full of faith St. David would not be overwhelmed. His faith would outride the storms. He would learn his lesson. He would thus demonstrate his faith, his loyalty to God.

The Greater David—Beloved.

Pastor Russell declared the most important feature of St. David's career centered in the fact that he typified the Messiah—Head and Members. The name David signifies Beloved, and Messiah is the beloved Son of God. He is the Chief or Head over this house of sons, all of whom are God's dear children—Beloved. Thus the prophecies of the future in which David figures prominently are properly understood to refer to the great work of Messiah's Kingdom—the Throne of David will be the Throne of Messiah which will be established under the whole heavens.

The waves and billows of trouble which passed over the Prophet David, typified the trials and difficulties of the narrow way in which Jesus and His faithful followers of the new creation must walk to attain the promised glory, honor and immortality. St. David's trials of faith and loyalty to God typed the faith and loyalty of Christ Jesus and the Church amid the trials that will come with the end of the present night time, ushering in the New Day, in which Christ will reign in righteousness for the overthrow of sin and death. They may rejoice in hope, knowing that all things are working together for good to them, because they love God supremely. (Romans viii, 28.) "Weeping may endure for a night but joy cometh in the morning."—Psalm xxx, 5.

Our Mission Now—and Then.

Sin, the fall, degradation and selfishness have had the effect of hardening the hearts of mankind. They are stony-hearted by reason of the prevalent selfishness; the tender-hearted, who love righteousness, are bruised—wounded—broken. This heart-breaking is not injurious.

The broken-hearted are the more ready to receive the message of God's love and mercy. It is of this broken-hearted class that the Lord is making up His Elect Church. "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." So far from its being the mission of the Church to break men's hearts it is the very reverse—it is theirs "to bind up the broken-hearted."

Then will come the Church's future work for which all of her present experiences are preparations—are being overruled by Divine providence. Present experiences with trials and difficulties, battling with the waves of trouble and obtaining Divine assistance to surmount them, will all be valuable preparations of the Church for her future work of glory. Then she will be perfect with her Redeemer on His heavenly throne. How much her own present experiences will serve to make this class sympathetic and merciful priests of God toward men "in the Ages to come" (Ephesians ii, 6, 7), none but God can foretell.

IDEAL SCHOOLHOUSES

Movement to Improve Rural Educational Institutions Spreading.

SHOULD BE MADE INVITING.

Have Rooms Well Ventilated, Lighted and Heated So That the Health and Mental Energy of the School Children Shall Not Be Impaired.

The past twenty years have witnessed a marked advance in school architecture in many towns in the rural sections of the country. More attention is being paid today to school buildings, sanitation, surroundings and location than ever before. The United States was slow in making the start, but now that the initiative has been taken there is no excuse for progressive school directors not doing everything in their power to relegate the old, obsolete and frequently insanitary buildings to oblivion, replacing them with modern, up to date, sanitary and sightly schoolhouses.

"I cannot urge too strongly the need of an enlightened and liberal policy in schoolhouse construction to the end that the schoolhouse be attractive in appearance and scientifically constructed," says Iowa's superintendent of public instruction. "It may require a few dollars more to secure such a schoolhouse, but it should be remembered that the district is building for half a century at least, and only the best should be considered. The schoolhouse with its surroundings should be the most attractive place in the district, in which every child and every patron will take pride. And the schoolroom should not only be inviting, but it should be so ventilated, lighted and heated that the physical health and mental energy of the children shall not be impaired."

In various Iowa counties the old barren, barnlike structure is being supplanted by neat, commodious and comfortably equipped buildings. Many of them are making rapid strides.

The problem of supplanting the old schoolhouse with a new structure carries with it the discussion of several important topics, chief among them being the school site, the school building and the ventilation of the building. We can do no better in this connection than to quote from Professor W. H. Gemmill, superintendent of schools in Dallas county, Ia., who gives practical advice on all these subjects, as follows:

"In selecting a site the area of the lot, the elevation, the character of the soil, the drainage, the direction of the slope and the central location should be considered. No school ground should ever contain less than one acre, with a frontage of 180 feet and a depth of 240 feet. In the larger consolidated district it should contain not less than two and may very properly contain three acres. If possible it should be an elevated piece of ground, a small knoll or a gentle slope, and the drainage should be away from the yard and house. The soil should be light, dry and porous. A sandy or gravelly subsoil affords the best drainage, while an eastern or a southern slope secures rapid evaporation. Under no circumstances should the stratum be clay impermeable to ground water. It is desirable that the schoolhouse should be located near the geographical center of the district, and the board should select the site with this is mind, but the site should be high and dry and the brightest and most beautiful spot near the center. Under no conditions should pleasant and wholesome surroundings be sacrificed if a better and more suitable site can be secured some little distance away. The additional distance in traveling will be labor well spent if thereby the pupils are placed in more beautiful and inspiring scenes.

"The house should be placed in front of the center, with the playground in the rear. Where the house is heated by a furnace the fuel supply should be stored in the basement. If there is no basement a small building for fuel should be erected at the rear of the schoolhouse.

"The foundation walls of the schoolhouse should be brick or stone and extend a little below frost line. The walls should be at least one foot in thickness and extend about three feet above the surface. It is usually well to have a vertical air chamber, and if there is no basement suitable ventilators should be provided on each of the four sides, so as to permit of thorough ventilation of the space between the surface and the floor during the summer months. Good shutters should be provided for these openings in order that the winter's cold may not affect the air within the room near to the floor.

"It would also be a step in the right direction if there were a basement under the entire building, partitioned into a furnace room, a workshop and a kitchen. Adequate but inexpensive tools for manual training can be bought for $25. Here the boys would learn to construct simple things in a scientific manner and even supply the apparatus necessary for the school. A good stove and some kitchen utensils would be sufficient for the teaching of the principles of domestic economy.

"No more important question is before the farmer today than that involving the housing of his children of school age. With an awakened appreciation of the fact that better rural schools will bring about a stay-at-home family which will not find it necessary to seek the town for the desired education there has come a realization of the fact that more practical studies must be taught in more sanitary and more sightly buildings."

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

THE ability to get things without work is born in some men, and the harshest kind of circumstances never seem able to knock it out of them.

Not being able to want what you get is one of the greatest discomforts of life.

Occasionally a man can be on time and a slow train at once, but he is a fool to risk it twice.

One way to have a good time is to get some one with a shade of authority to discountenance and forbid it.

A shower of cats and dogs will be a back number when it gets to raining airships.

Maybe you can't cash a draft from a window, but often the doctor can.

One advantage of knowing a lot is that you don't have to be always telling it to prove it to yourself.

It is much easier to furnish the appetite than any other essential of a good dinner.

Many a soft young man has a hard time of it in this callous world.

Always agree with a man in his estimate of himself and listen admiringly to his glowing account of his perfections and he will get on to you after awhile and stake you off as a good thing.

Nobody ever argues to convince his opponent, but solely for the sake of judging how his theories sound when they are vibrating on the sentient atmosphere.

Prospects Later.

The birds have shipped us a goodby
And to the south are fleeting
To find a warmer place to sleep
And more abundant eating.
And for the winter's traveling
Their broods have been collected,
And some day we may join them there
When flying is perfected.

On airy wings they rise and flit
To places more inviting.
A summer climate suits them best,
Though maybe not exciting.
We watch them as they fly away,
And, though we feel forsaken,
We say, "Some day we'll join you there
If Wrights are not mistaken."

Oh, that will be a glorious day
When we can rise and flutter
To where the climate is so warm
That it will melt the butter,
When we can pack our little grips
And have the rest sent later
And through the chilly autumn air
Make straight for the equator!

Inventors, tighten up your screws,
Your engines get in training,
So we can scoot away to climes
That are not mussed by raining.
We know you're busy, and we hate
The subject to be broaching,
But, oh, mankind would be a bird
When winter is approaching!

Beginning at Home.

"Why can't a stop be put to graft?"
"Would you like to get in on some?"
"Could you put me next?"
"I think so."
"I might as well have my share if it is going."
"That is the reason we can't stop it."

Not Much Help.

"Jones seems to be getting to the front."
"Yes; he is doing all right."
"Did he have much of a start in life?"
"Well, he was kicked downhill by a mule."

Good Reason.

"I thought you said you would not marry him if he were worth a million."
"Suppose I did."
"But you have changed your mind."
"I found out he was."

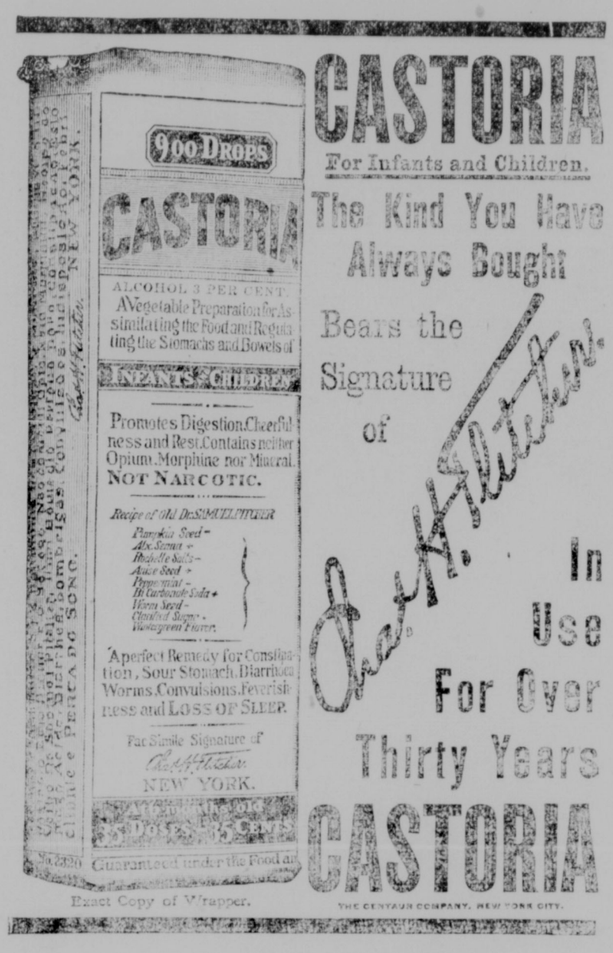
Explained.

"What do they mean by 'playing the races?'"
"You have seen the dope sheets?"
"Yes."
"Well, you take them home and try them on the piano."

Just Like a Woman.

"That woman never has a single idea."
"What does she do when she comes to see you?"
"Just talks right along regardless."

Go to It.



If you're bound to be a knocker,
To the limit work the thing.
Get a pair of boxing mittens
And make money in the ring.

Of Course.

"They say there is no fool like an old fool."
"Guess that's right too."
"Wonder why?"
"They have had time to practice."

Where He Belongs.

"He is a man of tremendous energy."
"Is he?"
"A perfect cyclone."
"Why doesn't he get in the weather reports then?"

BELL TELEPHONE IN FIGHT.

An Effort Being Made To Oust the Garrett Company From Lonaconing.

E. L. Mattice, representing the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company, was in Lonaconing last week looking after the interests of his company and paid The Advocate a visit seeking information regarding the reported invasion of the Garrett County Telephone Company upon their lands.

At the last meeting of the Lonaconing City Council the privilege was granted to the Garrett Telephone Company to enter the city by using the electric light poles for their wires. It was stated that connections would or had been made on Douglas avenue.

On December 1 a contract between the C. & P. Telephone Co. and the Garrett Company will expire. At this time the Garrett Company are using the C. & P. lines and at that date the connections will be severed. For that reason the use of the electric light poles was desired and sought.

But the Bell telephone interests object or will likely object to such an arrangement and it is quite likely that there will be something doing in telephone circles about the first of December.

The C. & P. company, it is stated, claims that the granting of permission to use other poles than theirs is a matter for the Public Utility Commission to determine and not the city council of Lonaconing.

While in the city, Mr. Mattice spent some time interviewing Mayor Thompson, City Clerk Durst and some of the councilmen, trying to gather all the information he could for his company.—Lonaconing Advocate.

SHOT AT HIS WIFE WITH DEADLY INTENT

George Long, of Friendsville, Discharged Load of Shot Through Window

George Long, of Friendsville, is one of the latest arrivals at the county Bastile, having been brought to Oakland from Friendsville by a Constable, where he was the principal Saturday in a shooting affray, the target of his murderous fire being his wife, whose escape from instant death was miraculous to say the least.

From the reports coming from the scene of the shooting it has been learned that Long had been on a protracted drunk and going to his home he drove his wife out, locked all the windows and doors leading from the interior of the building and armed himself with two firearms, one a shotgun and the other a repeating rifle, and warned his wife not to attempt to reenter the dwelling.

Mrs. Long, after an absence of some time returned to the house, first sending a man named Fike to make peace with her husband. Thinking Mr. Fike was in the house and had succeeded in disarming her husband, Mrs. Long attempted to enter by raising a window for the purpose of crawling through. The plan arranged between Mr. Fike and Mrs. Long had miscarried, however, the former being unable to make any impression upon Long, and departed. While Mrs. Long was in the act of raising the window with her hands and arms extended Long fired with the shotgun, the charge from the firearm passing through the front of her dress and between her side and arm, none of the shot taking effect.

Later Long was arrested and brought to Oakland where he will be held until the grand jury meets and acts.

Yesterday morning Long made the assertion that he would have the jail filled with Friendsville folks before the matter upon which he is charged is disposed of by the Court.

SOBER JURORS ARE PREFERRED

Judge Keedy Answers His Critics in Court at Hagerstown.

Judge Martin L. Keedy, in discharging the grand jury at Hagerstown Tuesday evening, answered the criticisms that when he drew the jury he had put a number of pronounced temperance men on it. Judge Keedy said:

"It is no disqualification to a juror to be a temperance man, but it is a disqualification to be a juror who is in the habit of frequenting saloons while he is attending the session of court.

"When a man is here administering justice he needs all the wits he possesses, and if he is under the influence of liquor he is not, in my judgment, in a proper frame of mind to perform his duties."

The jury recommended that no newspaper reporter or anyone except the office clerks and other authorized persons be allowed to go behind the desk of the court clerk or handle the papers thereon, as the jury believes a number of witnesses on important cases got beyond the reach of the jury because of information gained by the witnesses in this way.

All the newspaper men deny that they are responsible for any witnesses getting away and say that they believe that if any witnesses did get away because information reached them that they were about to be summoned, such information was obtained from other sources than the newspapers. When Judge Keedy charged the grand jury he warned the members not to reveal their proceedings, as had been the case with the former juries.

Circuit Court Monday.

The December term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county will convene in Oakland Monday next. A large number of cases have been marked for trial. With the civil cases and the criminal business that will likely be brought to the attention of the Court by the grand jury, indications point to a prolonged term.

Christian Art of Getting Mad

By Rev. INGRAM E. HILL
Pastor of North Shore Baptist Church, Chicago

TEXT—Be ye angry and sin not.—Eph. IV, 26.

It is a great thing to know how to get real angry without making a fool of one's self. Not everybody knows how to do it. It is an accomplished art, the ability to get mad like a gentleman. To know when to get angry is a criterion of character. It is an accomplishment which is not learned in the schools. It is acquired in the relentless training of practical experience.

It is not a sin to get angry. Any man with half an ounce of ginger in his system ought to get angry occasionally. Temper is the impress of God upon the soul. It is the mark of personality and intellectual stamina. The scriptures say that God is angry with the wicked every day. Jesus got angry. Can you not see him standing at the temple door? Can you not see the market scenes which were enacted there? Can you not see his eyes kindle? Can you not see his illumined countenance blaze fierce and glorious? Can you not see the miraculous energy of his personality as he cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple and said unto them: 'My house shall be called a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves.'

Christianity is something more than a religion of love. Jesus said: 'I came not to send peace, but a sword.' Passivity may be all right for weaklings, but action is the birthright of heroes. The man who tries to be sweet with everybody will find some day that he is nothing but a lemon.

It is very easy, however, to get angry foolishly. Sometimes it is proper to get angry, and sometimes it is not. It may be proper at times for a man to get angry with the janitor. It may be proper at times for a man to get angry with the umpire. It may be proper at times for a man to get angry with the family upstairs. But it is never, never proper for a man to get angry with his wife. There is many a man who will say nasy things to his wife that he would not think of saying to his chauffeur.

Temper is good. A bad temper is what you have made of a good thing. A rifle is a good thing in good hands. But when it has become rusted and out of repair it is going to explode some day in the hands of some cheerful idiot who did not know it was loaded. If your temper gets the best of you what you need is to go off to the repair shop and be made over. These fits of temper, this sour disposition, this iceberg atmosphere, this spiteful spirit are as contrary to the Christian as light is opposed to darkness.

Tell me, what do you get mad about? That is the practical question. A man calls you a liar and you retort in similar language. But men are making God a liar every day and you do not get angry. Wherever there are wrongs to be righted, wherever there are evils to be trampled under foot, wherever there is justice to be meted out, wherever there is iniquity in high places or low, there is your opportunity to show of what stuff you are made.

Somebody treads on your corn and you get mad at him. This very night a courtly and attractive son of perdition will lure a girl in her teens to one of the winerooms of this prodigal city. He will give to her a drink that will inflame every passion and deaden every moral sense. He will lead her forth to her ruin and laugh like a devil over the havoc he has wrought.

If you are going to get angry, in God's name get angry at something worth while.

We are in the midst here of a society which is fond of wine and joy rides and clandestine flirtations. A society that is rotten to the core. Gilded resorts or doubtful character flaunt their disregard of high morality. Fiends in human shape are stalking the streets and outrages are committed at our very doors. There is a time to be angry. There is a time for Christian men to speak out, and that time is now. When the good people wake from their lethargy and begin to tackle something that is really worth their mettle, then shall right be triumphant and justice win the day.

The Law of Love.

The consecrated Christian brings to the lowliest duties the loftiest motives. His consecration to Christ carries with it consecration to the service of his brother men. The law of Christ is the law of love. We fulfill it in doing well our part of the world's work as well as in direct acts of sympathy and burden bearing. The holy man is the more energetic in business on account of the fullness of divine life in his heart. As Christ came into the world to do the Father's will, so he sends us into the world to do his own will, which is always the Father's will. Business becomes ministry when it is inspired by fidelity to Christ. The salvation of society, the redemption of business, the subordination of power to principle and love, can only come through the law of love, which is the law of Christ.

Heroism.

Christianity alone seeks and secures both happiness and heroism.—Rev E. T. Root, Congregationalist, Providence

Temperance Notes

FOR CAUSE OF TEMPERANCE

General Sir Ian Hamilton, K. C. B., Makes a Striking Declaration for Total Abstinence.

Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton, K. C. B., was the principal speaker at the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church held in the Scottish capital and delivered an address which was a striking declaration for the cause of temperance. Sir Ian, it will be remembered, pledged himself to total abstinence just a year ago, and it is candidly stated by personal interviewers that twelve months of water-drinking have not in the least impaired the health, soured the happy disposition or diminished the cheery outlook on life of the distinguished general. Incidentally his pledge has had a most beneficial effect on the rank and file of the army and has given a new stimulus to temperance in both services. In opening his address, Sir Ian said he had come there to strike a blow for Scotland. He thought the finest stroke for Scotland was that of Bruce at Bannockburn, when he raised his battleax and crashed the casque of Sir Henry de Bohun as if it were a nutshell. But he believed as fine a deliverance for Scotland was to be gained by dealing a stroke at another sort of cask—the cask of whiskey. No longer advancing at the head of the English army, that cask was in the middle of their own camp, and it was there poisoning and lowering the vitality and pride and honor of the truest, bravest troops to be found anywhere.

Continuing, the general said that he thought that they in the army were rather showing the way to the civil population. He believed honestly that any mother sending her son into the army could do so with the assurance that her son would run a less chance of getting a taste for drink than he would in most civil occupations. These were no fancies of his, but they were supported by figures. India was a most astonishing case. In the Indian army there were 47 per cent. who were temperance men, at home there were 26 per cent., and they were increasing every year. To put it in another way, the number of temperance men in the army, taking the past two or three years, had increased at the rate of 2,500 a year. From the medical department of the war office he learned that during the past twenty years the number taken to hospital per thousand had fallen in India to the extraordinary extent of from 10 to 1, and in England from 2.6 to 7. The head of the medical service told him that, directly and indirectly, he considered that the greater temperance was very largely responsible for it. Disease had decreased as temperance increased. It was his opinion that the enemy were on the run, and that they could afford to be bold; and he believed that if anyone could lower the drinking in Scotland by 20 per cent. he would do more good than by adding another province to our empire.

LIQUOR AND LABORING MAN

Saloon Has Much Better Chance to Exhibit Its Fruits Among Working Class Than Among Rich.

The Christian Evangelist contends that the liquor business is the greatest foe of the workingman, and that he is the greatest loser by the saloon. The rich man, it says, can get along fairly well. "The money he spends for liquor is not a serious matter to him. He runs no risk of losing his job for drunkenness. His family is not often brought to starvation or beggary, and when he gets seriously intoxicated his valet or the servant at the club can take care of him. Of course, even among the rich a large proportion of the divorces are produced, directly or indirectly, by whisky. But among the laboring classes the saloon has its best opportunity to exhibit its fruits. Its effect on character is no worse, but its economic results are vastly greater and worse."

What Ruins Girls.

Of all the ten or twelve thousand unfortunate girls and wrecked women arrested every year in Chicago, among those who tell their woes to me, ninety-nine out of every hundred attribute their downfall to the first glass of wine or champagne taken generally with a male companion, always for good-fellowship's sake.

That first glass is the beginning of the end—and here you see what the end is.

When a woman once begins to drink, even in a social way, her future is threatened with either moral wickedness of utter ruin. So many women who come here tell me that the first sparkling glass of champagne was the beginning of all their misfortune.—Mary K. Keegan, Chief Matron of the Chicago Police Department.

The Living Christ.

Jesus is not a theory, not an inspiring memory, nor a mere influence; but he is a living and life-giving personality. If we fulfil the requirements, make much of his words, neglect not his works and are much in prayer, we shall see Jesus.—Rev. E. A. Elliott, Episcopalian, Springfield, Mass.

There is no phase of the dairy business that needs more study or more careful management than does the breeding of the cow.

Upon the cow depends success or failure and we must, after selecting her, look to her care and her feed, and to the handling of her products.

The fact that dairymen have devoted more attention to other phases of their dairying than to the breeding and development of the cow is one of the reasons why so many of our dairy herds are not capable of returning a profit from their food and cost of attendance.

We are often asked which is the best breed of dairy cattle to select for the dairy? To such men I would say that there is no best breed. Some think because they have Jerseys they are on the royal road to success. Others think that the Holsteins will bring prosperity to the farm.

This is a sad mistake, for scrubs are very common among the pure-breeds, and a pure-bred scrub is without doubt the worst scrub of all.

Select cows having individual excellence as determined by the Babcock test and scales in starting a herd. Better and more uniform results of breeding may be secured if the animals are of one type of breed and great care should be exercised in getting individuals which possess to a certainty the characteristics we desire to perpetuate in the herd.

What we dairymen want is a herd of cows that will give a profit at the pail, whether pure-breds or grades. The ones that will produce a pound of butter or cheese the cheapest are the ones that we want to keep in our herds.

We have a number of improved breeds of dairy cows that represent the skill of years in their perfection, but in adopting any of these breeds we should consider the conditions and environments under which they have been developed in their original homes and then plan to make our care and feed and general management conform to the conditions under which the breed had been developed.

If a man has Jerseys, give them Isle of Jersey care and feed for they cannot succeed on scrub fare and fodder. They were not intended for that purpose.

The Jersey cow is a delicate, nervous machine and requires warmth, kindness and liberal feeding to make her profitable.

If Holsteins are selected do not expect them to thrive on closely cropped, scanty pastures where they are compelled to rustle all day to gather sufficient food.

Give them the care they were developed under, large amounts of succulent forage and well cured hay, warm stables and kind treatment.

You may get pure-breds if you can afford them, but all farmers are not able to buy pure-breds. However, always use a pure-bred sire.

The breeding bull always represents half the value of the breeding power of the herd if it is desired to grow calves for the dairy.

Select them from some of the well-known families of the breed and be sure that he possesses prepotency which gives promise of being a good calf-getter.

A bull of this kind will give you excellent results in improving the herd. Some of the best herds in the country are high grades that have resulted from the continued use of good sires.

In order to be successful as breeders we must learn some of the lessons associated with our stock; have an ideal type in our minds and always in our selection and mating be seeking to improve the type and standard in our herd.

The best special purpose animal is none too good. Never strive to produce a general purpose animal by mixing beef and dairy breeds. Aim to produce the animal whose special characteristic is the cheap production of a pound of butter or a gallon of milk.

Always seek to have the crosses in harmony. Do not mate extremes. Vigor and constitution are two essentials. Unless a cow possesses vigor in constitution she will make a poor breeder.

Do not inbreed unless you have a definite object in view, such as intensifying some particular good quality and then do it by breeding the sire to some of his own get.

This should not be followed up too closely. Plan to have the heifers drop their first calves at about 24 to 30 months of age. Their offspring will be more vigorous and there will be better results than by forcing an immature animal to bear progeny.

Breed cows are large feeders. Feed them a liberal ration of milk-producing foods and give them the best of care. Keep in mind that bad qualities are more easily transmitted than the good ones.

MULCHING THE STRAWBERRY BED

Where Straw Is Not Readily Obtainable It Is Difficult to Get a Covering of Right Thickness.

(By H. F. GRINSTEAD, Missouri.)

Where straw is readily obtainable it is difficult to spread properly over the strawberry plants so that it will be thick enough yet not smother the plants or require raking off in the spring.

A mulch of oats or sorghum is the best thing I know of that may be sown between the rows.

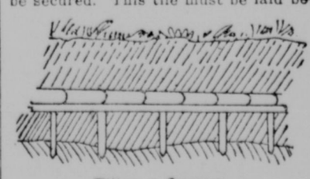
Oats alone has been tried, but from the fact that we often have a very dry fall it has not always made a satisfactory growth before frost.

Sorghum or kaffir corn are dry weather plants, and if there is sufficient moisture in the soil to germinate the seed they will grow till frost.

A good plan is to sow oats and sorghum or oats and kaffir corn in mixture and thick enough so that it will not be coarse.

As soon as it is killed by the frost the sorghum will fall, making an ideal mulch. Then, as the weather becomes more severe the oats will be killed.

Mulch grown in this way will always be found thickest where needed—in bare places and between the rows.



It cannot possibly smother out the plants no matter how rank it grows, and is the best for keeping the fruit off the ground in the spring.

One of the greatest advantages in a mulch of this kind is that you are reasonably sure to have no weeds sown with it, as is often the case when using wheat straw.

LAY DRAIN TILE THROUGH SWAMP

Good Plan Shown Where Ground Is So Soft as to Not Permit of Digging Satisfactory Ditch.

It is frequently advisable to lay drain tile through a bog or swamp where the ground is so soft as not to permit digging a satisfactory drain ditch. By driving stakes in the ground and laying a one-inch board on the tops of them, and upon this laying the line of tile, a good flow of water can be secured. This tile must be laid be

Cure Feather Pulling.

A good remedy for feather-pulling hens is said to be a piece of tough meat or bone with lean meat clinging to it. They will pick at the meat instead of pulling feathers.

Literary Criticism.

They were discussing a certain authoress at dinner, and a well-known critic raised a laugh by remarking: "Well, her hair's red, even if her books are not."

The mild young man in the corner made a mental note of the sally for future use, and at another party shortly afterward he carefully guided the conversation into literary channels, Tit-Bits informs its readers. Fortunately, some one mentioned the desired name, and he triumphantly cried out: "Well, she's got red hair, even if her books haven't!"

Splendid Crops
in Saskatchewan (Western Canada)

800 Bushels from 20 acres of wheat was the thresher's return from a Lloydminster farm in the season of 1910. Many fields in that as well as other districts yielded from 25 to 35 bushels of wheat to the acre. Other grains in proportion.

LARGE PROFITS are thus derived from the FREE HOMESTEAD LANDS of Western Canada.

This exceptional showing causes prices to advance. Land values should double in two years' time. Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts. 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest; wood, water and building material plentiful.

Mourning Hats

THREE widely different but equally excellent hats are shown here, designed for "first mourning," and therefore they are made entirely of crape or trimmed with it. As this beautiful fabric has been so perfected by its manufacturers that it is now very durable, it is within the reach of people of moderate means and is extensively used in dress trimmings and dress accessories.

The hat with drooping brim and moderately tall crown is covered with crape and has a facing of white crape. The moderately high dome crown is trimmed with a collar and spirals of crape, very cleverly made. It is a fine example of the exactness and neatnes which should always characterize workmanship in mourning millinery, and is finished with a veil hanging straight from the back.

A beautiful turban of grenadine having its draperies edged with double folds of crape, demonstrates the ingenuity of the milliner who designed it. It is soft and light on the head and uncommonly becoming. It is a model suited to almost all faces and ages. A small veil may be worn with it. For first mourning a veil of net bordered with crape would be a good choice for this particular hat.

The little toque with body and trimming made entirely of crape is a shape with which we are all familiar because it is always good style. The form is covered with folds of soft, dull-finished crape. Three "wings" or loops covered with the crape are bordered with a narrow plaiting of the fabric. They are mounted at the back with a big soft knot of crape. In the early days of mourning a crape veil is suspended from the back of the toque and replaced later with a short veil of coarse-meshed Brussels net, bordered with crape. This hat is designed for matrons or older women who prefer a toque to a bonnet.

It is a simple matter to test crape and other fabrics designed especially for mourning wear to see that they are waterproof.. Immerse a small piece in a glass of water before purchasing. If the dye runs and the "rib" or crimble, comes out, the fabric has not been waterproofed and should be immediately rejected.

Crape may be easily renovated and freshened to look like new. A veil which has grown limp and dusty looking, should be thoroughly brushed and shaken, removing the dust. It should then be rolled about a broom handle (without stretching) and pinned so that it will stay rolled. Place the rolled crape over a boiler and keep it there an hour if necessary, until it has become thoroughly steamed through with the steam from boiling water. Set it to dry and allow it to remain on the roller for 24 hours. The result will be entirely satisfactory, the crape looking like new.

GREAT VARIETY IN COLLARS

New Models in Profusion, and Many Old Ones Retain Their Popularity.

A large variety of fall collars is being shown for fall. While the newer models do not show the regulation sailor collar, many are made with the new shaped sailor, which almost reaches to the waist line, but is considerably narrower than the old style. Large round collars and pointed collars are also much in evidence.

Hoods and hood effects are meeting with considerable success. Some of the coats have the collars made so as to have an adjustable hood which can be used to cover the head when desired. When unbuttoned it forms a sailor collar.

Double collars, consisting of a deep cape collar coming over the shoulders and a small turn-down collar, usually of another material, are also seen in the lines. While the majority of coats have the turn-down collar, a few are made with the standing military collar.

Cleaning Black Silk.

One of the cleaning processes for black silk that is far from being widely known is the coffee method. It is as follows: Boil some coffee until there is no further aroma rising therefrom. Lay the silk article that is to be sponged on a table or board and sponge on the side that is to show. After the sponging is thoroughly done turn on the wrong side and iron with fairly hot iron, preferably one that is kept at a constant heat such as the gas or electric iron variety, though the other will do if rapid changes are made and those changes are as often as necessary, say, minute intervals. This will remove the spots far oftener than the malt liquor process that has long been the fashion, and not only will this give tone to the black materials but make the article's texture appear new. Let dry slightly before ironing.

How to Keep Young.

Some women attain a graceful old age by adopting the following rules: Forget disagreeable things, keep your nerves well in hand and inflict them on no one; master the art of saying pleasant things; do not expect too much from your friends; make whatever work that comes to you congenial; retain your illusions and don't believe all the world wicked and unkind; relieve the miserable and sympathize with the sorrowful. These few rules will, at least, make the world brighter to yourself and others.

WOMAN'S FOOT GROWS LARGER

Shoe Manufacturers Say Number Two Shoe Is Now Almost Obsolete.

Shoe manufacturers claim that the American woman's foot is growing larger. The number two shoe is almost obsolete, they say, and sizes four and five are much commoner than three. The explanation seems to be that the phenomenon is due to the increased use of the feminine foot as a means of locomotion. The constantly increasing number of women engaged in industry and the growth in popularity of tennis, golf and walking have had their inevitable result, and common sense has done much to abolish the wearing of pinching shoes. The tradition that small feet are an excellent thing in women has persisted long and will not die without a struggle. Conservatives need not fear that women will carry this matter too far; they know when to stop. —Success Magazine.

SILK AND EMBROIDERY

The waist fastens prettily on one side with gold buttons.

Little coats or jackets of changeable taffetas are worn with voile or mull lingerie frocks. They show the high line and the plaited frill on the lower edge.

Thrane's Emergency Call

By A. MARIA CRAWFORD

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

The telephone bell rang insistently and Dr. Marshall Thrane threw down a book on abdominal surgery and turned indifferently to the instrument.

"Yes, this is Dr. Thrane. Automobile accident? Call Dr. Gates. I am very busy."

Thrane loved his profession and the lie about being busy was his first act of disloyalty. Although a young man of thirty, he was considered the leading surgeon, certainly the most successful one, in the city.

On this particular evening he was not disposed to help humanity, for the world had gone wrong and the bitterness of his first sorrow had made him morose and sullen. His engagement to the beautiful Eileen Hunt, three months before, had made him supremely happy. She seemed possessed of the tact and democratic attitude toward the masses that go to make a successful and helpful wife for a professional man. The quarrel had occurred two days before, yet he was still ignorant of the cause.

They had gone to the country club for dinner and he had thought to himself at the table that the girl had been blessed with every feminine attraction of beauty and charm. And now within two months of their wedding day, they had quarreled. Over what? Dr. Thrane closed his eyes and for the hundredth time tried to recall the exact conversation.

They had been discussing love. The topic was natural, for there had been a full moon shining on the river before the clubhouse and the soft strains of the waltz from Salome had reached them from the ballroom.

What was it he had said? Something about the moon making a man say foolish things, he remembered. Then she had grown strangely quiet and when he tried to penetrate her silence and learn the cause, she had told him that probably he had been foolish when he proposed to her; it was moonlight then, she reminded him coolly. All his protestations to the contrary proved vain and useless. He had made the remark because he believed it to be a true statement and she had fortunately been clever enough and quick enough to see that he hoped it would be taken as a personal intimation of his attitude toward her. Argument was plainly useless and in a great and overwhelming silence they motored home at high speed, ignoring the beauty of the night and the voiceless things that breathed of love through the fragrant darkness.

Two days had passed slowly. He was too proud to make advances when he had been innocent of her charge against him. He had proven his love in every known way and he concluded that she was evidently grasping at any petty reason as an excuse for breaking her engagement to him.

Again the telephone rang sharply and Dr. Thrane answered.

"Yes, this is Dr. Thrane. . . What wants me? . . . The people hurt in the automobile accident? . . . Who are they? . . . I will be there in five minutes."

Somebody at the Hunts had been hurt. He summoned his sleepy chauffeur and was soon on the way, a fear growing in his heart that it might be Eileen. How would she receive him? Would she speak? A dozen questions presented themselves as he hurried to his patint. It was more than probable that her brother Bob had been injured.

He hurried up the steps and found Mr. Hunt holding open the door. His worst fears were confirmed when the older man said, "Come in, Marshall. Eileen was thrown from a car. She fainted, but I think they have brought her around."

"Eileen wanted us to send for Dr. Gates, but of course we didn't want to take any chances, for we didn't know how badly she might be hurt, so I had them telephone for you, Marshall."

"This is no time for personal feeling," said the young surgeon sternly, his heart aching at sight of the girl's white face and twitching hands. "Some hot water, please."

"My ankle is hurt, Marshall," said the girl.

"All right, I'll make you comfortable in a few minutes," he assured her as he dropped a tablet into a tiny glass of hot water. "Close your eyes," he ordered as he sat down beside her and pushed back the sleeve from her round, white arm.

"I will stay with her for a while, Mrs. Hunt. Go and get some rest," he told her mother when he had bound up the girl's sprained ankle and made her forget her pain.

While Eileen slept Thrane idly picked up a magazine on a table near him. It fell open where a telegram had been thrust in. The words on the yellow slip seemed to leap into the mind of the man against his will. It was addressed to Eileen Hunt. "Expect to sail for Japan the first. Can you go with me? Wire at once. Tom."

Thrane looked at the girl, then back again at the telltale slip of paper. She had precipitated their quarrel because it was necessary to find some excuse for breaking her engagement to him. Who was Tom?

At the same time that Eileen wakened, her mother came in, thanking Thrane profusely for allowing her a few hours of sleep. The young surgeon was merely professionally courteous when he declared that it was nothing more than he should have done under the circumstances. He hoped that his patient would res. well and he would look in on her some time during the day, he said, and picking up his bag, without a word to the girl, left the room.

His quiet acceptance of changed conditions hurt the girl's pride. She had had a sufficient amount of time in which to regret her folly and she was ready for Thrane to pave a pleasant way for her confession, but the young surgeon came and went daily, coolly, impersonally professional.

It was late Sunday afternoon when Thrane came in to see Eileen. It had been a strenuous day for him and he dropped into a chair and sat silent, unmindful of the efforts of callers to interest him in the general conversation. In a short time he rose to go and Eileen beckoned to him.

"I want you to wait until these people go, please. I have something for you. It is your birthday, you know."

"All right," he said, "provided you won't open up the wound. It's too fresh a hurt and always will be for that matter to bear any unnecessary probing."

She knew then that his apparent indifference was a mask to hide his love and hurt pride, and her heart sank in her body for sheer joy.

"I promise," she answered lightly, "not to hurt."

When they were alone, he moved his chair so that he could watch her face in the light from the west window. She was going to tell him about Tom and her trip to Japan, he reflected, and braced himself for the ordeal.

"I had this made for you, Marshall," she said, and slipped a velvet case toward him along the arm of her invalid chair.

He opened it and there was a locket set with diamonds.

"For me—now?" he asked, wonderingly.

"Yes, open it," she commanded.

He pressed the spring and her own face smiled up at him.

"Is this rosemary—for remembrance?"

"Oh, Marshall, can't you understand? Don't you see?" cried the girl seeing the shadow on his face.

He looked up then and stumbled toward her blindly. "What does it mean?" he urged. "I've suffered enough, Eileen."

Her arms went round him at sight of his pain. "It means that I—that I can't give you up."

"But what about Tom and Japan?" he questioned, afraid of his new happiness.

"How did you know about that?"

CANADA'S IMMENSE WHEAT FIELDS

THE ATTRACTION FOR THREE TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAYS.

Last August there visited the Canadian west the vice-president of the largest individual hardware company in the United States. As his firm have a turnover of millions, and deals extensively with farm implements, this man took a deep interest in crop conditions in Canada, and on his return he embodied his findings in an article for the Hardware Reporter. This article should be of special interest to farmers.

The writer speaks of the importance of the spring wheat crop of Western Canada. He might also have spoken of the importance of the oat crop and also of the winter wheat crop, as well as barley. Winter wheat during the past few years has been a great success, and experiments have shown that it can be grown with success in almost any portion of the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. But apart from this, the spring wheat crop is the one generally grown, and all who know anything of grain, anyone who has had anything to do with markets, knows or has heard of the high character of this cereal and the splendid yields that are annually produced. Reproducing from this article:—

"In a land of such great sweep, and of such difference in soil and climate, there are many resources, but none are at present of the same overwhelming importance as the spring wheat crop. In the interminable prairie stretches of the northwest provinces it is the one absorbing topic of interest and of conversation during its growing and its harvesting, for upon its success or failure hangs the weal or woe of a large part of the Dominion. Its influence extends far down into the United States, drawing thousands of farmers northwards with the lure of cheap lands, but likewise beyond the great lakes, even to the easy going maritime provinces, calling the flower of their young men to its opportunities. Development in these prairie provinces goes on at high pressure for everything hangs on the outcome of spring wheat. Success has emboldened the raisers of this one all-important crop, and each year there is further incursion into those northern fields that only a short time ago were regarded as Arctic wastes. The Canadian Northwest seems to be one of those modern agricultural examples set forth to drive the final nail in the coffin of that ancient Malthusian delusion that population tends to outrun the means of subsistence, since the only fear now among Canadian economists is as to the danger of overstocking the wheat market. Only about two and one-half per cent of possible arable lands in the northwest provinces is now under cultivation, and this year the crop promises to be close to 200,000,000 bushels, so that your imagination and your arithmetic can easily supply the answer as to the possible or even probable outcome."

During the months of July and August the weather was unfavourable and the production of a 200 million yield of wheat will not likely be realized, but even with this, the threshing reports coming to hand show that the crop will be a splendidly paying one.

THERE WITH A REPUTATION

Doubtful and Humiliated Hubby Now Probably Believes Wife Can Keep a Secret.

"The late William Rotch Wister, the father of American cricket, might also be said to have been a godfather of the feminist movement," said a woman writer at the Acorn club in Philadelphia.

"Mr. Wister," she continued, "abominated that type of husband who treats his wife like a child, refusing to take her into his confidence. I once heard Mr. Wister tell a story about a Germantown man of that sort.

"The man came back from a business meeting wherein the future welfare of himself and his family was vitally involved, but he declined to tell his wife what had been the meeting's outcome.

"'Oh, no,' he sneered, 'I can't tell you anything. You'd repeat it if I did. You, being a woman, are constitutionally unable to keep a secret.'

"But the wife, with a quiet smile, retorted: 'George, did I ever tell the secret of how you were led astray that summer the church conference met in Chicago and got arrested in a saloon for biting off the bartender's ear?'"

Astonished the "Cop."

Police Lieutenant "Barney" Keleher always has a new story to tell.

"Two of our 'finest' were walking along Broadway not so long ago," began the lieutenant, unfolding his latest offering, "and their attention was attracted to the bronze figure of an ape standing upright in the window of a large jewelry store.

"'What kind of an animal is that supposed to be?' asked one of the other.

"'You surprise me with your thickness,' returned the second cop. 'That's a gorilla. Never hear of them before?'

"'Sure, and I read about them in the histories,' he answered. 'My, what a lot of damage they did during the Civil war! How did a general ever make those things mind him?'"—New York Sun.

Kidney Trouble Is Very Deceptive

Few Realize They're Affected Till Danger Point is Reached—Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills Work Wonders—Sample Free!

Kidney disease is much more common than most people imagine. Many sufferers do not know what's ailing them—until the trouble becomes serious. Some trifling affection may run into the dread diabetes, dropsy or Bright's disease before one realizes there's anything wrong with his kidneys.

Usually the most noticeable symptoms which first appear are far from the seat of the trouble, and the sufferer mistakes the nature of his ailment. Dull headaches or nervousness, for instance, he never thinks of as signs of diseased kidneys.

Even the aching back and sides, rheumatism, pains or twitching in groins or limbs, sore, inflamed muscles, he may consider indications of some other trouble. Unnaturally colored or cloudy urine, too frequent or too scanty urination, burning sensation, are of course readily recognized as symptoms of such disorders.

Because of the deceptive and dangerous character of these ailments, if you suspect your kidneys are diseased, lose no time in beginning treatment. The best possible remedy for you is Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills. They are quite different from anything else in the market. They act in two ways—cleanse the clogged kidneys of their poisonous impurities, strengthen them so they perform their duties normally, naturally. There's no other way to really cure kidney derangements, resultant bladder troubles and rheumatism—and permanently banish those frightful aches and pains.

Ruskin Pitied Americans.

It is not only the half million bricks of Tattershall that have been numbered for trans-shipment across the Atlantic. Ruskin, when he was a boy, pitied the Americans for being so unhappy as to live in a country that has no castles. They will have a castle now, and no nation likes to be pitied. But the other importation, made by Mrs. Gardner as an addition to her Italian villa near Boston, was that of an entire chapel as it stands, with all its interior furnishings, even to the half-burned candles in the altar. The monks who served the chapel had been scattered by the strong hand of the law, and the building was to be devoted to the pick ax. The courageous American lady had it packed up in a Venetian hill country, where it stood, and carried down piecemeal and embarked.—London Chronicle.

ORIGIN OF THANKSGIVING DAY.

In the seventeenth and the eighteenth centuries it was common for the King of England to proclaim a day of public thanks for any great public blessing. If the Duke of Marlboro, for example, gained a great victory in war, or the English Ambassador got the best of France in a treaty, or a plot against the king's life was discovered and frustrated, such a proclamation was issued. And in this proclamation the Duke of Marlboro was spoken of by name, or the sin of plotting against the king was duly bewailed and execrated to heaven for the privilege of winning advantage over England's neighbors. Or the occasion for a celebration might be a natural blessing, "the late seasonable rains," or the "stay of the fearful visitation of the plague. All these and many more were considered "good and sufficient" cause for a special day of thanks.

No one day was universally observed throughout the empire. Distances were too great and communication too slow, and the Englishman, unlike us, did not know a year ahead of time when his Thanksgiving day would be. Therefore there were in reality three Thanksgiving days. About a week after the proclamation was issued occurred a day of thanks in "London, Westminster and the parts adjacent," all locality otherwise designated as "within the lines of communication and weekly bills of mortality." A few days later the rest of England gave thanks, and still later this example was followed in all the colonies.

CHANCES NO BETTER FOR EXTRA SESSION.

Around the office of Governor Crothers in the Union Trust Building Monday the atmosphere indicated that there would be no special session. The Governor, who came up from Annapolis today for the first time since the middle of last week, was uncommunicative, at least to newspaper men. But he was called upon by several prominent Democrats from the Wilson law counties, who urged that something be done to save their counties from the possibilities of Republican election officials. Among those who called was Judge-elect Henry L. D. Stanford of Somerset, who expressed the opinion that something ought to be done to prevent the appointment of election officials by a Republican Governor.

Those who talked with the Governor gained the impression that he is not likely to be convinced that a call for a special session of the Legislature will be justified. He is said not to be in a frame of mind to countenance any "peanut politics," such as taking away of appointments from the new Governor. He is not convinced that there is any need for a State election board, and he is said to think that if the Democratic majority wants to do anythimg important it can do it in the week before the new Governor goes in.

Foremost in the Governor's mind is the roads question. He wants this project pushed along out side of politics. Though some of the reactionary element of the party seems to think that the Governor wants to be a member of the Commission, can be stated that such is not the case, as he does not care who is on the Commission so long as the work is conducted as a business proposition.

In the middle of the forenoon Governor Crothers left his office for the ninth floor of the Union Trust Building, where he had a half-hour talk with United States Senator John Walter Smith. What transpired is not known by outsiders, but it is reported that Senator Smith did not get any assurance from Governor as to what his attitude was on the special session proposition.

On the eighth floor of the same building Ex-Senator Arthur P. Gorman, Jr., the defeated candidate for the Governorship, received a number of visitors. Among them were Dr. Hayden, former member of the House from St. Mary's county; J. Frank Smith of the same county; Ex-Senator John S. Biddison of Baltimore county, Delegate Garnor of St. Mary's, Walter J. Mitchell of Charles, and Samuel K. Dennis, private secretary to Senator John Walter Smith.—Baltimore News.

PRICE WILL DISPUTE CANDIDACY OF LEE

If Senator Blair Lee is willing to be President of the State Senate, as he says he is, he will not have the assistance of Senator Jesse D. Price of Wicomico. The Wicomico Senator said he would be a candidate for the position in opposition to the Montgomery Senator, who, all reports a few days ago said, could have the place without opposition by simply saving that he would take it.

Mr. Price says a number of his fellow-Senators have suggested him for the Presidency of the Senate and that he wants the position so he can effectively aid in carrying out the party pledges.

Among the Democrats at large the Price candidacy is taken to be a declaration of war from the reactionary element of the Democratic party, and which had to abandon its old attitude in the recent canvass. Price is a close friend of ex-Senator Gorman, and at the last two sessions of the Legislature the combination that worked together was that of Gorman, Biddison and Price. Now Gorman and Biddison are out of the Senate and the reactionary element are expected to rally to the Price standard. It is plain that the Smith-Mahon machine, as representen by Price, does not want Lee under any circumstances, and that the talk of "Lee for the next Governor" heard in the campaign and shouted by the Gorman people was only a bluff to keep the Lee followers in line for the whole ticket.

IF GOVERNOR CROTHERS has the idea that a Wilson ballot for the whole State would be popular, outside of a few fanatics on the subject of complex voting, he is a much mistaken man. The large majority of Democratic voters, as well as independents, without counting the Republicans, not only do not want a more difficult ballot but a smaller and simpler one.—Carroll County Record.

The Army and Navy Football Game.

Mr. Elmer Haulenbeck, of Deer Park, witnessed the contest between the Army and Navy in a football encounter at Philadelphia last Saturday. He speaks in terms of enthusiasm over the work of the Navy, the victors in the contest. He says that at the end of the game when it was announced that the Navy were the victors, that the Army retired to their seats and indulged in the rendition of class songs, but they were the songs of the vanquished, while the Navy took charge of the field, performed a snake dance, much to the edification of the immense gathering, and then assembled beneath their colors, performing evolutions of an interesting character. Mr. G. W. Haulenbeek was the recipient of a card of invitation through the courtesy of Mr. Robert Moss of Annapolis. Mr. Moss is the owner of a Deer Park cottage.

LET US BE THANKFUL.

For air we breathe and food we eat,
For health and strength and friendship sweet,
For all things good and also true,
For laughing brook and landscape, too,
For cheering rain and dancing snow,
For clouds above and storms below,
For melodies in million strains,
For heights of joy the soul attains.

We're thankful for the sunshine bright,
For heat and cold and stars at night;
We're thankful for the wealth of time,
For fruits of earth from ev'ry clime;
We're thankful for resourceful power,
That aids us in our darkest hour;
We're thankful for Thy wondrous love,
For hope to dwell with Thee above.

O God, protect our homes and land,
From cruel war's destroying hand;
O Dove of Peace unfold thy wing,
Let thankful praise forever ring;
O Wealth, do not from us withhold
The gifts that Nature would unfold;
May peace be ours where e'er we go,
Our lives more sweet and richer grow.

The TREASURE of COCOS ISLAND

The Romantic History of a Pirate Hoard on an Island in the Pacific

By WALTER NOBLE BURNS

Copyright, 1911, by W. G. CHAPMAN

THE good bark Hesperus will spread her white wings at Eagle Harbor, Wash., in a few weeks and sail away across the blue Pacific into the heart of the most fascinating romance of all pirate story.

Capt. Frederick Hackett, in command of the vessel, claims to be the only man in all the world who knows the secret of the buried treasure of Cocos island. He plans on this expedition to lift the vast wealth plundered by sea rovers in the early part of the last century and hidden on the island in a cave, the exact location of which has been lost and for which adventurers have sought in vain for many years.

He is equipped with hydraulic mining machinery and has sufficient provisions to remain for a year if necessary on the island, which lies 300 miles off the western coast of Central America. That a score of former expeditions have proved failures does not discourage him. The treasure hunters who have gone before have depended upon pick and shovel. He will be the first prepared to use hydraulic mining methods. Earthquakes, he says, have shaken down landslides upon the treasure cave and changed the topography of the island. He will wash the earth away with streams of water powerful enough to uproot trees and burst rocks asunder. He is confident of success.

"When I return to the United States," says Captain Hackett, "I shall have the entire Cocos island treasure battened down beneath the hatches of the Hesperus."

The story of Cocos island makes Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island" seem true in comparison, so much stranger are the facts of this real romance of buried treasure than the dream-adventures, highly colored as they are, wrought by the imagination of the novelist. The marvelous tale has its beginning in the days when savage buccaneers, flying skull-and-crossbones at their mast-heads, harried the Spanish main and plundered tall galleons on the high seas. It fairly glitters from beginning to end with a fairy wealth of doubloons, pieces-of-eight, louis d'ors, moidores, sequins and double guineas. In its crowded episodes, blind-folded victims walk the plank, bronzed and turbaned cutthroats swarm over the bulwarks of captured ships and lay about them with cutlass and dragoon pistol, sea rogues are strung up at yard-arms, towns are sacked and looted, vessels are left to welter to their ruin in flame and smoke. It centers about a lonely island, palm-shadowed in tropic seas, whereon lies buried a treasure beyond the dreams of Monte Cristo. It rings with the clash of battle on the island beaches and with the death cries of the men murdered that they might never betray the treasure's secret hiding place. Finally it hands down from the far-off time of romance to prosaic modern days a great golden mystery which, like a siren beckoning through the years from purple southern seas, has lured men to ruin and death.

According to well-authenticated accounts, $23,000,000 in pirate treasure is buried on Cocos island. Of this sum $12,000,000 in money, bullion and plate is supposed to have been hidden in 1821 by Benito Bonito, the last of the great pirates who, even after Lafitte had passed away, kept alive upon the ocean the lawless traditions of L'Ollonois, Pierre Le Grand, Roche Braziliano, England, Hawkins and Sir Henry Morgan.

The remaining $11,000,000 is said to have been concealed in the same cave in 1838 by "Bugs" Thompson, one of Bonito's old pirate crew, who sailed away with the treasure from the harbor of Callao when the government authorities of Peru entrusted it aboard his vessel to save it from capture by revolutionists. It consisted of money from the public treasury, ingots of gold from Inca mines, plate, chalices, ornaments and golden statues belonging to the churches and cathedrals of Lima.

Captain Hackett is fourth in what may be christened the royal line of the holders of the golden secret of Cocos island. This secret has been handed down in a sort of lineal descent from Thompson. The former ocean freebooter for years carried about a chart of Cocos island drawn upon a piece of yellow parchment showing the exact location of the cave in which his own and Bonito's treasure hoard is hidden. He gave this chart to a fisherman of St. John's, N. F., named Keating, with full directions how to find the treasure. Thompson died under mysterious circumstances a little later and the suspicion grew that Keating killed him. However that may be, Keating sailed to Cocos island in 1844 with Captain Bogue, a seaman of sufficient means to finance the expedition. They found the treasure, but Bogue never returned. Keating said he was drowned in the surf while attempting to climb into a boat with his boots and pockets stuffed with gold. It is generally believed that Keating murdered him.

Keating made a second visit to the island four years later and again found the treasure. In both trips he is supposed to have brought away gold and jewels to the value of $150,000. He was prevented from recovering the entire treasure by mutinous crews on both voyages. Keating and Bogue are the only men, so far as is known, who ever recovered treasure from Cocos island.

Keating passed his secret on to the Hackett brothers, both seamen and his neighbors in St. John's. Keating had lost or destroyed the chart which he had obtained from Thompson. But he drew another chart which he gave to the Hacketts with explicit instructions how to find the cave. Keating died in 1883 and Capt. Thomas Hackett, the elder brother, sailed in 1885 on an expedition bound for Cocos, but the voyage ended with his death in Havana from yellow fever.

Capt. Frederick Hackett, who is about to undertake the latest Cocos island treasure hunt, has himself made two former unsuccessful expeditions.

Captain Hackett was formerly a whaling skipper. He has been a seaman all his life. He formerly sailed out of St. John's, Newfoundland, where he was born and grew to manhood. For the last ten years he has made his home in Vancouver, British Columbia, where he is engaged in the fishing trade. He is a bluff, ruddy, bearded old sea dog, hale and vigorous despite his three score years, and full of a boyish enthusiasm over a project that has been his one dream for a quarter of a century. So many expeditions to Cocos island have failed to find treasures that Captain Hackett has had difficulty in raising funds for his present expedition. He succeeded in getting together $100,000, and with this sum he has been able to provision his ship properly for a year's voyage and to take along hydraulic mining machinery, in which he is sure lies the only hope of ever unearthing the Cocos island treasure.

"I have stood over millions," said Captain Hackett recently as he sat by the skylight on the quarter-deck of the Hesperus and watched his sailors busy with final preparations for the expedition. "It was not lack of knowledge that caused me to fail in my two former voyages, but lack of equipment and supplies. I knew after my first expedition that picks and shovels would not do in Cocos, and that the only chance to get the treasure was to tear up the earth with streams of water thrown by a hydraulic mining engine. I have the latest hydraulic machinery with me now, and I shall set out with perfect faith in the successful outcome of my voyage.

"The landslide that now lies on top of the treasure cave probably occurred in the middle of the last century during the violent earthquakes that shook the western coast of South and Central America. Forest trees have grown upon it, and the appearance of that part of the island is vastly changed since the days of Bonito, Thompson and Keating. But with my bearings and chart and the instructions given me by Keating in many long interviews, I believe I can locate within a radius of 30 feet the spot beneath which the treasure is buried.

"I knew Keating from youth up," Captain Hackett continued. "He was a rough, ignorant man who had been a fisherman and a sailor all his life.

"It was because my brother and I befriended him when most everybody else looked askance at him that after advancing years made it pretty certain that he never would be able to voyage to Cocos again, he decided to divulge his secret to us. My brother and I owned the collier, Lord Dufferin, which was kept busy cruising up and down the coasts of Newfoundland and New Brunswick. On one of our voyages we took Keating with us. One stormy night as the old man sat by the table in the cabin over a glass of stiff grog, he first told us how to find the treasure. He began his strange story with an account of his first visit to Cocos with Captain Bogue.

"It was a hot day in June, he said, when he and Bogue landed. They struck off through the tropical jungle with Thompson's chart to guide them.

"The cave, Keating said, was 15 feet long by 12 feet broad, with a ceiling high enough to permit a man to stand upright. It was full of bars of gold and sacks of money. Many of the sacks bore the stamp of the Bank of Lima. There were many golden crucifixes, chalices and church ornaments. A statue of the Madonna of solid gold lay upon the floor. It was so heavy that Keating and Bogue together could not lift it, but could only push it along. The glitter of the piles of gold, Keating said, fairly made him reel and seemed to fill the cave with a ghostly radiance that at first struck him with awe.

"Bogue and Keating tied a few coins in a handkerchief and rowed back to their ship. They told the sailors they had found a spring of fresh water, but they were so excited with what they had seen that they acted unnaturally and the crew, may be, had suspicions of the truth, anyway. One word led to another, and Bogue and Keating told as little as possible, but it was enough for the crew, who made them promise to go shares.

"Right here Keating and Bogue began to play their game more shrewdly. They served out unlimited grog, as if to celebrate treasure trove. Long before night the whole outfit was gloriously drunk except Keating and Bogue, who took care to remain strictly sober. All hands turned in early to sleep off their potations and be ready to bring the treasure aboard next morning. As soon as they were asleep, Keating and Bogue slipped off to shore in a whaleboat. They beached their boat and again made their way to the cave. They filled their pockets with doubloons and pieces-of-eight and louis d'ors. Not satisfied with the money, Bogue, stuffed bar gold into his seaboots so that he could hardly walk for the weight. In launching the boat, Keating said Bogue went under and was drowned.

"Keating," Captain Hackett went on, "escaped to sea with his plunder, leaving the ship to its fate, and the men never were seen or heard of afterward. Four days later he was picked up by a Spanish coasting vessel which landed him safely near Punta Arenas. He slowly worked his way back to Newfoundland and deposited much money in the St. John's bank.

"Keating made a second voyage to Cocos island four years later. He told us of this adventure too. I wrote the tale out afterwards in Keating's own language as nearly as I could remember it."

The first treasure was buried on Cocos island by Benito Bonito a few months before his death in 1821. Bonito was born in 1788. He was a Spaniard of supposed gentle blood. His real identity is not known—Benito Bonito was an assumed name. He began his carreer as a lieutenant of a Spanish privateer. At the close of the Napoleonic wars he became mate of a Portuguese trading brig. In 1816 he quarreled with his captain, murdered him and seized the vessel. From that date he followed the life of a pirate. One of his first prizes taken in West Indian waters was an English slaver named the Lightning. Having cut her out of Matanzas, where she was lying at anchor one night, he burned his own brig and, transferring his flag to the British vessel, renamed her the Relampago, which is Spanish for chain-lightning. Most of the crew of the slaver were made to walk the plank. Two pleaded for their lives and offered to join Bonito. On this condition Bonito spared them. These two men were Thompson, known in Cocos island traditions as "Bugs," and a Frenchman named Chapelle, who also figures later in the story of Cocos island.

In the long, low, rakish Relampago, which could show a clean pair of heels to anything sailing the Spanish main, Bonito had a busy and prosperous career as a pirate. From Rio to the Bahamas he became a scourge and collected an immense amount of booty. When the Spanish government sent warships to hunt him, Bonito slipped around Cape Horn to fresh pastures in the Pacific.

The wealth of the churches of Spanish America is still considerable, but in the early days of the last century the richness of the plate and ornaments with which they were adorned was amazing. Bonito sacked cities and towns up and down the western coast, pillaging the cathedrals and laying tribute upon the citizens. His fame as a cruel and rapacious sea robber spread from the Horn to the Spanish settlements in California. In hunting for a spot in which to bury his growing treasure, he chanced upon Cocos island.

Cocos island is a volcanic speck in the Pacific ocean and belongs to Costa Rica. It is 300 miles off the Costa Rica coast, 500 miles from Panama, and 5 degrees north of the equator.

On the trip to Cocos island destined to be Bonito's last, a number of his men became dissatisfied. Having rowed their treasure to the cave they gathered on the beach in sullen temper, and soon came to open mutiny. They were tired of piracy. They demanded that the entire treasure be divided among them and that they be set upon the mainland and permitted to shift for themselves. Bonito refused. A pitched battle was fought with cutlass and pistol, and in the hand-to-hand engagement many were killed.

Bonito was victorious. With the mutiny suppressed, he sailed for the West Indies. Off Valparaiso, some one suggested a carouse ashore. Bonito gave his consent. Seventeen men were landed and Bonito agreed to lie off and on near a certain headland and wait for them. With the 17 were all that were left of the mutineers, including Thompson and Chapelle. But Bonito proved treacherous. He sailed away and left the recalcitrants to their fate. The 17 were recognized in Valparaiso as pirates and captured. They were convicted and all except Thompson and Chapelle were hanged. Thompson and Chapelle escaped by representing that they had been forced into Bonito's service and offered to guide a warship to Bonito's secret haunts among the West Indian islands.

The British government was just then planning a campaign of extermination against Bonito and his buccaneers. Sent to England for the purpose, Thompson and Chapelle guided a British corvette to one of their old chief's places of refuge in the Caribbean. Bonito's ship and crew were captured, but the grim old sea wolf, seeing ahead the loom of the gibbet on Execution dock, blew out his brains on his own quarter-deck.

Of the subsequent fate of Chapelle little is known.

Thompson drops out of sight until 1838 when he reappears as Captain Thompson, master of an English trading brig, the Mary Dear, which at the opening of the second chapter of the romance of Cocos island was lying in the harbor of Callao, Peru. A revolution was under way in Peru. Lima, the capital founded by Pizarro, was in a state of siege. Just before the beleaguering lines of the revolutionists were drawn about the city, the government authorities removed the money from the treasury, and from the churches the plate and ornaments dating back to the golden days of the conquest, and sent them for safe keeping to an old stone fortress at Callao. When the revolutionary army learned of the removal of the treasure, which was valued at $11,000,000, it marched on Callao with the determination of capturing the rich hoard. In this crisis, the commandant of the fortress, seeing an English flag fluttering from the peak of the Mary Dear, bethought him that under the folds of the union jack Lima's treasure would be safe. Captain Thompson gave his consent to the proposition. The treasure was soon stowed snugly under the Mary Dear's hatches, and four Peruvian soldiers were left on board to guard it.

The Peruvian authorities, of course, did not dream that Captain Thompson, who so bravely flaunted the English flag, had sailed in earlier days under the Jolly Roger with Benito Bonito's cut-throat crew. But with $11,000,000 battened down in his hold the old lawless spirit of his buccanneering days flamed up anew in Thompson, and he could not resist the temptation to turn robber again. In the night watches he and his men slit the throats of the guardians of the treasure, slipped their cables and put to sea.

The Mary Dear bore up for Cocos island and dropped anchor in Wafer bay. Some portion of the spoil was distributed among the crew. The remainder Thompson carried in 11 boatloads around the headland which separates Wafer bay from Chatham bay and there landed it upon the beach. He sent the boats back to the brig, keeping two men with him. With their assistance he carried the treasure into the tropical brush and stowed it in Benito Bonito's old treasure cave. Then he shot the two men.

He spread to the winds every stitch of canvas and headed the brig westward in a mad hurry to escape pursuit, but before the tall peaks of Cocos island had dropped below the horizon a Peruvian gunboat hove in sight and sent a shot acros his bow. When capture seemed inevitable, Thompson surrendered. Perhaps his cunning brain foresaw the immunity that must be granted to the sole possessor of the key to the hiding place of millions of dollars. At any rate he and the mate of the Mary Dear were spared that they might guide the Peruvians back to the Cocos island treasure. The other ten men of the Mary Dear's crew were strung up at the yard-arm.

The warship proceeded to Cocos island and Thompson and the mate were landed under an armed escort. But the desperado was a man of resource, and he and the mate contrived to escape and kept in hiding in the caves and undergrowth. For four days armed parties searched for them through the length and breadth of the island, pouring volleys into every piece of thick scrub or likely hiding place. At the end of this time, thinking that perhaps the fugitives had been killed by the broadsides with which the jungles had been raked, the captain of the gunboat sailed away.

The two marooned men eked out a precarious existence on berries and birds' eggs until a vessel called at Cocos for water. Passing themselves off as shipwrecked sailors, they were given passage to the mainland. The mate died soon afterwards of yellow fever at Punta Arenas. Thompson escaped. One story has it that he went to Samoa where he lived under the name of MacComber. According to another tale he made his way to England.

Nothing was heard of Thompson again until 1844, when on a voyage from England to Newfoundland he fell in with Keating, who was to become heir to the secret of the Cocos island treasure.

Soon after Thompson had confided his secret to Keating he died. His death aroused no suspicion at the time, but long afterwards in the light of events Keating was suspected of having murdered him. Keating took over Thompson's effects, including his map of Cocos island. By Thompson's death, Keating became the sole possessor in all the world of the secret of the Cocos island treasure. How Keating lifted the treasure on two voyages to the island already has been told.

THE TEA PENALTY.
A Strong Man's Experience.

Writing from a busy railroad town the wife of an employe of one of the great roads says:

"My husband is a railroad man who has been so much benefited by the use of Postum that he wishes me to express his thanks to you for the good it has done him. His waking hours are taken up with his work, and he has no time to write himself.

"He has been a great tea drinker all his life and has always liked it strong.

"Tea has, of late years, acted on him like morphine does upon most people. At first it soothed him, but only for an hour or so, then it began to affect his nerves to such an extent that he could not sleep at night, and he would go to his work in the morning wretched and miserable from the loss of rest. This condition grew constantly worse, until his friends persuaded him, some four months ago, to quit tea and use Postum.

"At first he used Postum only for breakfast, but as he liked the taste of it, and it somehow seemed to do him good, he added it to his evening meal. Then, as he grew better, he began to drink it for his noon meal, and now he will drink nothing else at table.

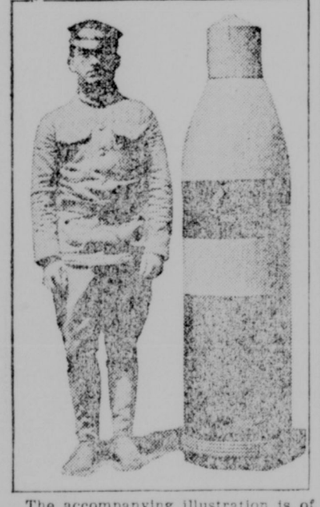
"His condition is so wonderfully improved that he could not be hired to give up Postum and go back to tea. His nerves have become steady and reliable once more, and his sleep is easy, natural and refreshing.

He owes all this to Postum, for he has taken no medicine and made no other change in his diet.

"His brother, who was very nervous from coffee-drinking, was persuaded by us to give up the coffee and use Postum and he also has recovered his health and strength." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.



Things Queer and Curious

Tree Dwelling of the Moro

Occidental visitors to the Philippines who penetrate into the interior are always much interested in the tree-dwellings which are constructed by some of the Moros. They are built of bamboo and other material, far above the ground, and are easily defended by their occupants against the attacks of other natives.

LARGEST OF PROJECTILES

The accompanying illustration is of more than ordinary interest from the fact that it shows the largest and heaviest projectile in the world, being the huge five-foot, armor-piercing shell fired from the United States government's great 16-inch rifle, which may be taken to the Panama canal. This giant shell and powerful gun are considered two of the most destructive and deadly engines of warfare in existence. The monster 16-inch rifle, the only one built so far, is now at the Sandy Hook proving grounds, and has only been fired a few times. The huge shell of steel can be hurled a distance of 20 miles or more, and weighs 2,400 pounds. The powder charge is nearly 500 pounds. The cost of firing one shot reaches in the neighborhood of $1,000. It is not probable that this type of gun will be used, but rather the 14 inch, for the main coast defenses of the Panama canal. This formidable and long range weapon, though capable of firing so tremendous a projectile, is too costly, and fires too slowly for modern warfare.

RECORD IN PIANO PLAYING

The Paris newspapers record a feat of endurance on the part of one Thorpe, described as a native of Bohemia, who played the piano for 30 hours and 15 minutes without stopping. It seems that there is a record even in this kind of folly, and that it was formerly held by Mr. Waterbury, whose performance extended over 28½ hours. The report states that Thorpe was fed and given stimulants during the entertainment.

CONVERSES WITH ANIMALS

Charles Kellogg of California, who, if not a nature-faker, is one of the most remarkable human beings of all time, arrived at Cambridge, Mass., recently from Paris to confer with professors from Harvard's department of science, confident that he could convince them of his ability to converse with animals. Mr. Kellogg has just returned from Europe, where he gave demonstrations of his unique power before professors of the universities of Paris and Berlin. According to Mr. Kellogg, he has accomplished in reality during a life spent in the wilds of the Sierra Nevada mountains in California what the genius of Kipling makes Mowgli accomplish during a childhood passed in the tropical jungles. But Kellogg has for friends only the animals of the temperate American west. He knows not the language of the tropical monkey, though he has often talked "bear" with the grizzlies of the Sierra Nevadas. Crickets, squirrels, lizards and rattlesnakes are some of the other animals whose languages Mr. Kellogg speaks fluently. Says Mr. Kellogg:

"It was by years of constant observation and associating of sounds with actions that I mastered the 15 animal languages I am familiar with. I began on domestic chickens and gradually extended my study to include such wild animals and reptiles as the bear, the lizard and the rattlesnake. Using a system of hieroglyphics modeled upon the modern Chinese system, I have compiled a dictionary of the language of the ordinary brown or hearth cricket, which has the most highly developed language of any of the animals I am familiar with, though I have reason to suspect the monkeys are superior in this respect. From my dictionary I find there are 27 elemental words or sounds, and 85 other words made up of various combinations of the original 27, a cumulative system not unlike that of the Germans. The number of words or sounds in other animal languages I am familiar with varies from 12 to 95."

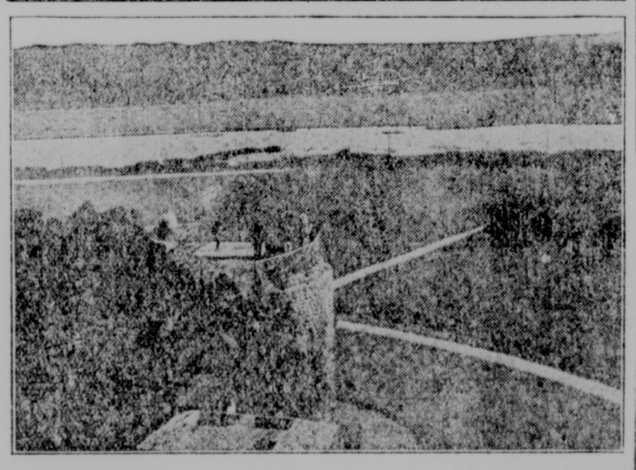
Although Mr. Kellogg admits that his ability to interpret the enunciations of animals is the result of long and arduous study, he insists that his ability to make himself understood, to imitate the sounds of these animals, is God-given. He says he can without the least difficulty reproduce any sound that comes from an animal's throat. He has a peculiarly constructed palate, no tonsils, and the cord connecting the teeth with the lower lip is entirely missing, but he has been assured by the most noted specialists that there is nothing abnormal about his throat and vocal cords. They are at a loss to account for his strange gift.

MYSTERIOUS AFRICAN LAKE

Lieutenant Graetz, a German officer is making his way across the African continent from the Indian ocean to the Atlantic in a motor boat, his chief object being the exploration of the mysterious Bangweolo lake, which discharges into the Zambesi river.

This sheet of water, except at the point where the Zambesi river leaves it, is surrounded with miles of reeds, and no white man has ever sailed its surface. The natives tell curious tales of what is to be found within its swampy enclosures. On the islands which, they aver, stud the lake, are to be found colossal elephants and tall giraffes, while in the waters sea-serpents and other strange and terrible creatures are concealed. From the surface of the lake itself declare the natives, hot springs sprout into the air, and pestilential winds sweeping across the marshes carry death and destruction to all living things.

Of the few natives who have ever ventured out upon the Bangweolo lake in their small frail canoes, none have ever returned to tell the tale of their adventures. Lieutenant Graetz thinks that unknown species of animal and marine life may possibly exist in this hitherto unexplored region, and it is to test this supposition that he has started out in a thirty-foot boat fitted with a five horse-power petrol motor to cross the African continent.



FRENCH FISH GO ON A JAG

An unusual sight was witnessed at Frontignan, France, recently. The ponds of Eaux Blanches and the Midi Canal were covered with fish floating about on the surface in a helpless and altogether inexplicable manner. The customs officials were the unwitting cause of this phenomenon. They had seized 66,000 gallons of "doctored" Spanish wine at the frontier station and disposed of it by emptying it into the canal, with disastrous effects on the fish. The fish could be easily caught with the hand and the local fishermen were quick to take advantage of their helpless state.

WORMS HELD UP TRAFFIC

A van conveying about five hundredweight of worms, intended for baiting, was overturned on the Boulevard Sebastopol, Paris. The worms swarmed over the tramway lines and rendered all vehicular traffic impossible until they had been cleared away.

Tee on Charlemagne's Tower

The spread of the game of golf on the continent of Europe has brought about some queer conditions. On the grounds of the Hardelot Golf club in France, for instance, the first tee is situated on the top of one of the towers of a castle built by Charlemagne in 811. Part of the castle has been modernized to serve as a club house.

BABY'S TERRIBLE SUFFERING

"When my baby was six months old, his body was completely covered with large sores that seemed to itch and burn, and cause terrible suffering. The eruption began in pimples which would open and run, making large sores. His hair came out and finger nails fell off, and the sores were over the entire body, causing little or no sleep for baby or myself. Great scabs would come off when I removed his shirt.

"We tried a great many remedies, but nothing would help him, till a friend induced me to try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment but a short time before I could see that he was improving, and in six weeks' time he was entirely cured. He had suffered about six weeks before we tried the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, although we had tried several other things, and doctors, too. I think the Cuticura Remedies will do all that is claimed for them, and a great deal more." (Signed) Mrs. Noble Tubman, Dodson, Mont., Jan. 28, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 18 K, Boston.

Weak Heart

Many people suffer from weak hearts. They may experience shortness of breath on exertion, pain over the heart, or dizzy feelings, oppressed breathing after meals or their eyes become blurred, their heart is not sufficiently strong to pump blood to the extremities, and they have cold hands and feet, or poor appetite because of weakened blood supply to the stomach. A heart tonic and alterative should be taken which has no bad after-effect. Such is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which contains no dangerous narcotics nor alcohol.

The Ingredients, as attested under oath, are Stone root (Collinsonia Canadensis), Bloodroot (Sanguinaria Canadensis), Golden Seal root (Hydrastis Canadensis), Queen's root (Stillingia Sylvatica), Black Cherrybark (Prunus Virginiana), Mandrake root (Podophyllum Peltatum), with triple refined glycerine, prepared in a scientific laboratory in a way that no druggist could imitate.

This tonic contains no alcohol to shrink up the red blood corpuscles; but, on the other hand, it increases their number and they become round and healthy. It helps the human system in the constant manufacture of rich, red blood. It helps the stomach to assimilate or take up the proper elements from the food, thereby helping digestion and curing dyspepsia, heart-burn and many uncomfortable symptoms, stops excessive tissue waste in convalescence from fevers; for the run-down, anæmic, thin-blooded people, the "Discovery" is refreshing and vitalizing. Stick to this safe and sane remedy, and refuse all "just as good" medicines offered by the druggist who is looking for a larger profit. Nothing but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will do you half as much good.

THANKSGIVING DAY; ITS APPRECIATIONS.

Unthankfulness Is Dangerous. The Thankful Are Blessed.

Pastor Russell Says That All Should Join With the Psalmist David: "Oh, Give Thanks Unto the Lord, For He Is Good; His Mercy Endureth Forever."—Psalm cxxxvi, 1.

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 20th.—Pastor Russell of the London and Brooklyn Tabernacles preached twice here today. We give a synopsis of his discourse on Thanksgiving from the text above quoted.

With more cause than ever for thankfulness, Christendom is losing the sentiment of gratitude to God, and Thanksgiving Day is to many merely a holiday. In religious matters in general, Christendom is rapidly approaching the conditions prophesied by St. Paul, when men would preserve the form of godliness but deny its power. (II Timothy iii. 5.) The cause of this the Pastor traced to the increasing intelligence of our day which, along religious lines, has cut loose from the Bible and proportionately cut loose from the true God.

Higher Critics, not content with the rejection of the creeds of the Dark Ages, have attacked the Bible, prejudiced against it by the inconsistencies of the creeds. Thinking to render assistance to humanity and to the Truth, they have for fifty years been quietly and successfully engaged in undermining the faith of Christendom in the Bible as a Divine Revelation. They claim for themselves a similar inspiration to that of the Apostles, while they ridicule the thought that holy Prophets of old spake and wrote as they were moved by the Holy Spirit of God—II Peter i. 21.

Evolution and Higher Criticism.

Rejecting the Bible as a special Divine Revelation from a personal God, the next step of the Higher Critics was an easy one—to proclaim nature the god and creator of all things—an impersonal god. Thus they were just in line for Darwin's theory of Evolution—that nature is god and work is the law of nature—the survival of the fittest—and the fittest the most pugnacious and overbearing, and selfish and scheming.

Thus we have gradually reached the place where the masses of Christendom doubt the existence of a personal God, and are inclined to believe in a blind, brute force—a nature-god—and to hope that by some process of evolution their children's children, in the far hereafter, may attain to something better than the present; but they see not even the assurance of a future life for themselves, any more than for the brute creation.

Unthankful, Unholy, Covenant-Breakers.

This explains to us why the masses feel little interest in Thanksgiving Day, except as a holiday. They have lost their God—the living and true God—a Heavenly Father. Under these circumstances, declared Pastor Russell, it is not strange that they are unbelievers—that Thanksgiving is becoming a mere formality, that the churches are nearly empty and the prisons overflowing and many of the world pleasure-mad. St. Paul's words, "without God and having no hope in the world," surely fit the majority of Christendom today. These conditions breed the reverse of thankfulness, namely dissatisfaction. Thus we see the world enjoying blessings as never before, and discontented as never before. The opening of the eyes of understanding to the fact that our race is one, and that the blessings of earth belong equally to all, is now coming to men. These are great truths. With this knowledge should come an appreciation of the Divine supervision of the earth's affairs, and a knowledge of the Divine intention to rectify all the inequalities and inequities of the present time in a future Age.

Since the desire of all mankind is happiness, our college men are unphilosophical in proclaiming a theory which is destroying happiness, and which threatens shortly to destroy our civilization through anarchy.

What Unthankfulness Costs.

We may be sure that unthankfulness today will bring upon man, naturally, a great curse—a great calamity. We see it coming! Unbelief in God means more trust in self—means more discontent—means strife to attain the things coveted—means anarchy—means the disruption of our present social system, as the Word of God foretells. (Daniel xii, 1.) Read at your convenience the Apostle's argument on this subject.—Romans i.

The silver lining to the dark cloud is in the Divine promise of rescue, after the world shall have learned a lesson for eternity. The Scriptures assure us that the time of trouble and anarchy will be followed by the establishment of Messiah's glorious Kingdom—the binding of Satan—the letting loose of every good influence and the true knowledge of God—the rising of the Sun of Righteousness with healing in its beams. That glorious time must be waited for.

POINTER ON ADVERTISING.

Merchant Devises Clever Card System Which Brings Local Trade.

A merchant of Oklahoma has put into operation a clever advertising scheme for building up home trade which he reports a valuable one, and, according to him, without any drawbacks. It is as follows:

He prepares a large number of cards, which are numbered consecutively. A set of these he gives to each customer who desires them. These ten cards the customer is supposed to distribute, and the persons who receive them are to return them to the store. If they do so and purchase $5 worth of goods at the time of returning them the party first receiving the cards is entitled to receive $5 worth of goods free of charge.

The merchant claims for the scheme that he secures a valuable and accurate mailing list; he gets advertising matter distributed free of charge; he gets strong recommendation for his store at the hands of his customers, even though it be for self interest alone; he runs no risks, for the cards must be returned and placed on file after purchases before the gift is made; an endless chain feature is established thus which perpetuates itself for a considerable time, for when one customer sees another getting something for nothing through those efforts he is inclined to try for himself.

In reply to the wonder expressed that he could afford to give $5 away out of the profits on $50 worth of business he replies that he has not found it necessary to do so very often. Comparatively few customers are able to find ten others who will buy $5 worth of merchandise and present the card. But almost everybody will distribute them, and the returns are considerable. If but one comes and buys it is a good and legitimate gain for the merchant. If four come, it is good; if nine come, so much the better, and if ten come, then he is willing to pay that much for the sake of the gain. He figures that, instead of having to pay $5 for every $50 taken in he pays but about 50 cents. He regards this as reasonable enough.

VALUE OF STREET TREES.

They Attract Desirable Settlers and Increase Value of Property.

In many places where streets have been well planted with trees it has been noted that it attracted desirable settlers and increased the value of all property. One who has had experience in the matter states:

"As we have gone on from year to year the hearty and general support of public sentiment to the new regime has been a constant surprise to its promoters. What it has meant to the values of city property would be difficult to determine, but we do know that the actual advance in the meantime has been very decided and that in no previous time have there been so many families finding homes in our town. But the increased enjoyment of the people at large by living in a generally beautiful place is the greatest compensation for the little effort and cost. For the better enjoyment and better material prosperity in town or country there are few subjects more worthy of our consideration than that of better methods of making our country roadsides enjoyable and our city streets more beautiful."

Home Trade Hints.

Only by experience can one learn how to get the people to coming.

The advertising must fit the store, and the store must fit the advertising.

The new advertiser should remember he doesn't close his store just because he has a poor week.

Keep plugging and master the subject. Get an advertiser who "knows" to criticise your circulars.

The man who sends out a cheap circular or two and does not get results must not be disappointed. Perhaps the third, fourth, fifth or eighth will pay the cost of all the previous ones.

Growth of Public Playgrounds.

In the United States there are 137 cities of a population of 5,000 or over that maintain playgrounds largely or entirely supported by public taxation. Of thirty-nine cities and towns that have voted upon this question thirty-seven have voted for playgrounds.

The Mail Order Business.

In a recent issue of Puck, H. E. Porter hits off in witty rhyme the wholesale way in which the "hull family" is sending out of town for things of all sorts. While this may be fun for the reader, it's sad for the home merchant. The verses should make all residents outside of the big cities sit up and think:

Ma got her new back hair today,
I saw it come by mail.
And sister had some blue sachet,
A locket and a veil.
My grandma got a catnip ball,
Likewise a liver pad.
And ma bought sis a talkin' doll
By answerin' a ad.

Each day ma reads the magazines,
Tears off the dotted line:
"Send catalogue of limousines."
"Please send me Booklet Nine."
"I saw your ad. in Woman's Friend"
"Please send the bill to dad."
"Send 'How to Do the Grecian Head.'"
"Send booklet as per ad."

We do our marketin' by mail,
And pa buys groceries,
My aunt gets samples by the bale
And sells back all she gets,
My grandma sent most fifty cents
For somethin' make her young.
Sis learned to skin from ten lessons,
And, gosh, how she has skun!

Our photographs we got from Maine,
Our food from Battle Creek,
Grand Rapids sent our chairs of cane
And we send stamps each week.
The dotted lines are great to tear,
The catalogues come fast,
And, rain or shine, oh, we don't care
While advertisements last!

ONE TOWN'S TRIUMPH

With a Population of Only 1,500 It Has City Ownership.

EVERY CITIZEN A BOOSTER.

All Assisted In Aiding Pond Creek, Okla., to Publicly Conduct Water and Lighting Plants, Making It the Best Kept Town In the State.

Sixteen years ago the first street lights of Pond Creek, 300 miles southwest of Kansas City, in Grant county, Okla., were the campfires of the settlers, says the Kansas City Star. That was the night of the opening, when thousands of home seekers rushed madly across the prairie. The 4,000 or more persons, mostly men, who stopped on the town site of Pond Creek were not disposed to give the street lighting question even as much as a thought. They were interested in finding homes, establishing a business and supplying the immediate necessities of life.

Sixteen years after the opening a visitor stopped in Pond Creek several days. His first night there was a revelation. Here was a town of 1,500 inhabitants enjoying everything that he enjoyed in the city. There was an electric light at every corner, and on his way downtown he passed comfortable homes, surrounded by groves of trees and large lawns, kept green by the city water. On reaching Main street the visitor noticed several groups of men talking in front of the postoffice and the two drug stores. They were quiet enough. No bands were marching down the street, but why was the street so brilliantly lighted?

"Is there anything going on here tonight?"

There would be a wild west show in town tomorrow, the Pond Creeker told him.

"But you don't put up lights like those for a show?"

"Not unless the show comes to stay, and then maybe it might claim them."

The city man had just one more question:

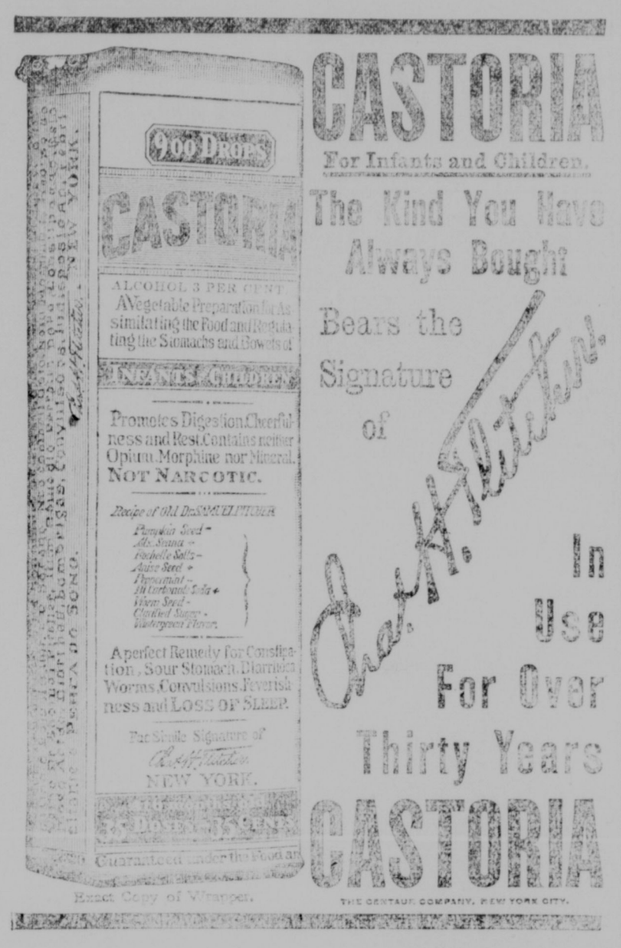
"How do you do it with only 1,500 population to pay the bill?" he asked.

"Municipal ownership."

The city man stood in the middle of the street. In front of him were six great electric arches, reaching from one sidewalk to the other. Each arch contained twenty-five high power incandescent lights, while from the store windows others lighted the sidewalks. Merchants down the street were washing off the cement walks with hose sprays.

The next day a business man explained how Pond Creek could afford these things—electric lights and waterworks—that much older and larger places feared to dream of, much less enjoy.

About six years ago the question of fire protection and water supply was agitated by a few of the progressive business men. The town council called a special election, and the people authorized a bond issue for $25,000. A pumping station was built, wells were sunk, mains laid, and a steel pressure tank was placed in a corner of the public park on Main street. Three years ago a second bond issue of $15,000 was voted, but only $3,000 of it was used, to extend the water mains. The entire water system is controlled by a committee appointed by the council, and the service is both adequate and excellent.



A promoter obtained a franchise for an electric light plant. He planted a few poles and strung wires on them, but the old gasoline lamps on Main street continued to imitate electric arc lights. The promoter had failed, and the city was forced to assume the control of its second public utility. With the remainder of the $15,000 bond issue the council purchased the promoter's poles and with them his franchise, that still had some twenty years to run. An electric light plant was built. It has been in operation for several months, and the entire town is lighted. Now the business men and the council are discussing a plan to unite the water and electric light plants that both may be operated from one power unit.

"Who is responsible for the municipal ownership idea? Surely some citizen took the lead in advocating these things."

The business men who were asked this question didn't know that any one man in Pond Creek could be given credit without detracting from the credit that others should receive. Every man was a booster, they explained, and, while the mayors and councilmen really did the work, the people encouraged them, with the result that Pond Creek became the best lighted town in northern Oklahoma. Municipal ownership was the agency and united energy the cause.

Attractiveness of Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo., has set an example which every American city may emulate—an example of what can be done after a city becomes great and an illustration of what should be done early in the history of a city that expects to become great. At a cost of many millions of dollars she has established an elaborate system of parks and parked boulevards which constitute perhaps the most attractive municipal improvement in the United States, and as a consequence Kansas City is the most desirable place of residence in this respect upon the continent.

CLARENCE HARDESTY, B. & O. FIREMAN, KILLED

Was Struck by Passenger Train No. 7 Sunday Night at Deer Park.

Clarence Hardesty, aged twenty-two years, Baltimore & Ohio fireman on the Deer Park helping engine, was struck and instantly killed by the engine drawing westbound passenger train No. 7 Sunday night at the Deer Park Hotel station.

Mr. Hardesty, a most exemplary young man and had been engaged for more than a year as one of the firemen employed on the helper and it is presumed that he was in the act of crossing the westbound track to get a drink of water at a fountain located nearby when he was run down by the passenger train.

His remains were brought to Oakland where they were prepared for burial at the local undertaking rooms and later shipped to Deer Park where the funeral occurred Tuesday afternoon, the services being conducted by the Rev. C. W. Hudson, pastor of the Loch Lynn Heights Baptist church.

Mr. Hardesty was married about April 1st to a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Glotfelty.

Young Men's Brotherhood.

A "Young Men's Brotherhood" has been organized in Friendsville, this county. There are ten charter members, including young men from the best families in town. A hall has been rented and will be equipped for the use of the club. The purpose of this movement is to cultivate the moral, intellectual and social elements in the young people. To this end a reading room and library will be placed in the hall. There will be a men's bible class organized to meet once every week. Rev. O. C. Dean will have charge of this class and will take up the study of the "Life of Jesus Christ" as contained in the Gospels. All the men in the town are urged to attend this class. The Brotherhood held an oyster supper Saturday evening, Dec. 9th, which was a success. The support of the citizens of our town and those in the surrounding towns are asked in the movement towards developing the young people.

New Judges Take Office.

The first session of the Orphans' Court for Garrett county with the recently elected judges presiding was held on Tuesday. Judge Henry Kamp having been designated Chief Judge by Governor Crothers, occupied the central chair in the court room with Judges Moon and Harvey as his associates.

ONE BROTHER ACCIDENTALLY AND FATALLY SHOOTS ANOTHER

Gun Presumed to Be Unloaded Exploded and Brought Instant Death.

Another fatal and accidental shooting with the gun that was supposed to be unloaded took place last Thursday afternoon about three o'clock at the home of Stephen W. Friend, near Sang Run, when his son Lenzie, aged 19 years, shot his younger brother, Matthias, aged 16 years, inflicting a wound that brought almost instant death.

The former, in company with another young man had been in the woods rabbit hunting and had returned home. In the yard surrounding the house young Friend was met by his brother who was recounting incidents of the hunt when he drew his gun up for some purpose and touched the trigger, the entire charge of shot entering his brother's side just beneath his heart, death ensuing almost immediately.

The funeral of the young man took place Saturday.

PRIZES TAKEN.

Allegany and Garrett Farmers Exhibit Prize-Winning Products.

The Maryland State Fair held at the Fifth Regiment Armory in Baltimore, under the auspices of the Maryland Horticultural Society, has been the greatest event the State has ever known as an exhibit of the products of our soil. The immense building was crowed with the best the State can produce and from every section of it. Allegany and Garrett counties were well represented and carried off some of the best prizes.

Jesse Warnick, of New Germany, Garrett county, had two exhibits of oats, "White Cluster" and "Great Dane." These oats weighed 42 pounds to the bushels and won the sweepstakes prize, a silver cup valued at $25. Henry H. Fazenbaker, from his Jackson farm, took the second prize on wheat.

The exhibits of apples was a revelation to all who saw them—more than five hundred displays were made, and the competition keen. The committee of the Farmers Festival held at Lonaconing in October selected some of them and made the entry and carried off six prizes, as follows: Benj. F. Green, Herman H. Robeson and Wm. H. Jacobs, of Garrett county, and Fred Sloan Orchard Co. of Lonaconing, J. M. Rice and J. A. Stegmier, of near Cumberland. Below is appended a more complete list of the prize winners.

These results are the most tangible evidences of the wonderful fertility of the soil of these two mountain counties of the state, and will stimulate our farmers and orchardists to greater efforts and better results in the future. Now is the time to prepare and plan for next year. Every farmer should join the Allegany and Garrett county agricultural society and reap the benefit of the united effort. A campaign of education along advanced lines is the aim of the society—backed by an executive committee selected for that purpose. But the committee, no matter how willing to bring good results, must have the hearty and united support of those closely interested.

The following is the list of the prize winners at the Maryland Week Exposition at Baltimore. All of the said products were on exhibition at the Lonaconing Farmers Festival, Oct. 20-21. The committee in charge of the festival had them properly packed and shipped to Baltimore and placed on exhibition.

Apples—Prizes of $2 each were awarded the following: H. H. Robeson, W. H. Jacobs, Benj F. Green, Fred Sloan Orchard Co., Lonaconing.

Red Wheat—Mountain district, A. H. Fazenbaker, Lonaconing, second prize.

Spring Oats—First prize, sweepstakes on White oats, Jesse Warnick, New Germany, $25 cup.

The following farmers from Garrett county were also awarded prizes:

Apples—Ridder Bros., Oakland; H. V. Miller, Oakland, each $2.

Turnips—F. E. Bishop, Friendsville, second prize, $1.

Yellow Corn—Third prize, W. T. Stanton, Grantsville; fourth prize, John E. Shaffer, Oakland.

Red Wheat—Mountain District, first prize, W. T. Stanton, Grantsville.

White Wheat—Mountain district, first prize, M. H. Frankhauser.

Spring Oats—Second prize, W. T. Stanton, Grantsville.

Silver Hill Buckwheat—First prize, J. A. Shaffer, Oakland.

Timothy Seed—First prize, W. T. Stanton, Grantsville.

Ragtime musicians may argue in turn that it was only a crazy nation which would go mad over Parsifal, for everything in this uncertain world depends on the point of view.

Jesus Was Poet of Human Soul

By Rev. J. EDWARD KIRBYE

Pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church, Des Moines, Iowa

Robert Browning has sometimes been called the poet of the soul. This has been said of him because he analyzes, sees deeply, feels intensely, loves romantically and interprets wisely; but I am sure that Jesus Christ is a greater poet of the human soul. I say poet, because there is a distinct literary charm, an intellectual height, an imaginative quality, a wise insight into the soul of man, in this message which he is speaking.

He knew men, and that statement from one of the sacred writers has a great deal of meaning in it. He knew God more intensely than others. He may have lacked education. He may have associated with the schools in Jerusalem and imbibed their culture, but no one ever emphasized more deeply, felt more intensely, interpreted more wisely than did Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ is analyst of the moods of the soul and offers a solution to its problems. He reveals to man the heart of the divine.

He is not a philosopher in the ordinary acceptance of this term. A philosopher is one who is skilled in sophistry, in science, one who looks upon reason as the infallible guide, who schools himself to think and practice only at the dictates of cool reason. That is the meaning of the word philosophy. Jesus did not forsake his reason, but in the sense that we understand philosophy. He did not aim at this achievement, but he did believe that he saw the moods of the soul of man and believed that there were highways of progress out and beyond the reaches of the stoic epicurean philosophy of his day and he challenged these to an intellectual combat. You cannot fail to see his underlying principles in this sermon. He had thought them out carefully, had seen them in their relations and believed fully on their wisdom and practicability.

Jesus is not a scientist. A scientist is one who amasses knowledge, severely tests it, co-ordinates and systematizes it, until he reduces it to an accuracy, especially with reference to the laws of nature. He is not particularly interested in humanity, excepting as this humanity serves his good. Jesus did not do that. He had no laboratory, made no experimental tests.

His only logic was truth in all its relations, as it loomed large upon the horizon of his soul. Jesus was the post-thinker in God's out-of-doors. The human heart and men in human relations engaged his thought and attention. The altruistic motive was always uppermost. And yet, while Jesus was not distinctly a scientist, his psychology is in harmony with the most modern interpretations of the moods of the human mind, and some of the principles of modern pedagogy are very forcibly expressed in the sermon on the mount.

Jesus is not a theologian in the ordinary acceptance of that term, nor in the acceptance of the term as it was known in Jerusalem in his day. The theologian emphasized the value of law, the logic of the law and the logic of theory. Jesus did not do that. Jesus said very emphatically that man was much greater than the law, and much more important than theory; that law was made for man and not man for law, and out of this value he placed upon the human soul he reconstructed a thought of the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man and the essential value of his own personality, which makes his doctrine unique. But human interest was never sacrificed to the interest of a theory or an ecclesiastical proposition.

It is not of Christ, then, the philosopher, the teacher, the scientist or the theologian, but the Christ who was interested in the multitude because he believed that he had remedies for their ills, healing for their sicknesses, life instead of death, hope instead of sorrow. I like this thought of Matthew in introducing Jesus to us in this wonderful sermon: "And seeing the multitude, he went up into a mountain." The multitude interested him. They were upon his heart. They had left their cares, their tasks, their anxieties, their bickerings and had come to hear him.

Love's Magnetism.

Love begets love. It is a process of induction. Put a piece of iron in the presence of an electrified body, and that piece of iron for a time becomes electrified. It is changed into a temporary magnet in the mere presence of a permanent magnet; and as long as you leave the two side by side they are both magnets alike. Remain side by side with him who loved us and gave himself for us, and you, too, will become a permanent magnet, a permanently attractive force; and, like him you will draw all men unto you; like him, you will be drawn unto all men. That is the inevitable effect of love. Any man who fulfills that cause must have that effect produced in him.—Henry Drummond.

Real Things.

What the world needs today is less so-called religion, and more real righteousness, less so-called science and more real conscience, less creed and ritual and outward ceremonial and more real Christianity.—Rev. H. H. Van Meter, Congregationalist, Chicago.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

TWELVE DOLLARS A MINUTE

That Sum In Good American Coin Is Paid Into the Coffers of Uncle Sam by Peoria Distilleries.

As we are seeking to promote temperance and the banishment of liquor from our midst, and are doing so (as far as adding "anti-saloon" territory is concerned) it might be of interest to look over some figures given by a secular paper, in regard to the revenue derived by the government from this traffic the past year; and from where it came, writes S. H. McMillan of Effingham, Ill., in the United Presbyterian. We quote from the article at the beginning. "The four leading distilleries of Peoria, according to a rough estimate, pay into the coffers of Uncle Sam every minute of the day and night, the year round, the sum of $12, in good, hard, American coin; according to figures made public by the commissioner of internal revenue. Illinois and Peoria still continue to lead the list of states and cities in the matter of internal revenue collections; the nearest competitor to it being New York, but is nine millions behind it. There is no other revenue district in the world except New York that anywhere nearly approaches Peoria on import duties. The total collections for the United States for the year ending June 30, 1911, was $322,526,269, as against approximately $290,000,000 for the preceding year. This is the greatest year in the history of the government since the internal revenue law was passed. The previous "high-water" mark being in 1866, when $310,000,000 was collected, but this was in time of extraordinary needs, and resulted from extraordinary legislation.

By states the leaders stand as follows: Illinois, $553,000,000; New Nork, $444,000,000; Indiana, $331,000, Terre Haute being the center of the distilling business in Indiana. There are four internal revenue districts in Illinois, and the revenue offices give the standing as follows: Peoria, $29,998,092; Chicago, $12,642,005; Pekin, $10,048,068, and the district comprising the balance of the state, $628,619. The detailed figures by collection districts is as follows: First Illinois, $12,642,005; Fifth Illinois, $29,998,092; Eighth Illinois, $10,255,600; Thirteenth Illinois, $628,619; Sixth Indiana, $11,048,068; Seventh Indiana, $20,085,315; Third Iowa, $573,919; Fourth Iowa, $693,973; First Michigan, $6,033,491; Fourth Michigan, $974,094; First Missouri, $10,524,713; Sixth Missouri, $1,945.96; First Wisconsin, $8,383,128; Second Wisconsin, $1,199,325. These states adjoining Illinois reported the following sums: Indiana, $31,133,328.24; Iowa, $1,267,893.29; Michigan, $7,007,585.96; Missouri, $12,470,680.53; Nebraska, $2,773,308.66; Wisconsin, $9,582,454.31.

These figures from the government reports tell their own story and from them you may draw your own conclusions. The devil's business seems to prosper, notwithstanding the persecution and the prosecutions that have been brought against it.

Physical Condition of Drunkards.

As a rule male drunkards live longer than female. Seventy-five per cent of all chronic "alcoholics" have fatty degeneration of the liver. Many have brown atrophy of the heart. The kidneys are never normal. Fifty per cent of the drunkards have gastritis. By the coating of the tongue and the character of the tremor or length of a spree can be accurately determined. The drunkard often "sees things," but rarely has his sense of smell impaired. Patients who drink absinthe are particularly liable to convulsions, according to the report of Dr. Lambert, of Bellevue hospital, New York, who has made a special study of thousands of drunkards during his connection with that famous institution.

"In All Thy Ways."

"In all thy ways acknowledge him." In all thy ways. In thy worship. In thy study of his word. In thy intercourse with his people. In thy traffic with the world. In thy business and in thy recreation. At thy meals. In thy correspondence. In thy reading. In thy dress. What! in these petty matters? Yes; in all thy ways, Thinkest thou that God will have no word for thee on such topics? Be undeceived. Thou shalt find a revelation of the will of God for every one of thy paths. There is no need for thee ever to let go his hand. Not a single hair of thy head receives its ailment without him. Why, then, should a single step be taken without him?—Rev. George Bowen.

FATE AND THE FLETCHERS

Intervention That Made It Certain Hour for Senator's Death Had Not Struck.

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher of Florida sought his berth one night on a sleeping car on the way south from Washington. Pulling back the curtains of a lower nine, he saw that his bed was already occupied.

"Hi, there!" called the senator, shaking the stranger by the shoulder.

The sleeper awoke and protested angrily.

"My name's Fletcher," explained the statesman, "and this is my berth."

"You've got nothing on me," answered the other. "My name's Fletcher, and this is my berth."

"My full name is Duncan U. Fletcher," the senator elaborated.

"So's mine," agreed the intruder.

"Ah, I see," said the senator, politely. "There must have been a mistake in reserving the same berth for two men of the same name. "I'll go into the next sleeping car."

The stranger, by this time, was fully awake, and proceeded to apologize, and to offer to give up the berth. This the senator would not do, but went into the car ahead, and found a place to sleep.

An hour later the train was wrecked. The car in which the stranger occupied the lower nine fell through a trestle, and that Fletcher was killed. The senator's car was not damaged at all.—Popular Magazine.

Youth and Age.

"The difference between youth and age was never so well put," said Rev. C. W. Penlow, in an address at an Ocean Grove beach meeting, "as by a playwright who wrote:

"'Youth, which is forgiven everything, forgives itself nothing. Age, which forgives itself everything, is forgiven nothing.'"

A Question of Art.

"Was that play you speak of highly artistic and poetical?" asked the girl who poses.

"'I don't believe it could have been," replied the girl who is frank. "'I understood and enjoyed every word of it."

Some men have a well-seated prejudice against giving up their place to a woman in a crowded car.

Faint?

Have you weak heart, dizzy feelings, oppressed breathing after meals? Or do you experience pain over the heart, shortness of breath on going up-stairs and the many distressing symptoms which indicate poor circulation and bad blood? A heart tonic, blood and body-builder that has stood the test of over 40 years of cures is

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

The heart becomes regular as clock-work. The red blood corpuscles are increased in number—and the nerves in turn are well fed. The arteries are filled with good rich blood. That is why nervous debility, irritability, fainting spells, disappear and are overcome by this alterative extract of medicinal roots put up by Dr. Pierce without the use of alcohol. Ask your neighbor. Many have been cured of scrofulous conditions, ulcers, "fever-sores," white swellings, etc., by taking Dr. Pierce's Discovery. Just the refreshing and vitalizing tonic needed for excessive tissue waste, in convalescence from fevers or for run-down, anæmic, thin-blooded people. Stick to this safe and sane remedy and refuse all "just as good" kinds offered by the dealer who is looking for a larger profit. Nothing will do you half as much good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

OTHER PART ALL RIGHT.

He—When we are married we will live on bread and kisses, won't we, darling?

She—Oh! I don't like bread.

Distinction.

Senator Lotsmaun—Who is this McChunkerson that wants a consulship, and what claim has he on me for a political job?

Private Secretary—He says he's the only man who hasn't been mentioned as a candidate for governor of Illinois.

A man isn't necessarily an artist because he draws comparisons.

Tree Destroyers.

Porcupines are good climbers, and when unable to get enough apples wind-blown to the ground, swarm a tree and cut down the finest bearing limbs as quickly and neatly as a beaver can sever the trunk of a young hemlock. Besides that, when other food is scarce they nibble the bark off young apple trees, and can destroy a newly planted orchard in a short time. They also are a great enemy to the young spruce, but why they cut them is a mystery, as it is not found that they even eat the tenderest shoots.

Proved.

"There's no question about it," said Scribbleigh. "England is the place for an author to live in who wishes to write perfect English. We become merely the expression of our environment, after all, and I wish to do my work in an atmosphere in which the language I use for the expression of my ideas is spoken in all its prestine purity. Do you not agree with me, Lord Miggleton?"

"By Jowve, you're bally right, old top!" replied his lordship.—Harper's Weekly.

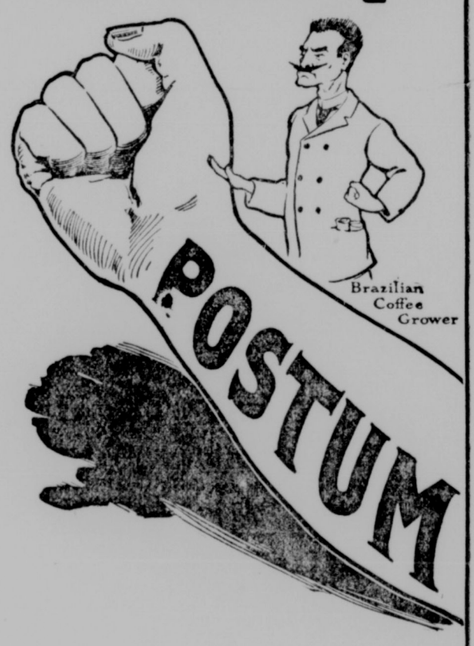
Silent Innuendo.

"That woman always speaks kindly of others."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne; "but she always does it in such a way as to imply that she is making some terrible mental reservations."

We Get a Slap

The big coffee trust, made up of Brazilian growers and American importers, has been trying various tactics to boost the price of coffee and get more money from the people.



Always the man who is trying to dig extra money out of the public pocket, on a combination, hates the man who blocks the game.

Now comes a plaintive bleat from the "exasperated" ones.

The Journal of Commerce lately said: "A stirring circular has just been issued to the coffee trade." The article further says:

"The coffee world is discussing what is to be the future of coffee as a result of the campaign of miseducation carried on by the cereal coffee people. We have before us a letter from one of the largest roasters in the South asking what can be done to counteract the work of the enemies of coffee.

"The matter should have been taken up by the Brazilian Gov't when they were completing their beautiful valorization scheme."

Then the article proceeds to denounce Postum and works into a fine frenzy, because we have published facts regarding the effect of coffee on some people.

The harrowing tale goes on.

"Where a few years ago everybody drank coffee, several cups a day, now we find in every walk in life people who imagine they cannot drink it. (The underscoring is ours.) Burly blacksmiths, carpenters, laborers and athletes have discontinued or cut down the use of coffee; as there is not a person who reads this and will not be able to find the same conditions existing among his own circle of acquaintances, is it not well for the Brazilians to sit up and take notice?"

Isn't it curious these "burly" strong men should pick out coffee to "imagine" about? Why not "imagine" that regular doses of whiskey are harmful, or daily slugs of morphine?

If "imagination" makes the caffeine in coffee clog the liver, depress the heart, and steadily tear down the nervous system, bringing on one or more of the dozens of types of diseases which follow broken-down nervous systems, many people don't know it.

But it remained for the man who has coffee, morphine or whiskey to sell, to have the supreme nerve to say: "You only imagine your disorders. Keep on buying from me."

Let us continue to quote from his article.

"Notwithstanding the enormous increase in population during the past three years, coffee shows an appalling decrease in consumption."

* * * * *

Then follows a tiresome lot of statistics which wind up by showing a decrease of consumption in two years of, in round figures, two hundred million pounds.

Here we see the cause for the attacks on us and the Brazilian sneers at Americans who prefer to use a healthful, home-made breakfast drink and incidentally keep the money in America, rather than send the millions to Brazil and pay for an article that chemists class among the drugs and not among the foods.

Will the reader please remember, we never announce that coffee "hurts all people."

Some persons seem to have excess vitality enough to use coffee, tobacco and whiskey for years and apparently be none the worse, but the number is small, and when a sensible man or woman finds an article acts harmfully they exercise some degree of intelligence by dropping it.

We quote again from the article:

"These figures are paralyzing but correct, being taken from Leech's statistics, recognized as the most reliable."

* * * * *

This is one of the highest compliments ever paid to the level-headed, common sense of Americans who cut off about two hundred million pounds of coffee when they found by actual experiment (in the majority of cases) that the subtle drug caffeine, in coffee, worked discomfort and varying forms of disease.

Some people haven't the character to stop a habit when they know it is killing them, but it is easy to shift from coffee to Postum, for, when made according to directions, it comes to table a cup of beverage, seal brown color, which turns to rich golden brown when cream is added, and the taste is very like the milder grades of Old Gov't Java.

Postum is a veritable food-drink and highly nourishing, containing all the parts of wheat carefully prepared to which is added about ten per cent of New Orleans molasses, and that is absolutely all that Postum is made of.

Thousands of visitors to the pure food factories see the ingredients and how prepared. Every nook and corner is open for every visitor to carefully inspect. Crowds come daily and seem to enjoy it.

BUYING THANKSGIVING CRANBERRIES

are for the November holiday have been greatly increased in number or variety. Your hearty diner demands on Thanksgiving the essentials such as turkey and celery and cranberry sauce and pumpkin pie, which were the stand-bys of the feast in the days of his father and his grandfather before him. The point is that some of the eatables are unquestionably more flavory than were their counterparts of several decades ago, and—with all due respect to the kind that mother used to make—some of the modern recipes seem to put it all over the old-timers in garnishes and the preparation of puddings and pastry, etc.

And, speaking of the changes that have come about, take the case of the toothsome turkey, headliner of the whole holiday menu. It would be futile to try to convince the high liver of the twentieth century who revels in his milk-fed or chestnut-fed turkey from Rhode Island or the middle west, that his forefathers ever enjoyed anything so delicious. Certainly turkeys have increased in size, too, judging by the average weight those that find their way to market. However, this latter development is clearly traceable to the tendency of turkey raisers to devote themselves almost exclusively to the Bronze, the largest of the six standard varieties of turkeys.

However, there are two sides to this turkey story, and the housewives who preside over small families are the ones who have had brought home to them the disadvantageous side of this boom in the size of turkeys. With the big bronze birds weighing from 16 to 36 pounds apiece—and usually nearer the latter than the former figure—crowding the market it is becoming every year more difficult for the buyer of a family of two or three people to find a satisfactory six, seven or eight pound turkey. It really begins to look as though the small families would be driven to hotels on Thanksgiving or else be compelled to take in boarders or entertain all their friends at the holiday dinner.

Turkey buying, too, is the phase of the Thanksgiving marketing where the increased cost of living most severely pinches the man with the stationary income. A dweller in any of our large cities may consider himself decidedly in luck these days if he succeeds in getting a tender turkey at Thanksgiving for 25 cents per pound, and he is much more likely to be asked any figure up to 38 or 40 cents per pound, which prices have prevailed every Thanksgiving in recent years in the New York and Boston markets for the choicest birds. The people of the central west have an advantage over eastern turkey eaters, because Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and other states along the backbone of the country are the great centers of the turkey industry, although it will doubtless surprise some of our readers to learn that Texas leads all the other states in the Union in the number of turkeys produced.

Proximity of the market to the rural district whence it draws its supply of holiday fowls is a highly important consideration nowadays, because the mistress of a city home can no longer purchase her Thanksgiving turkey from a farmer who drives up to her door marketing the products of his own farm. All the turkeys are handled nowdays through commission merchants, which means, of course, that there is a middleman's profit to be paid by the ultimate consumer. Another secret of the present high prices of turkeys is found in the fact that the live birds are shipped long distances. If they are transported by express the expense is considerable, and if they make the journey by freight the trip is nearly as costly, inasmuch as the live birds are sent by freight only in carload lots, which involves the rental of a special type of car for the journey and pay for the services of a man who is sent along to feed the birds en route.

Owing to the mounting prices of turkey and an occasional shortage of supply — although there is no prospect of a turkey famine this year—has induced an increasing number of families all over the country to substitute chicken, duck or goose for the regulation Thanksgiving fowl. The cost is much less and the satisfaction equally great—once a householder has freed himself from the tradition that Thanksgiving without turkey would not be Thanksgiving. Then, too, the increasing number of vegetarians and persons who have adopted a diet of nuts or other meat substitutes, have devised some very ingenious proxies for the Thanksgiving dinner—non-meat dishes that even simulate the appearance of a turkey. However, these new-fangled dishes can scarcely be recommended as cheap, owing to the amounts of nuts and the number of eggs the recipes call for.

In the face of soaring prices in so many food lines, it is gratifying to note one Thanksgiving indispensable, the cost of which remains virtually unchanged. This is our old friend, the pumpkin, dear to youth and old age alike, in the form of the pumpkin pie. No person has ever attempted to "corner" the pumpkin crop, and probably no person ever will undertake such a miracle. The fact that the great golden globes with their luscious "fillin'" can be raised in every section of the United States, and that, too, without any trouble, once the vines are planted, is doubtless responsible for the moderate prices that always prevail. Probably there is no town or city in the country where a good-sized pumpkin cannot be purchased for 50 cents, and in most American markets one may buy a small pumpkin—an orb of joy with ammunition sufficient for at least a couple of pies—for the modest sum of four or five cents. The newspapers have given prominence this year to the exploit of an Indiana farmer who has raised a pumpkin as large around as a wagon wheel and weighing 150 pounds. However, the record in pumpkin growing is claimed by a Colorado planter, who gets credit for producing a few years ago a pumpkin weighing more than 300 pounds.

Cranberries are a Thanksgiving commodity the price of which fluctuates widely in different years. And yet we feel that we must have them, almost without regard to price, for if Thanksgiving is incomplete without the turkey, certainly the turkey is incomplete without the cranberry sauce. Cranberries are cultivated to any extent in only three states, namely, Massachusetts, Wisconsin and New Jersey, and the producing area being thus restricted it naturally follows that when there comes a lean year the shortage of the ruddy berries is quickly reflected in the price. However, cranberries are never so very much of an extravagance because it requires such a modest portion to make up a batch of cranberry sauce. When cranberries are plentiful they sell wholesale as low as $2 per barrel, but a few years ago, when there was a cranberry famine, the price went as high as $20 per barrel.

The business side of the problem of supplying a Thanksgiving dinner for the American people is by no means the least interesting phase of this subject. The city of Chicago alone receives during the week or ten days before Thanksgiving as many as half a million turkeys, valued in the aggregate, at wholesale prices, at much more than a millions dollars. From Cape Cod, Mass., the greatest cranberry growing district, there are shipped each autumn more than one-third of a million car loads of cranberries, and the major portion of this harvest finds its way to Thanksgiving dinner tables. Many car loads of celery from Michigan and other states swell the total cost of our Thanksgiving dinner to millions.

Menu of First Thanksgiving Feast

What did our Puritan ancestors dine on at their first Thanksgiving feast? Surely they did not set the standard which is being followed today on the Thanksgiving dinner menus.

We know that some things were lacking that they must have greatly missed. There could have been no butter, cream, milk, cheese, or any dish that is principally made with milk, because there were no cows in New England until 1623, when John Winthrop, later their worshipful governor, brought over four cows from England. The butter and cheese that they took with them on the Mayflower were long since consumed. I hardly think they had chicken pie for the feast, for the fowls were served as a rare delicacy for the sick. They could have had eggs for their pies and puddings. Since they raised pumpkins they might have had pumpkin pies, if they made them with water.

In the ocean there was great abundance of fish, oysters, and other shellfish. Of course, there was none of their national dish, prime roast beef, no veal, lamb, mutton or pork. There was plenty of deer, which would be a good substitute in vension. But they had one thing that we like better than anything else on Thanksgiving day. Wild turkeys were very abundant in the woods and fields about Plymouth, and the Indians went out and shot a large number of them, and made them their contribution to the feast. Governor Bradford says in his history that they were delicious to eat. How fitting it is that the bird that is the crowning glory of our Thanksgiving board should have been the favorite meat of that historic first Thanksgivig dinner!

There were, doubtless, onions, beets, parsnips, cabbage or colewort, squash, and perhaps other vegetables, for a good variety of seeds were brought over from Holland. Perhaps there was succotash, and the Indians must have made it, for it was something that the Pilgrim cooks had never heard of before, and we know that they learned later from the Indians how to make it. Now, what did they have for dessert, I wonder? I think they may have had some sort of pudding with huckleberries for plums. I doubt if they had much sweetening for their pudding and pumpkin pies, as their stock of sugar and molasses was very limited. Perhaps they had a substitute. There were fine wild grapes in the woods, and they had doubtless dried a store of wild strawberries, cherries and plums. They surely did not have any mince pies, since the Pilgrims thought mince pies were very wicked, and savored of Romanism. So they condemned those who afterward made and ate them

The Cat's Thanksgiving Soliloquy

I'm just about tired of waiting
For my Thanksgiving treat;
I see them about the table,
And they eat, and eat, and eat.
They do not think of poor pussy,
Who has had so long to wait;
Why doesn't some one remember
That it's growing very late.

And haven't I smelt that turkey
Since into the oven it went?
If they'd give just one drumstick,
Why, then I'd be content.
But no, they sit there talking
And laughing aloud with glee;
I wish that some one among them
Would throw down a bone to me.

There's that greedy little Teddy,
Three times he's passed his plate.
And that turkey's growing smaller
At a very rapid rate.
And see Jack's face! 'Tis shining
With gravy up to his eyes.
I wonder they take no notice
When they hear my hungry cries.

Oh, dear! There's dessert to follow,
The puddings and pumpkin pies
And the fruits and nuts and candy,
And oh, how fast times flies!
Ah, there's gentle little Ethel,
She's so loving and so kind,
She's bringing me some turkey bones
And a grateful cat she'll find.

FRANK H. SWEET.

THANKSGIVING

I thank thee, Life, for many, many gifts;
For wealth of bloom and tender song that lifts
My life the heated highway's path above;
But most of all I thank thee, Life, for Love!

I thank thee for the body's health; for friends;
The daily bread thy kindly bounty sends;
For all the goodly things that are or were;
But most of all I thank thee, Life, for Her!

For Her I count of good thine utter store
That surfeits avarice. Thou hast no more,
No boon to win one covert sigh from me
When I have that whose giving beggars thee.

LABOR GIVES ITS APPROVAL

Powerful American Federation Cordially Joins in Fight Against Spread of Tuberculosis.

Direct approval of the campaign for the sale of Red Cross seals has been given by the American Federation of Labor, according to an announcement by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. At the last annual convention of the American Federation of Labor a resolution was adopted calling on all the members of the Federation to further the sale as much as possible. The resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas, The American Federation of Labor has in every possible way aided the movement for the study and prevention of tuberculosis throughout the United States and Canada; and,

"Whereas, The American National Red Cross has been in the past and is now making an especial effort, through the sale of Red Cross Christmas seals, to secure funds to carry on the war against tuberculosis, and by means of the funds raised in this manner has been able to do much effective work in this direction, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor give its endorsement to the movement of the American National Red Cross, and encourage its members to further in every reasonable way the sale of these seals in their respective communities."

Insulted.

A strapping German with big beads of perspiration streaming down his face was darting in and out of the aisles of a Philadelphia department store.

His excited actions attracted the attention of all salespersons, and they hardly knew what to make of it. A hustling young man of the clothing department walked up to him and asked, "Are you looking for something in men's clothing?"

"No!" he roared; "not men's clothing; vimen's clothing. I can't find my wife!"—Lippincott's.

PARASITES! We are dropping the word "moderation" from the dictionary, we are living in a time of frenzy. Moderation no longer goes. We must have the strongest adjectives to define the the most trivial offenses, especially if a corporation or a man of wealth is concerned. No matter what good either may have done, that must be forgotten in the anxiety of the muck-raker to attract attention. Note an instance: The express companies of this country may have their faults. One of them appears to be that they are making too much money. Most successful people regard this as an evidence of superior talent. We are led to these reflections by the manner in which Congressman Lewis, of Maryland, endeavored to attract attention to himself at a recent hearing when the reasonableness of express rates was being considered. Mr. Lewis presented figures to show that the express companies were making too much profit. If his figures stand the test—and they have not yet been put to it—we have no fault to find. But Mr. Lewis did not rest there. He proceeded, in true muck-raking style, to denounce the express companies as "parasites." There are parasites in politics as well as in business, and we are making it our business to point out some of them.—Leslie's Weekly.

OPPORTUNITY

There is, and has been for ages, floating around in the form of aphorisms, proverbs, familar quotations, or by whatever name a lot of sophistry, that passes with many for wisdom. No subject is of more vital interest to young persons or to ambitious persons of any age, than "Opportunity," and none has been more persistently disfigured and misfigured by poets, paragraphers, makers of epigrams and such others as have the ability to give to fancy the appearance of fact.

Shakespeare is the greatest offender, because he is the greatest of poets. His utterances are considered authoritative, and when he reminds us that "There is a tide in the affairs of men

Which, taken at its flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries," we begin to wonder whether we have missed our one opportunity or whether it is yet to come. A more modern soothsayer has said: "Opportunity knocks once at every man's door," and the statesman-poet, Senator Ingalls has indited a fine poem to the thought that we must be ever on the watch, lest Opportunity come when we wit not and pass before we catch him.

The real truth is that opportunity doesn't do much traveling about, and he is not a single individual that passes favors around to those who wait. The figure of speech that represents him thus is a false figure. It is wrong end foremost. No common-sense person of today believes in the lazy philosophy of sitting around waiting for "something to turn up," in passive readiness to seize it and appropriate it. The fact is that opportuniny or opportunities innumerable await those who go out after them. Those who succeed do go after the opportunity, and if they fail to get it, they go after another and another until sometime, somewhere, they secure success. Many men and women are successful in more than one line of effort and such persons have no time for the contemplation of the fatalism of opportunity as set forth by Shakespeare and his followers.

The tide ebbs and flows every day. Each morning begins a new life and a new chance to profit by past mistakes, and work out of even adverse circumstances a measure of fortune that will bring contentment, which is the most certain evidence of success.

The truer ring of wisdom is that which comes from the anvil of Longfellow's "Village Blacksmith:"

"Thus at the flaming forge of Life
Our fortunes must be wrought;
Thus on its sounding anvil shaped
Each burning deed and thought."

That is the Gospel of work; and work is the key to the door of Opportunity—of any opportunity.—Theodoro J. Goe, in Good News Magazine.

THE ROAD COMMISSION WILL BE PROBED.

Austin L. Crothers evidently sees the handwriting on the wall. He realizes that the day and hour draws nigh when he must give an accounting of his stewardship in the matter of the expenditure of six millions of dollars of the people's money. Thus far he has escaped. Strange as it may seem, the people have never been thoroughly aroused to the fact that the expenditure of this great fund has been almost exclusively committed to Crothers' own hands. The President of the Commission, John M. Tucker, is Crothers' "personal representative," was appointed as such, after having been his local political lieutenant for many years. These twain are one—two souls with but a single thought. Their word has been law in handling this great enterprise—AND ABOUT THE ONLY LAW. To be sure the Act creating the Commission provides that it shall make an annual report to the Governor, but as things now stand and have stood for these four years THAT IS SIMPLY THE GOVERNOR REPORTING TO HIMSELF. What other and further publicity has been given to the Commissions proceedings. What do the people of Maryland know about the way their millions of dollars have been handled, or any other administrative feature of this giant enterprise? It is almost incredible that any set of people, beyond the age of infancy, would commit the handling of such enormous sums and the conduct of such an enormous enterprise, to virtually be in the hands of one man, without any adequate accounting or satisfactory reports.

But the day for this sort of business is past. Crothers knows it is past. Hence his scramble for a vantage ground. This is why Crothers has called together the party leaders to map out a program for the first week of the legislative session, while he is still Governor. He has made a show of wanting this, that and the other done. BUT THE ONE THING FOR WHICH HE IS PLAYING IS A BILL THAT WILL GIVE HIM WHAT HE WANTS IN THE MATTER OF THE GOOD ROADS COMMISSION. It will not avail. We beg to assure the Governor that the day of reckoning has come. The Road Commission has got to be dragged before the high court of public opinion. He can make what deals he pleases with the politicians, to jam through saving legislation. BUT IT WILL NOT SAVE. HIS COMMISSION AND ITS WORK HAVE GOT TO COME INTO THE LIGHT, however little Mr. Crothers may relish the unpleasant prospect.

WHAT THE DEMOCRATIC LEADERS OUGHT TO DO.

There is not the slightest objection to a conference among Democratic leaders and Democratic members of the Senate and House of Delegates with a view to perfecting plans for team-work in the next Legislature. There is objection to secret conferences, because the business concerns the public intimately and there is every reason why the public should hear the arguments that prompt action.

It ought not to be necessary to argue, however, that the conference should concern the carrying out of the pledges upon which the Democratic Legislature was chosen. The party has no moral right to cook up a program and, taking advantage of the incidental power it holds during the first week of the Legislature, jam through radical changes in the laws, changes not mentioned in the in the platform upon which a Democratic majority in the Legislature was elected, not discussed during the campaign, and which nobody dreamed would be undertaken in such circumstances.

The proper course for the party to pursue is so clear that it is difficult to understand why men who profess to desire to advance the public welfare could miss it. Instead of setting to work in a way which, had the purpose been to make the people believe the party leaders were bent on a contemptible grab for patronage, could not have served better, why didn't the leaders get together in Baltimore, call in everyone whose advice was worth while, let the people hear the discussion, make clear their intention to live up to the letter and the spirit of their campaign pledges? This would have won public confidence and approbation, and then the details of the legislation could have been arranged in a business like fashion; a program of wisely framed laws could have been sent to Governor Goldsborough in the expectation that he would meet the situation in the same broad spirit. Right-thinking men would have lined up behind such a program, and Governor Goldsborough would have been compelled to give due heed to the demand for its enactment,

As matters stand, the actions of the men who have undertaken to control the Democratic majority in the Legislature have left the whole state with the uneasy feeling that they are interested in nothing but the petty business of getting as much patronage as they can for themselves and their followers. It is most unfortunate to spoil a fair prospect by such wretched tactics.—Baltimore News.

GRAND JURY REPORT

After Making Returns to the Court Body was Discharged Friday Morning

The grand jury, after being in session from Monday, the 4th inst., until last Friday, was discharged by Judge Henderson after making the following report:

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court for Garrett county:

The Grand Jurors for the December Term, 1911, of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, beg leave to report that they have concluded their labors and have to the best of their ability endeavored to perform the duties devolving upon them as members of this body, desire to report their proceedings and receive their discharge.

In the performance of our duties we have endeavored to act without fear, favor or partiality and in accordance with the oath administered to us and have examined 107 witnesses and have found 25 presentments and indictments.

We have found presentments in all cases in which we believe the evidence justified and have ignored trivial cases and those cases in which the evidence did not appear to warrant presentments.

In the investigations of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, we have had a number of young men under age, before us and regret to state that we have had difficulty in ascertaining true facts with reference thereto.

In accordance with your Honor's instructions and agreeable to the provisions of law, we have inspected the public buildings, that is, the County Court House and Jail and find them in excellent condition, except in a few minor instances. The roof of the Court House and also the roof of the Jail in one or two places are at present leaking and this should be repaired at once in order to save damage to the building. The connecting pipes at the boiler in the Jail are leaking and this should be repaired. The Jail is in a very neat condition and excellently kept by the Sheriff.

We have examined the books of the several offices and find them in a neat condition and well kept by the officer having them in charge.

We desire to express our thanks and appreciation for the courtesy shown and assistance rendered us by the court and the States Attorney, while in the discharge of our duties.

We now beg leave to be discharged.

Respectfully submitted

Davis Steel Ranges.

The popularity of the DAVIS STEEL RANGE is constantly increasing. During the last twelve months the firm has placed one hundred Ranges, mostly to home trade, and are now putting it on the market, through the general stove dealers, shipping direct from the factory.

Their patent grate and liners have proven to be beyond question the most durable made. During the past five years, they have not furnished $5 worth of repairs, and some of the stoves have had hard use.

Mr. C. S. Davis, the patentee, has added some more new and valuable improvements, in connection with those they already have, using an over draught to the firebox, through round holes, that are placed in front of the liners, near the top, thus forming what you might term a hotblast firebox, that takes less fuel, burns up the gases, has a much better combustion, and adds materially to the life of the firebox.

This led to further experiments, and it was found that ventilated lids over the firebox could be used. By making the lids full of round holes, thus adding a downward draught to the fire, surrounding the firebox with cold air draught, from all four sides, enabling the user to always see the condition of the fire, without taking the lids off, and to cook on top of the ventilated lids instead of over the fire, with the lids off. The improvement is not only a novelty but practical.

Drawings have already been made by the patentee's attorneys for these new features, and practical demonstrations can be seen at any time, at the Davis Hardware Store of a full line of Ranges, with all the late improvements, that they are offering at prices from $28.50 to $45.00, according to size, style and finish.

The Davis combination Gas and Coal Range has been completed, and for simplicity of construction, completeness, convenience and durability is in a class by itself.

The two hole Gas Hot Plate of this Range can be attached to any of the Davis Coal Ranges when so desired.

Dr. John E. Legge has gone to Cumberland where he will locate for the practice of his profession. Dr. Legge, though a young man, has had much experience in medical lines and goes to Cumberland as well and probably better equipped for the successful practice of medicine than those who have been engaged in the work a lifetime. His recent special studies and experience in medical and surgical work in the European centres has given him a wide knowledge of his work. While many Oakland people regret his leaving here yet they wish him unbounded success in his new field and commend him highly to the people of Cumberland and vicinity.

Women are going to play a larger part in the presidential campaign of 1912 than in any former one. It is quite within the bounds of possibilities that their votes may decide the result of the contest. There are six states in which women will vote for President next year. These states and the number of women entitled to the ballot in each are: California, 500,000; Colorado, 160,000; Idaho, 48,000; Utah, 65,000; Washington, 120,000; Wyoming, 35,000. In other words, in these six states, of which more than half may fairly be classed as debatable in a party contest, there are more than 900,000 women voters who must be reckoned with by the politicians in next year's campaign. They constitute a force which no political manager will dare to ignore.

Miss Laura Harlan, daughter of the late Justice Harlan, of the Supreme Court, deprive of her means of support by her father's death, goes to work to earn her living. That sets one to thinking. Evidently, John Marshall Harlan died poor: "Every brave man, in one way or another, gives his life away," says Carlyle. Justice Harlan was a brave man; his life did not "pay" in the ordinary meaning of the term. He might have made millions as a corporation lawyer in private practice. He might have enjoyed extraordinary opportunities for "investments" in the thirty-four years he held a place of tremendous power over big business, but—he died poor. Do you know, we have an idea that if Justice Harlan looks down from above, he is not a bit ashamed to see his daughter earning her bread. Is it not a title to high respect—very high respect, indeed—under the circumstances?

In Honor of Visitors.

This evening at eight o'clock at their home on Kanawha street, Hon. and Mrs. Jas. Lakin will entertain at dinner in honor of their visitors, Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Offutt, of Oakland, Md. A pleasant menu will be served. Killarney roses, pink and white, will be used in the decorations. Covers will be laid for twenty-six, including Governor and Mrs. W. E. Glasscock, Governor and Mrs. W. M. O. Dawson, Secretary and Mrs. Stuart F. Reed, Gen. and Mrs. W. G. Conley, Auditor and Mrs. Jno. S. Darst, Judge and Mrs. Ira E. Robinson, Judge and Wm. N Miller, Judge and Mrs. L. Judson Williams, Dr. and Mrs. E. B. Stephenson, Hon. and Mrs. C. W. Swisher, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Bolden, Mr. and Mrs. Offutt and Mr. and Mrs. Lakin.—Saturday's Charleston (W. Va.) Mail.

Three Seekers From Preston.

Attorney-General W. G. Conley, of West Virginia, is in Washington conferring with the members of the Republican committee. He will be a candidate for Congress to succeed W. G. Brown, Democrat, next year. Mr. Conley is a resident of Kingwood, Preston county. Mr. Brown lives in Preston. So does Sam B. Montgomery, a Progressive Republican who will be a candidate for Congressman-at-large from West Virginia next year. Three candidates from one county is so unusual that Preston is in the limelight because of its peculiar distinction at this time.

At Central Y. M. C. A.

Dr. Chas E. Shelton of Washington, D. C., will address the men's meeting toworrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. This will be a great opportunity for Cumberland men to hear one of the strongest speakers in the Methodist Conference. Dr. Shelton is manager of the Mountain Lake Park Association and a prominent worker in all religious activities. He is especially known far and wide as a strong speaker to men, and his eloquence and manner of speech enables him to grip men. His subject will be an interesting talk on "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," and every man in the city should not miss such a treat. The music, too, will be an attractive feature.—Cumberland News.

PART I.

CHAPTER I.

It was a quiet night in the Tivoli. At the bar, which ranged along one side of the large chinked-log room, leaned half a dozen men, two of whom were discussing the relative merits of spruce tea and lime juice as remedies for scurvy. They argued with an air of depression and with intervals of morose silence. The other men scarcely heeded them. In a row, against the opposite wall, were the gambling games. The crap table was deserted. One lone man was playing at the faro table. The roulette was not even spinning, and the gamekeeper stood by the roaring, red-hot stove, talking with a young, dark-eyed woman, comely of face and figure, who was known from Juneau to Fort Yukon as the Virgin. Three men sat in at stud poker, but they played with small chips and without enthusiasm, while there were no onlookers. On the floor of the dancing room, which opened out at the rear, three couples were waltzing drearily to the strains of a violin and a piano.

Circle City was not deserted, nor was money tight. The miners were in from Moosehead creek and the other diggings to the west, the summer washing had been good, and the men's pouches were heavy with dust and nuggets. The Klondike had not yet been discovered, nor had the miners of the Yukon learned the possibilities of deep digging and wood-firing. No work was done in the winter, and they made a practice of hibernating in the large camps like Circle City during the long Arctic night. Time was heavy on their hands, their pouches were well filled and the only social diversion to be found was in the saloons. Yet the Tivoli was practically deserted, and the Virgin, standing by the stove, yawned with uncovered mouth and said to Charley Bates:

"If something don't happen soon, I'm goin' to bed. What's the matter with the camp, anyway? Everybody dead?"

Bates did not even trouble to reply, but went on moodily rolling a cigarette. Dan MacDonald, pioneer saloonman and gambler on the upper Yukon, owner and proprietor of the Tivoli and all its games, wandered torpidly across the great vacant space of floor and joined the two at the stove.

"Anybody dead?" the Virgin asked him.

"Looks like it," was the answer.

"Then it must be the whole camp," she said with an air of finality and with another yawn.

MacDonald grinned and nodded, and opened his mouth to speak, when the front door swung open and a man appeared in the light. He would have appeared a large man had not a huge French-Canadian stepped up to him from the bar and gripped his hand.

"Hello, Daylight!" was his greeting. "By Gar, you good for sore eyes!"

"Hello, Louis, when did you-all blow in?" returned the newcomer. "Come up and have a drink and tell us all about Bone creek. Why, dog-gone you-all, shake again. Where's that pardner of yours? I'm looking for him."

Another huge man detached himself from the bar to shake hands. Olaf Henderson and French Louis, partners together on Bone creek, were the two largest men in the country, and though they were but half a head taller than the newcomer, between them he was dwarfed completely.

"Hello, Olaf," said the one called Daylight. "Tomorrow's my birthday. And you, too, Louis. Come up and drink, and I'll tell you-all about it."

The arrival of the newcomer seemed to send a flood of warmth through the place. "It's Burning Daylight," the Virgin cried, the first to recognize him as he came into the light. Charley Bates' tight features relaxed at the sight, and MacDonald went over and joined the three at the bar. With the advent of Burning Daylight the whole place suddenly became brighter and cheerier. The barkeepers were active. Voices were raised. Somebody laughed. And when the fiddler, peering into the front room, remarked to the pianist: "It's Burning Daylight," the waltz time perceptibly quickened, and the dancers, catching the contagion, began to whirl about as if they really enjoyed it. It was known to them of old-time that nothing languished when Burning Daylight was around.

He turned from the bar and saw the woman by the stove and the eager look of welcome she extended him.

"Hello, Virgin, old girl," he called. "Hello, Charley. What's the matter with you-all? Why wear faces like that when coffins only cost three ounces? Come up, you-all, and drink. Come up, you unburied dead, an' name your poison. Come up, everybody. This is my night, and I'm going to ride it. To-morrow I'm thirty, and then I'll be an old man. It's the last fling of youth. Are you-all with me? Surge along, then. Surge along."

The waltz in the back room being finished, the three couples, followed by the fiddler and the pianist and heading for the bar, caught Daylight's eye.

"Surge along, you-all!" he cried. "Surge along and name it. This is my night, and it ain't a night that comes frequent. Surge up, you Siwashes and Salmon-eaters. It's my night, I tell you-all—"

"A blamed mangy night," Charley Bates interpolated.

"You're right, my son," Burning Daylight went on, gayly. "A mangy night, but it's my night, you see. I'm the mangy old he-wolf. Listen to me howl."

And howl he did, like a lone gray timber wolf, till the Virgin thrust her pretty fingers in her ears and shivered. A minute later she was whirled away in his arms to the dancing floor, where, along with three other women and their partners, a rollicking Virginia reel was soon in progress.

Few men knew Elam Harnish by any other name than Burning Daylight, the name which had been given him in the early days in the land because of his habit of routing his comrades out of their blankets with the complaint that daylight was burning. Of the pioneers in that far Arctic wilderness, where all men were pioneers, he was reckoned among the oldest. Men like Al Mayo and Jack McQuestion antedated him; but they had entered the land by crossing the Rockies from the Hudson Bay country to the east. He, however, had been the pioneer over the Chilcoot and Chilcat passes. In the spring of 1883, twelve years before, a stripling of eighteen, he had crossed over the Chilcoot with five comrades. In the fall he had crossed back with one. Four had perished by mischance in the bleak, uncharted vastness. And for twelve years Elam Harnish had continued to grope for gold among the shadows of the Circle. Heroes are seldom given to hero-worship, but among those of that land, young as he was, he was accounted an elder hero. In point of time he was before them. In point of deed he was beyond them.

"Surge Along, You-All!" He Cried. "Surge Along and Name It."

He was a striking figure of a man, of all the men in the Tivoli. Soft-tanned moccasins of moose-hide, beaded in Indian designs, covered his feet. His trousers were ordinary overalls, his coat was made from a blanket. Long-gauntletted leather mittens, lined with wool, hung by his side. They were connected, in the Yukon fashion by a leather thong passed around the neck and across the shoulders. On his head was a fur cap, the ear-flaps raised and the tying-cords dangling. His face, lean and slightly long, with the suggestion of hollows under the cheek bones, seemed almost Indian. The burnt skin and keen dark eyes contributed to this effect, though the bronze of the skin and the eyes themselves were essentially those of a white man. He looked older than thirty, and yet, smooth-shaven and without wrinkles, he was almost boyish. The impression of age was based on no tangible evidence. It came from the abstracter facts of the man, from what he had endured and survived, which was far beyond that of ordinary men. He had lived naked and tensely, and something of all this smoldered in his eyes, vibrated in his voice and seemed forever a whisper on his lips.

It was two in the morning when the dancers, bent on getting something to eat, adjourned the dancing for half an hour. And it was at this moment that Jack Kearns suggested poker. Jack Kearns was a big, bluff-featured man, who, along with Bettles, had made the disastrous attempt to found a post on the head-reaches of the Koyokuk, far inside the Arctic circle. After that Kearns had fallen back on his posts at Forty Mile and Sixty Mile and changed the direction of his ventures by sending out to the states for a small sawmill and a river steamer. Jack Kearns suggested poker. French Louis, Dan MacDonald and Hal Campbell (who had made a strike on Moosehide), all three of whom were not dancing because there were not girls enough to go around, inclined to the suggestion. They were looking for a fifth man when Burning Daylight emerged from the rear room, the Virgin on his arm, the train of dancers in his wake. In response to the hail of the poker-players, he came over to their table in the corner.

"Want to sit in," said Campbell. "How's your luck?"

"I sure got it tonight," Burning Daylight answered with enthusiasm, and at the same time felt the Virgin press his arm warningly. She wanted him for the dancing. "I sure got my luck with me, but I'd sooner dance. I ain't hankerin' to take the money away from you-all."

Nobody urged. They took his refusal as final, and the Virgin was pressing his arm to turn him away in pursuit of the supper-seekers, when he experienced a change of heart. It was not that he did not want to dance, nor that he wanted to hurt her; but that insistent pressure on his arm put his free man-nature in revolt. The thought in his mind was that he did not want any woman running him. Himself a favorite with women, nevertheless they did not bulk big with him. They were toys, playthings, part of the relaxation from the bigger game of life. He met women along with the whisky and gambling, and from observation he had found that it was far easier to break away from the drink and the cards than from a woman once the man was properly entangled. He resisted the pull on his arm by the mere negative mass of him, and said:

"I sort of feel a hankering to give you-all a flutter."

Tact and sympathy strove with him, and he smiled with his eyes into the Virgin's eyes as he said:

"You-all go and get some grub. I ain't hungry. And we'll dance some more by and by. The night's young yet. Go it, old girl."

He released his arm and thrust her playfully on the shoulder, at the same time turning to the poker players.

"Take off the limit and I'll go you all."

"Limit's the roof," said Jack Kearns.

Once started, it was a quiet game, with little or no conversation, though all about the players the place was a-roar. Elam Harnish had ignited the spark. More and more miners dropped in to the Tivoli and remained. When Burning Daylight went on the tear, no man cared to miss it. The dancing floor was full. The luck at the table varied monotonously, no big hands being out. As a result, high play went on with small hands, though no play lasted long. But at three in the morning the big combination of hands arrived. It was the moment of moments that men wait weeks for in a poker game. The news of it tingled over the Tivoli. The onlookers became quiet. The men farther away ceased talking and moved over to the table. The players deserted the other games, and the dancing floor was forsaken, so that all stood at last, fivescore and more in a compact and silent group, around the poker table. The high betting went on, with the draw not in sight. Kearns had dealt, and French Louis had opened the pot with one marker—in his case one hundred dollars. Campbell had merely "seen" it, but Elam Harnish, coming next, had tossed in five hundred dollars, with the remark to MacDonald that he was letting him in easy. MacDonald glancing again at his hand, put in a thousand in markers. Kearns, debating a long time over his hand, finally "saw." It then cost French Louis nine hundred to remain in the game, which he contributed after a similar debate. It cost Campbell likewise nine hundred to remain and draw cards, but to the surprise of all he saw the nine hundred and raised another thousand.

"We'll Dance Some More By and By. The Night's Young Yet."

"You-all are on the grade at last," Harnish remarked, as he saw the fifteen hundred and raised a thousand in turn. "Helen Breakfast's sure on top this divide, and you-all had best look out for bustin' harness."

"Me for that same lady," accompanied MacDonald's markers for two thousand and for an additional thousand-dollar raise.

"I ain't got no more markers," Kearns remarked plaintively. "We'd best begin I. O. U.'s."

"Glad you're going to stay," was MacDonald's cordial response.

"I ain't stayed yet. I've got a thousand in already. How's it stand now?"

"It'll cost you three thousand for a look in, but nobody will stop you from raising."

"Raise—h—l. You must think I got a pat like yourself." Kearns looked at his hand. "But I'll tell you what I'll do, Mac. I've got a hunch, and I'll just see that three thousand."

He wrote the sum on a slip of paper, signed his name, and consigned it to the center of the table.

French Louis became the focus of all eyes. He fingered his cards nervously for a pace. Then, with a "By Gar! Ah got not one leetle beet hunch," he regretfully tossed his hand into the discards.

The next moment the hundred and odd pairs of eyes shifted to Campbell.

"I won't hump you, Jack," he said, contenting himself with calling the requisite two thousand.

The eyes shifted to Harnish, who scribbled on a piece of paper and shoved it forward.

"I'll just let you-all know this ain't no Sunday school society of philanthropy," he said. "I see you, Jack, and I raise you a thousand. Here's where you-all get action on your pat, Mac."

"Action's what I fatten on, and I lift another thousand," was MacDonald's rejoinder. "Still got that hunch, Jack?"

CURED SIX YEARS.

No Fear of Further Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Josiah Clinker, State St., Tama, Iowa, says: "My first symptom of kidney trouble was intense pain in my back. This grew worse until I ached in every part of my body. I rested poorly and was so stiff in the morning I found it hard to dress. I became tired easily, lost flesh and was in a bad way. I was well pleased with the quick relief Doan's Kidney Pills gave me. They drove the pains away and restored my kidneys to a normal condition. I have been free from kidney trouble for six years."

Caring for Consumptives.

There are now four special methods by which consumptive workingmen in the United States are being cared for. In such cities as Albany, Elmira and Binghamton, N. Y., the unions support a separate pavilion or hospital. In cities like Hartford, New Britain and South Manchester, Conn., the workmen contribute towards the maintenance of a fund for the care of consumptives. The employers also contribute to these funds. There are also two national sanatoria for the treatment of tuberculosis owned and operated by labor unions; one by the International Typographical union, and the other by the Printing Pressmen and Assistants' union. In Massachusetts, Illinois and elsewhere large corporations and manufacturers have agreed voluntarily to care for all their consumptive employes for a limited length of time.

The Farmer's Son's Great Opportunity

Why wait for the old farm to become your inheritance? Begin now to prepare for your future prosperity and independence. A great opportunity awaits you in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, where you can secure a Free Homestead or buy land at reasonable prices.

Now's the Time

—not a year from now, when land will be higher. The profits secured from the abundant crops of Wheat, Oats and Barley, as well as cattle raising, are causing a steady advance in price. Government returns show that the number of settlers in Western Canada from the U. S. was 60 per cent larger in 1910 than the previous year.

Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop.

Free Homesteads of 160 acres and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Fine climate, good schools, excellent railway facilities, low freight rates; wood, water and lumber easily obtained.

For pamphlet "Last Best West," particulars as to suitable location and low settlers' rate, apply to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to Canadian Gov't Agent.

Jet Hair Ornament

Photograph by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

JET is the vogue this fall on gown trimmings and hats, and for the hair. To a blonde there is nothing more in contrast, or more becoming, than a brilliant jet hair ornament. It is the crowning success of any costume.

HAVE A SYSTEM IN MENDING

Will Save Much Time and Trouble, and Garments Will Be in Order When Required.

There is nothing on earth like system, and nowhere do you realize this more than in matters of dress. The tiny hole in your stocking that you might have mended in two minutes grows into an undarnable "run," the rip under the arm in your new blouse extends alarmingly; nothing that must be mended stays "where it is put." The remedy for all this is a regular mending day or a regular mending evening if you are a business woman. As soon as a garment needs mending if it be only a button or a hook that must be replaced, put it aside unless it is so necessary that you must attend to the trouble at once, and when mending day rolls around do the required sewing. You will be surprised to find how much lighter your work becomes when you can thus catch rents and tears at their start instead of at their disastrous finish. The other point to remember is to always have your sewing implements where you can get them and in perfect order. Do not wait until the very moment for mending to find that you are out of white thread or that your needles are rusty. When a thing needs repairing, repair it; when it needs replacing, replace it. It might even be well to have a "preparation" day to antedate the mending one.

SERGE COSTUME

Light gray serge is used for the costume we show here. The skirt has an added piece at lower part of sides and back, which is piped at top with silk of a little darker shade; the buttons are covered with the same silk. The coat has an added piece to match skirt. The right front wraps over in a point and is fixed with press studs; the cord ornaments being for trimming only.

Gray Tagal hat, trimmed with cerise ribbon.

Normandy Needle.

A special needle, called a Normandy needle, is necessary for one of the new kinds of hand work—punch, it is called—used on table linen or gowns. The needle, being large, pushes the threads to one side, much the same as in the Bermuda fagoting. The pattern, in this way, is worked out in a series of holes. The Greeks have long done work of this sort on hand woven linen, which is most beautiful. Punch embroidery is effective, too, on marquisette, chiffon or voile.

COATS OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS

Materials and Designs So Varied That Choice Is Made Something of a Difficulty.

A very jaunty model for a young girl is a coat of wool diagonal, which comes in brown and white, and gray and white mixtures, with plaid cuffs and button-trimmed sailor collar. It is piped with braid. Another practical junior coat is made of a novel diagonal mixture, in tan, gray and brown combination. It is semi-fitted, and has a large round sailor collar. The collar and cuffs are trimmed with plaid cloth.

A good looking coat for misses or small women is made of all wool navy diagonal, with a large round collar and deep cuffs, trimmed with bands of tan or Copenhagen cheviot.

A woman's coat of heavy blanket coating comes in a variety of colors. It has a large convertible round sailor collar which will button high at the neck, as well as with turndown collar. The collar and cuffs are inlaid with contrasting color broadcloth. An extra bag to match goes with this coat.

An attractive model is made of a good quality of gray and brown mixture. The large round sailor collar and turnback cuffs are inlaid with good quality velvet. A good looking coat is made of reversible cloth in combinations of gray and coronation purple, or blue and tan. It has the new set-in sleeve. The cuffs are made of reverse of material, and the deep shawl collar and large patch pockets are inlaid with reverse of material.

Novel Emery Bags.

That useful little article of the sewing and embroidery bag which first appeared in the strawberry form can be bought at up-to-date counters in several other shapes, among them being the thornberry, grape and chestnut. By this it can be seen that almost any bag, no matter how elaborate the basket, no matter how expensive, can have an emery bag to match it. A needle worked through this tiny object will have many minutes of vexatious endeavor in drawing the needle through the obstreperous silks and the thicker linens. Many bags have a complement of the whole gamut.

New Ideas in Negligees.

Fashion's latest decree is to use two thicknesses of messaline or thin silk, white for the outside and a delicate color underneath. They are separately made and are only caught together at the hems.

They are elusive in their shadings and are trimmed with five ruffles of five-inch footing. The neck is pointed in the front and the back. The sleeves are rather loose and ruffled from the elbow to the shoulder with the footing. From the point at the back of the neck there is a square bow of the silk edged with footing. Leaf green under white makes an exquisite combination.

Silk Stockings.

First, buy them large, maybe a full size, larger than you may wear in a cotton or lisle stocking; next, darn loosely the heel and toe and places for garter catches—all before wearing the stockings. This prevents holes from appearing in heel and toe and the knee from having "runners."

Rinse out in cold water after each wearing and the stocking will last two or three times longer than when these precautions are not taken.—L. S. W., in Harper's Weekly.

THANKSGIVING DISHES.

We like to have as much of the preparation for the feast day done before hand as possible. The turkey may be stuffed the day before and is greatly improved by standing, as it is better flavored with the seasoning.

The cranberry sauce may be made and molded the day before, and of course the mince meat has been prepared and the pumpkin pies may be made, so that on Thanksgiving there are less things to prepare and the time may be better used enjoying one's friends.

The dishes to be prepared should be carefully gone over as to cost; an elaborate dinner for one's friends that means pinching for a month to recuperate is not worth the expense of time, labor and money.

Celery may be washed and wrapped in a damp cloth and kept nicely for several days.

Cranberry frappe is a delicious way of serving the winter berry.

A salad which is both attractive and good to eat and one which may be prepared the day before is: Lettuce with Sherry's dressing.

Wash head lettuce and wrap in a towel, place in a cool place. When ready to serve pour over the following dressing, which will keep for two weeks or longer if kept in the ice box: Take two tablespoonfuls of chopped gren pepper, one tablespoonful of chopped red pepper, a tablespoonful of parsley chopped, half a small-sized Spanish onion, a quarter of a cup of vinegar, a tablespoonful of powdered sugar, a tablespoonful of salt, and three-fourths of a cup of the best olive oil. Shake in a pint mason jar for five minutes and let stand at least an hour before using.

The dinner may begin with a soup, a cocktail or with a canape, although none are necessary with a turkey dinner.

MORE ABOUT BEANS.

There is no soup that goes to the spot and is more nourishing than a hot bean soup on a cold night. Even a tablespoonful of baked beans should never be wasted, as they add flavor and food value to any dish. In many homes of luxurious livers, the bean soup is always served once a week in cold weather.

The following are a few good ones:

Economical Soup.—Brown a tablespoonful of flour in as much butter. Add a quart of water and a cup of cold baked beans. Boil fifteen minutes, season with salt, pepper and a few drops of onion juice or a dash of mace. Serve hot.

A slice of lemon in the bottom of the soup dish, when serving bean soup, is liked by many.

Puree of Bean Soup.—Soak half a pound of beans eighteen hours. Cook until mushy; add a quarter of a can of tomatoes, one onion fried brown in a bit of salt pork; salt, pepper and a grating of nutmeg. Cook together fifteen minutes, strain and reheat before serving.

Bean Soup.—Soak the beans over night, and in the morning pour off the water, replacing it with fresh water. Parboil until the skins slip off easily. Throw them into cool water and rub well. The skins will rise to the top and can be removed. Boil the beans until perfectly soft, allowing one quart of water to one pint of beans. Mash the beans and add flour, a tablespoonful, and the same amount of butter cooked together; add salt, pepper and pass the beans through a sieve. Serve small pieces of toasted bread with the soup.

How Weak Kidneys Cause Rheumatism

How Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills Unfailingly Restore Kidneys and Bladder—Cure Rheumatism—Trial Package Free!

Every one knows rheumatism is caused by excess of uric acid in the system. The poisonous accumulation is there because the kidneys fail to filter it from the blood. Kidneys are diseased, too weak to perform their full duty.

Naturally the thing to do is to restore the kidneys to normal—make them extract and expel the uric acid poison. That's how to really cure rheumatism—there's no other way.

That's how Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills cure. That's why their cures are honest, not make-believe—permanent, instead of lasting only while the effect of the medicine lasts.

No matter what the form of rheumatism—articular, inflammatory, muscular—whether in your back (lumbago), your feet (gout), or in any part of the body—there's one remedy you can absolutely depend upon. One that not only stops every ache and pain, but that banishes their cause.

Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills drive out the poisons—cleanse the clogged kidneys—strengthen and invigorate them, so they do their work as Nature intended. If troubled with any rheumatic condition, any kidney or urinary trouble, don't delay treatment one hour! There are no ailments more destructive—that so quickly lead to fatal results—if not promptly checked.

Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills are sold under a positive guarantee. Druggists are authorized to refund money in case of dissatisfaction. Prices, 25c and 50c. Sample package free, if you'd like to try them first. At druggists, or sent direct by Derby Medicine Co., Eaton Rapids, Mich.

EVEN IN THE DEEP.

Mr. Sunfish—I hear that Mr. Black Bass couldn't get on the police force.

Mr. Eel—No, they drew the color line on him.

MRS. SELBY AND PRIZE BABY

"I have always used Cuticura Soap and no other for my baby and he has never had a sore of any kind. He does not even chafe as most babies do. I feel sure that it is all owing to Cuticura Soap, for he is fine and healthy, and when five months old, won a prize in a baby contest. It makes my heart ache to go into so many homes and see a sweet-faced baby with the whole top of its head a solid mass of scurf, caused by poor soap. I always recommend Cuticura, and nine times out of ten the next time I see the mother she says: 'Oh! I am so glad you told me of Cuticura.'" (Signed) Mrs. G. A. Selby, Redondo Beach, California, Jan. 15, 1911.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. William Moody, the well known Bloomington merchant, spent Tuesday in Baltimore City, sightseeing and visiting relatives, returning home Wednesday morning.

Podelko Town, near Hampshire, lost three of its prominent and well known families during the past week, Messrs. Blaine Helmick, Lawrence Beavers and Howard Liller having moved to Franklin adjoining the town of Westernport.

Two new cases of typhoid fever developed in our midst during the past week, Masters Joseph Conelly and Ora Morehead making a total to date since last June of 33. Both cases were undoubtedly due to contact with cases already existing in the families of the unfortunate youths. Polluted drinking water is not alone to blame for this unusual outbreak of the disease in this community which had a record for many years past of being absolutely free from typhoid, while other neighboring communities were suffering from epidemics of the disease. Large families living in small and crowded apartments, imperfect ventilation, general carelessness in those taking care of the sick in allowing those free from the trouble to go in and out the sick room and mingle with those infected all due to ignorance of the malady, are in a great measure the causes for the spread of the infection in this community.

Mrs. Ellen Conelly, who contracted the disease while nursing her son, Mr. Bart Conelly of Piedmont, was sent to the W. M. Hospital Wednesday morning. He son Joseph is lying ill at home with the same trouble and will be sent to the hospital as soon as accomodations can be arranged for his admission.

OAKLAND'S NEW THEATRE TO OPEN NEXT WEDNESDAY

When "The Girl From the U. S. A." Will be Presented.

Oakland's newest playhouse, to be known as the Maryland Theatre, located in the new Knights of Pythias building on Third street, will be formally opened on next Wednesduy night when "the Girl from the U. S. A.,', will be presented by an all-star company which has had wonderful success the past three years, playing in many of the large towns and cities, and which comes to Oakland highly recommended by the press and theatre managers generally.

"The Girl From U. S. A.", is most a joyous creation, and something new in stage-land. The girl goes tantalizingly light-hearted into delicious entanglements that keep the action of the play splendidly melo-dramatic. The clean, fine atmosphere of the production is most wholesome and welcome. The heart interest is deep and natural. There is a triangle love affair and the story ot the play contains several social astonishments, that are delightfully artful yet genuinely episode of real life.

Great attention has been given to make the stage setting as elaborate and splendid as possible. The musical settings for the play are original and from the pen of a prominent composer, but the numbers are the late popular successes of the day.

The new theatre is located on the first floor of the new building, entrance being had direct from the street through a broad hallway. The interior has been handsomely decorated in blue and gold and will be lighted by myriads of electric bulbs located in the walls and ceilings to produce the best effects. The stage is very large and will accommodate all special sceenry. The scenery purchased for the theatre has all been placed in position and is extremely handsome.

Steam will be utilized for the purpose of heating the building, the boilers for the purpose being located in the cellar.

Retiring rooms for both ladies and gentlemen have been provided. The theatre will seat nearly four hundred people.

Sunday School Entertainment.

St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran Sunday school will celebrate Christmas Saturday evening beginning at seven o'clock, when a program of song and story will be carried out by the children.

CALLS IT "STEAL," WANTS INDIGNATION MEETING

Ex-Gov. Brown Would Hire Hall To Denounce Rush Plan.

Declaring that he alone was responsible for the nomination of Governor Crothers and that he is unwilling to allow the Governor to participate in the proposed "rush program" of the Democratic managers without being able to know how the public feels about it, ex-Gov. Frank Brown stated Sunday night that he is contemplating hiring a hall and offering it for use for a public indignation meeting against the plans.

"The time has come," he said, "to talk out in meeting. I'm going to talk. Too much secrecy defeated Mr. Gorman. Now some of the so-called leaders are at it again. From what we can understand the party of Democrats who met at Washington nearly two weeks ago decided tentatively to strip Mr. Goldsborough pretty well of the appointing power.

"None of them has said a word. The public is in the dark. More secrecy. Some people say that Attorney-General Straus is already preparing bills which will be passed to do the stripping. But nobody knows. The gentlemen no not wish to talk. They decline to discuss the situation. Public men down at Washington are talking of so delicate a question as complication with Russia, but the great statesmen of our Commonwealth prefer to remain silent on a subject which they must suppose is none of the public's business, else why the silence?

"The people here in Baltimore are unanimously against the rush program. It is sharp practice. There is honor even among thieves. What are the party managers going to do? Let them come out in the open and tell the people. Is Staaus preparing bills? If he is, what are they for? What do they do? Do they strip Goldsborough?

"Who made these suggestions? Who is responsible for them? Who was in favor of them, and who advised against the measures? Open the door; throw the searchlight on and let the public see. This is their business, it is the business of the men who think it's none of the public's business. The public will make it their business if somebody don't watch out.

"The Democratic party is being hurt every hour by the secrecy attached to this so-called program. The people are getting the idea that the party managers want to strip Mr. Goldsborough. What are the party managers going to do—wait until the Legislature opens and cram this program through after every delegate has left his home and the people can't very well communicate with them? Or are they going to wait until they count noses at Annapolis and then let the program die?

"If they don't come out in the open now, the people are going to assume, with a great deal of justice, that they waited to count noses and dropped the plan only when they saw they couldn't put it through. That's hurting the party. Let them come out now and say what they are going to do. If they are going to act decently and give Goldsborough what the people gave him with their votes and not try to steal it away from him, then all right. Tell the people that.

"If they are going to try to put the program through, then the public wants to know. I'm ready to hire a hall for an indignation meeting. I'll call it myself, or anybody else will call it. It don't make any difference, because all that is needed is a call and the people will come out. Overflowing meetings wouldn't hold them all. Baltimore is solidly against the proposition. But I want to know what's going to be done before I get the hall. Can anybody tell me?

"And if the meeting isn't enough to convince them, then I'll be glad to charter a train to take the people down to Annapolis, and we could flood Annapolis. How can the party people help seeing what a suicidal thing this whole business is?

"What does Governor Crothers think about this? Is he going to stick his tongue out to the people of Maryland and then shut the door. He will go out of office six days after the Legislature meets.

"It was on my persuasion that the city delegation on the day before the 1907 convention went over to Crothers. He needed it to be nominated. While he was flat on his back with tyhhoid fever it was on my representations in the city that he got his majority here. I feel responsible to the people for the administration, to some extent. And I am unwilling that Governor Crothers shall go into this thing blindfolded. Let him ask the people. The public will tell him what its thinks of the program.

"It's a steal," he concluded with emphasis. "That is the English of it."—Baltimore Sun.

Pure Ideals Would Eliminate Divorce

By Rev. HERBERT McCONNELL
Pastor of Sixth Memorial Church, Grand Rapids, Mich.

TEXT—And the Lord said unto Moses, "Wherefore thou criest unto me? Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward."

In the Christian life there is little promised that is easy. Men are continually being put to the test. Often men are placed in hard places, where the burden is found to be heavy. Moses was now carrying a heavy burden. He had led the children of Israel from bondage to freedom. Now it looked as though they would be taken back to bondage again. The thought of this was weighing heavily on Moses, and he cried unto God. The answer was: "Speak thou unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Because of the passing years the words have not lost their meaning. But in a larger sense they are being applied today.

The message of God to men is "Forward." It would be a shame for the present generation to be in the same degree of enlightenment as the generation that has just passed. We today have the accumulated thought which has led to the degree of enlightenment. As we have found so much the responsibility is laid upon us to move forward so that we by our lives will not retard the march of civilization. The Christian should ever have his or her face forward ready to march at any and all times.

We are placed into such a beautiful world one would think it would be hard for the children of men not to think of God. But we are forced to believe that there are many people who think very little of him who has given so much for us to enjoy. The great, broad fields bearing their precious fruits, the precious stones found in the bowels of the earth, the great forests furnishing the timbers for our great buildings and ships, the great mountain peaks.

All these things should remind us of God and his goodness and cause us to think much of him. The beauty of the sunrise and the glory of the setting thereof, the beauty of the stars, the songs of the birds, the lightning flash, all reveal to us the greatness of God. How strange that men can pass on with so little thought of God, who has been so kind and good.

The question we hear often is, "How much will you give?" By that question we mean how much will I get. We are very anxious about how much we will get. Ought it not be how much can I give? In this way see how much we can help the world onward. Suppose that the Apostle Paul had asked how much he was to have received for each journey he undertook. Would we have the privilege of reading of the church at Phillippi, Corinth and many other places? If Martin Luther had asked how much he was to receive for the work he was doing would we be honoring him today? The fact is this, that the men and women who accomplished most for the world have been most unselfish. They have put themselves into the great work and their influence has lived.

Too many people are not familiar with the Bible. This will apply to both those who belong to our churches and those who have not yet identified themselves with the church. There is a great lack in our knowledge of the Bible. If the Bible is our guide through this life, surely we ought to become familiar with that which we depend upon. Mr. Moody used to say, "look out in nature and see the hand of God. Look into the Bible and see God face to face." Some time ought to be given each day to reading the Bible, not that we ought to see how much we can cover at a glance, but how much we can understand of its contents.

We are reminded every day how important it is to live pure. If the pure life was the ideal, how much wrongdoing would be corrected. If the couple standing at the marriage altar would have the pure life as their ideal would it not lessen the number of divorces? Would we not have better homes? Would there not be fewer children to care for in the homes of charity? If the pure life was the ideal would we not have better society? How our churches would be filled with devoted men and women who are anxious to worship God—men and women who would be anxious to take a class in the Sunday school and faithfully each Sunday stand before their classes teaching the things of purity and God! Realizing that the greatest of all things are the things which can be given for the sake of those who are here by our side, the opportunity for labor is great and the field is wide.

Harmony.

No Victory Without Struggle.

There is no victory without a struggle. There is no painless holiness. The insipid, effortless life is not of God. That man is poor indeed who would be saved by grace and have nothing himself to do.—Rev. R. C. Stone, Presbyterian, Denver.

Temperance

HAVELOCK IN GRAPHIC STORY

General Sir Henry Tells of Generous Deeds of Soldiers Who Were Without Alcoholic Drink.

The following extract, which is taken from the "Narrative of the War in Afghanistan," by General Sir Henry Havelock, that gallant and glorious soldier of whom one of his contemporaries said that he was "every inch a soldier and every inch a Christian," provides very comforting and encouraging reading to those who have read the excesses of British and other troops of war in the old drinking days before the Army Temperance association was existent or even thought of.

Commenting on the forbearance of the troops at the taking of Ghuznee, in 1839, Sir Henry wrote:

"Though Ghuznee was carried by storm after a resistance stout enough to have roused the angry passions of the assailants, the Afghans were everywhere spared when they ceased to fight. Let me not be accused of foisting in unfairly a favorite topic, or attempting to detract from the merit of the troops, when I remark how great a degree the self-denial, mercy and generosity of the hour may be attributed to the fact that the European soldiers had received no spirits since July 8, and had found no liquor among the plunder of Ghuznee. No candid man of any military experience will deny that the character of the scene in the fortress and citadel would have been far different if the soldiers had entered the town primed with arrack, or if spirituous liquors had been discovered in the Afghan depots. Since, then, it has been proved that the troops can make forced marches of 40 miles, and storm a fortress in 25 minutes without the aid of rum, behaving after success with a forbearance and humanity unparalleled in history, let it not henceforth be argued that distilled spirits are an indispensable portion of a soldiers' ration."

This sane deduction of an experienced leader of troops in the field is quite in keeping with the findings of the present day, which amply witness the truth that troops fight better, march better, endure better, and are healthier, happier, and stronger without alcholic beverages.

BEER HABIT SHORTENS LIFE

No Man Who Drinks Much of the Malt Beverage Is the Equal of the Man Who Lets It Alone.

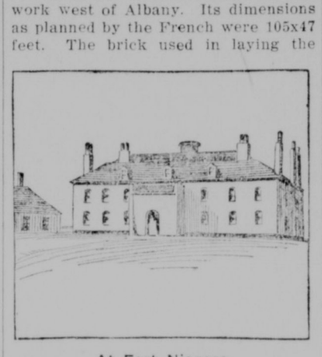
Dr. S. S. Lungren, one of the leading homeopathic physicians and surgeons in the country, who has been practicing in Toledo for a quarter of a century, says: "Beer drinking shortens life. Physicians decide that the heart's action is increased 13 per cent. in its efforts to throw off alcoholic stimulants introduced into the circulation. The result is easily figured out. The natural pulse is, say, 76 per minute. Multiply this by sixty, number of minutes in an hour, and by 24 for the hours of the day, and add 12 per cent. to the sum total, we will find that the heart has been compelled to do extra work during that time in throwing off the burden of a few drinks (4.8 ounces of alcohol) equal to lifting 15½ tons lifted one foot high. The alcohol in the beer causes a dilation of the superficial blood vessels, as it does in all of them. This gives the ruddy look, which is really an unhealthy congestion there and everywhere—heart, brain, stomach, lungs, liver, kidneys—it breaks down, weakens, enfeebles, invites attacks of disease, and makes recovery from any attack or injury precarious and difficult. Everywhere it is degeneration. No man who drinks much beer is the physical and mental equal of the man who abstains."

Love's Open Vision.

A loving soul is superior to circumstances and gets gain from adversities and disappointments. We are familiar with Paul's saying that "all things work together for good to them that love God;" but perhaps we do not realize as we should that this result is not an arbitrary reward, but is conditioned upon the characters of our hearts. The love of God cannot make all events blessed for us till it dwells within us. God loves everybody; but the blessedness of being served by all events can be apprehended only by those who love him. Love finds the combination that unlocks every treasury of good. To be spiritually minded is both life and peace. We need not be the slaves of circumstances, but make them what we will. Their results depend on what we are. In every world the loving heart will find heaven.

Can't Afford to Drink.

I never drink. I cannot do it on equal terms with others. It costs them only one day, but it costs me three; the first is sinning, the second is suffering, and the third is repenting.—Sterne.



Dangerous Prescription.

"In prescribing alcohol for the cure of a disease, you set up one a thousand times more dangerous than the one for which alcohol is prescribed."—Dr. C. J. Russell.

AN OLD FRENCH "CASTLE"

Fort Niagara at the Mouth of the Niagara River Has Interesting History.

Buffalo, N. Y.—No place in America possesses more interesting history than old Fort Niagara at the mouth of the Niagara river. The story of the possession by the Indians, then the French, British and Americans each in succession, and then by the British again and finally by the Americans, is intensely interesting. Many of the old buildings are still in an excellent state of preservation and are in constant use by the present occupants of Fort Niagara. The building shown in the illustration is the old French "mess" house or "castle," as it is now called. It was begun by the French in 1725 and finished in 1726. It is said to be the oldest existing masonry work west of Albany. Its dimensions as planned by the French were 105x47 feet. The brick used in laying the main floors was brought from France and much of the stone for the walls from Frontenac.

It is the tradition that the "castle," which is a very strong building, was erected by stratagem. A considerable, though not powerful, body of French troops had arrived at the point. Their force was inferior to the surrounding Indians. The French obtained consent of the Indians to build a wigwam and induced them with some of their own officers to engage in an extensive hunt. The materials had been made ready and while the Indians were absent the French built the "castle." When the hunting party returned at night the French had advanced so far with the work as to cover their faces and to defend themselves against the savages in case of any attack.

GRAPPLING A SAFETY PIN

How a Physician Removes One From the Throat of a Patient.

Chicago.—The modern physician is not obliged to guess at what is the matter with a Man's stomach or his bronchial tubes; if the proper instruments are at his disposal he can see for himself what the trouble is quite as well as if it were on the outer surface of the body. If his patient has swallowed a button or a pin the practitioner can see just where it is with a simple instrument, and can have it under his eye while he is extracting it.

Devices by which the interior cavities of the body could be seen were invented, if not actually used, over a century ago, but none could be really successful before the introduction of the electric light. Now improvements that are really marvelous are in the hands of the better surgeons and the interior of the esophagus and stomach are easily explored and doctored. The illustration shows the method of taking an open safety pin from the throat of a patient. The ring is slid past the pin, and the pin is then closed for removal.

Mother Dug Grave for Boys.

Argo, Colo.—Just as she finished digging a grave for her three boys, Mrs. Anna Covie was taken in charge and sent to the County hospital. She had borrowed a spade from a neighbor and told him she was going to dig a grave for her children and bury them alive. He watched her until the grave was ready, and then notified the police. The woman had dressed the boys for the occasion.

Canada at the Chicago Land Show

WILL MAKE A MAGNIFICENT EXHIBIT OF GRAINS AND GRASSES, VEGETABLES AND FRUIT.

A carload of grain in straw, grasses and other of the products of Western Canada arrived at Chicago the other day, and is now installed in the Coliseum, where the United States land and irrigation exposition is under way. Those who are interested in the "Back to the land movement" will find in the Canadian exhibit one of the best displays of the agricultural products of Western Canada that has ever been made. There are representative men there, who will be pleased to give the fullest information regarding the country.

The exhibit shows what can be done on the free grant lands of that country and most of the grain was produced on the farms of former residents of the United States who have taken advantage of the homestead lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The vegetable exhibit will attract a great deal of attention, and some marvelous potatoes, carrots, turnips, cabbage and cauliflower are shown.

It is true that the homestead area is being rapidly taken up and the bulk of that now to be had lies north of the Saskatchewan river in a portion of the country known as the park country. Here there is a large quantity of open prairie interspersed by beautiful groves of poplar and willow. Water is in abundance, hay is plentiful and consequently fodder for animals is right at hand. Those who have taken advantage of farming in these districts and watched the efforts of those in the prairie proper feel that they have the advantage of their brother, who is not able to secure fuel and the other conveniences of the park district on his own farm.

The crop conditions throughout Western Canada the past year have been generally good, and some wonderful crop yields of wheat, oats and barley are recorded. The Canadian Government, under whose auspices the exhibit spoken of is being made, is preparing reports on crops in the different Western Canada districts, and while these will not be ready for distribution at the land show commencing on the 18th of November and closing on Dec. 8th, application made to the Canadian Government agent nearest you will bring them to you as soon as they are published.

Blarney.

A Brooklyn woman who had spent a great deal of time in trying to teach her cook to make good drawn butter gravy, but to little avail, had occasion severely to rebuke the domestic in the presence of others. "Ellen," said she, sternly, "this gravy is absolutely bitter this morning."

"Indade I'm sorry, mum," came in lugubrious tones from the cook.

"How do you account for it, Ellen?" asked the mistress, persistent in her efforts to get at the botton of the matter.

"I can't say, mum, unless it were the tear I dropped in it, mum."

Explained.

An old lady, the customer of an Irish farmer, was rather dissatisfied with the watery appearance of her morning's cream and finally she complained very bitterly to him.

"Be aisy, mum," said Pat. "You see, the weather of late has been so terrific hot that it has scorched all the grass off the pasture land, and OI have been compelled to feed the poore bastes on water lillies!"—Ideas.

Well Disposed.

A well-known expert in cooking encountered trouble in a suburban community the other afternoon when she prepared to lecture to the Mothers' club. Her subject was "How to Cook." She began by telling how much a man appreciates good cooking, and then she proposed to give various recipes.

Among the first was one for cold slaw. "To have this best," began the lecturer, "take a good-hearted cabbage and—"

At this point a young matron interrupted. She was eager to get all the information possible. "Tell me, please," she spoke up, "how is one to know the disposition of a cabbage?"—Philadelphia Times.

A photographer tells as a joke on himself that a woman, accompanied by a little boy, came into his studio the other day. "I see that you take pickchers for four dollars a dozen this week, so I come fer mine. And I want this little boy took in the same pickcher with me." "Yes, madam—but, of course, we make an extra charge outside this special rate when two pictures are taken at once." "Oh," says the lady, "but I'll keep the boy in my lap. That's the way I do in the street cars, and nobody ever says anything."

Hats for Matrons

THERE is something about fringe which adapts it to millinery designed for older women particularly well. It is made of rich materials, as lace, chenille, satin and silk, and is carefully and compactly put together. Now that it is so fashionable, many hats are trimmed with it, and some of them entirely covered with the narrow silk fringes.

There are so many bonnet-like shapes this season that are worn by young and old alike, that there is a wider choice than heretofore for older women. These shapes are unusually softening and becoming and a very agreeable change from turban and toque shapes which have been worn for so many years. Older women should consider them with favor. They are small, with roomy and comfortable head sizes. They fit well down over the crown of the head and stay in place without difficulty. Worn with a face veil, they are very neat, as there is no chance for the hair to blow about. There is a very great variety of these shapes, their main differences being in the backs. Some of them turn down, some are brimless at the back and others turn smartly upward, allowing room for a low coiffure.

In Fig. 1 a very attractive shape is shown which may be had in felt, velvet or any of the materials used for winter hats. Velvet loops and chenille fringe headed by a band of roses, form the trimming. This shape is worn both by young and elderly women, with equal appropriateness.

More particularly designed for older women, the hat in Fig. 2 follows the lines of a bonnet. The crown is a soft puff of velvet and the trimming a plume effect made of fringe applied to quills and a fringed cabochon. This is a very new model, rich and dignified in effect. It is made in the darker shades of the rich colors which characterize this season's millinery.

PLANNED FOR THE AFTERNOON

Plain amethyst delaine is used for this very effective dress. The skirt just escapes the ground all round, and has a tunic simulated by a band of soft silk embroidery about five inches wide, sewn on by the upper edge only. The sides of the bodice are cut Magyar, and open in front to show a vest that is of finely tucked net at the top, and the material from bust to waist; lace insertian trims the lower edge of net, and embroidery the top of material. The waterfall revers are trimmed with embroidery; the trimming at back is arranged to form a deep V, that is filled in to match the vest.

Materials required: Five yards 46 inches wide, embroidery for trimming, ½ yard tucked net.

LITTLE POINTS TO REMEMBER

Matters of Etiquette That Never Should Be Absent From the Memory.

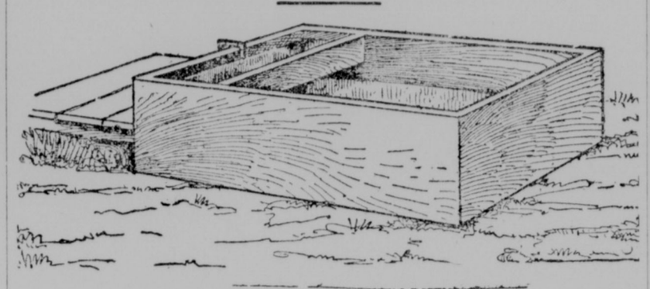
When the luncheon guests are ladies exclusively the hostess leads the way to the dining room, where places are chosen at will or are fixed by dainty plate favors with the names inscribed on one side.

Many hostesses prepare for an informal musical and literary program following luncheon.

The hostess driving with another woman in a closed carriage allows her guest to take the choice of seats by giving her precedence in entering the carriage.

Only the most delicate scent is allowed on a lady's stationery, and it is better to dispense with perfumery in this line altogether. If used a sachet is introduced into the box in which the stationary is kept, the scent being the same as that affected by the owner.

Black borders of equal width on stationery cards are used by the widow as long as she wears mourning.



Postal cards are only proper for announcing meetings or the most impersonal messages.

White Serge for Winter.

For early winter wear white suits of cloth, corduroy or heavy ribbed serge are very smart. The coats are cut on Empire lines, with a seam just above the waist line, and immense revers and large flap pockets give the suit a youthful appearance. To be worn with one of these smart suits, recently ordered for a miss of fifteen, a large soft hat of white silk beaver, with a fetching flat tailored bow of Persian lamb as its sole trimming, was chosen. The handsome frill of lace that finished the front of the coat was caught by another bit of Persian lamb.

COMBINATION TANK AND TROUGH FOR SHEEP, HORSES AND CATTLE

Illustration Shows Convenient Addition Which Will Eliminate One Great Difficulty and Will be Found of Much Value Where Water Is Pumped by Hand, Engine or Wind Mill.

Drinking Trough for Sheep in Water Tank.

Frequently a simple method of watering stock will mean much on many farms, especially where horses, cattle and sheep drink from the same trough. Large tanks do not permit sheep to drink unless the tank is full, therefrom, if cattle and horses lower the water in the tank so it is only a quarter of half full, the sheep will be unable to reach it. The illustration shows a convenient addition, says the Orange Judd Farmer. This will be found of great value where either water is pumped by hand, by gasoline engine or wind power.

A small trough is sent in the end into which the water is pumped, and as it overflows it runs into the larger tank. A raised platform at this end will make it possible for sheep to reach into the tank. Where hand power is required and the tank is nearly empty, without this convenience it would be necessary to pump the tank nearly full in order that sheep might reach the water, whereas by this method they will be able to drink at once. The same is true in the use of wind power. As soon as the pump begins to work, the sheep have access to the water.

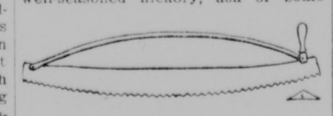
This method is used with great success in Conedale farm in Winona county, Minn. In this case the water source is a large spring and the power a couple of hydraulic rams. These rams work night and day, year in and year out, and the inflow is adjusted as shown in the illustration. Of course, there is a continual flow of water into the tank, but there is an outlet which permits the water to run from this tank into another one in another yard at a lower level. Though simple in construction this attachment will mean a great deal in watering stock.

BEST WAY TO TOP DRESS GRAIN

Should be Done During the Fall Months to Afford Proper Protection for Roots of Crop.

If grain is to be top dressed, the work should be done in the fall, as it is very necessary to have the grain deep-rooted with sufficient top to protect the roots. Haul and spread direct from wagon or cart when the ground is dry enough to haul over. The manure should be fine and well rotted.

Clean, mellow ground should be seeded to grass at the time of drilling and sown to clover in the spring. The early seeded grain nearly always gives the best yield. Rather thin land drilled to grain should be top dressed with long strawy manure. If manure cannot be had spread straw or leaf mold from the woods. A thin covering will protect the grain and grass, and when rotted will help to keep the soil moist and cool during the hot weather. Straw is worth fully $1.50 to $2.00 per ton to spread over the grain. All straw not wanted for feeding and bedding should be used for top-dressing grain and grass. Where the land is not too rolling and the snows are not too heavy, there is no better way to use the winter manure than to haul it out, and when the weather is suitable and the ground is in condition to haul over and spread it on either the grain or grass fields. Much of the value of manure is wasted when it is piled in the yard, exposed to heavy rains and snows. There is litttle loss when spread over sod land.



CROSSCUT SAW IS VERY HANDY

Where Logs of Medium Size Are to be Cut Implement Shown Will be Found Convenient.

Crosscut Saw for One.

It is often convenient to have a crosscut saw that one man can use for cutting medium sized logs, says the Orange Judd Farmer. The one shown herewith fills the bill very well. It consists of a blade, a handle, set as shown, and a bow re-enforced with wire around it at various points.

Preferably this bow should be of well-seasoned hickory, ash or some other tough, but not too heavy, wood. It is not necessary to have very much spring in the bow, although some spring adds rigidity and tension to the saw, which can thus be run more easily. The most important points for the winding are toward the ends, where the pole is split by sawing to admit blade. The pole should be only a few inches longer than the saw when laid out straight.

White Corn Is Best.

Experiments carried on at the Missouri experiment station during the past four years show that Boone county white corn is the best variety for general use in that state. The next in order below this are Commercial White, St. Charles White and Reeds Yellow Dent. These varieties are doubtless well adapted to other southwestern states.

NEED OF LIME ON SOME SOILS

There Is but One Sure Way of Making Known the Fault and That Is by Practical Trial.

There is only one sure way of determining whether a soil needs lime and that is by trial. An application of lime over a whole field would be a waste of both time and money if the field were not in need of such an application. It is suggested that the farmer who has not already proved for himself whether his soils need lime would better conduct a few simple experiments at different points on his farm.

A few barrels of lime or a few tons of limestone would not cost a great deal and the labor of treating a strip with lime or ground limestone here and there across different fields in which crops were to be grown or so treat a small area here and there, at different points in the fields in which crops are to be grown, would involve but a small amount of labor. These areas should be very carefully located and marked and the results of the applications should be carefully studied on the succeeding crops. It is possible that the effects, good and bad, may be easily apparent. It is possible that the effects can be discovered only by carefully cutting and weighing the crops from portions of the treated areas and comparing them with the crops produced upon equal adjacent areas.

Lime should not be applied to manure piles nor to the litter in the barn.

Lime should not be applied to land being prepared for potatoes.—Circular 11, Michigan Experiment Station.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1911.

A MERRY Christmas and a Happy New Year to all our readers.

THERE was an ominous pause in Russian government circles at St. Petersburg Tuesday following the abrogation of the treaty of 1832 by the United States. The situation was discussed with much bitterness Tuesday evening at the ceremonies in connection with the Czar's birthday. Officially the government maintains a dead silence. The dominant nationalist party is busy preparing an anti-American campaign, raking up such charges as the allegation that American interference prevented Russia ending the war in victory with Japan, and using recent utterances of prominent Americans against Russia, to arouse a patriotic defiance.

WHERE DOES CREDIT FOR INCREASED INCOME BELONG?

A Gubernatorial message is necessarily more or less a political document, and may be expected to claim credit for everything in sight. Governor Crothers, nevertheless, goes a little too far when he appropriates for his own administration the glory of the State's increased income.

When a State's income is derived largely from taxes on gross receipts of public service corporations an increase in it is apt to be due to increase in business prosperity, not to efficiency in the political administration of the State. When it is derived from direct taxation of property, credit for an increase can be claimed by the State only when the returns show a greater care in valuation or collection. The increase to a State's income obtained by raising the tax rate from 16 to 22 cents is not necessarily cause for congratulation.

The tax receipts for 1911 were $1,245,675.59, or about 18 per cent, in excess of those for 1910. The tax rate, at the same time was increased by 37.5 per cent. This accounts for most of the added income. The natural growth of business in the State will account for the balauce. Where, then, do the Governor and the State Tax Commissioner come in?

Devotion to his work on the part of Colonel Schley, or insistence by the Governor that the valuation of corporation property should be standardized at something like its real worth, might have led to a report for which the highest praise could be claimed. But there has been far too much evidence of looseness in the administration of the Tax Department for the people to see in this increase of $185,000 in receipts anything more than a public contribution to the State's expenses of funds at least a large part of which should have been raised from the corporations.

Why it is Now Charles Town.

Senator Chilton, of West Virginia, spent Friday at Charles Town, where he spoke to the Red Men. Mr. Chilton is the first speaker to appear in Charles Town since the Postoffice Department broke the name of Charlestown into two words. There is an interesting fact in connection with the fixing of Charles Town. Charles P. Granfield, First Assistant Postmaster-General, conducted a little invesnigation to ascertain the extent of the confusion in West Virginia over "Charleston" and "Charlestown," and he found that in one week 3,000 letters addressed to "Charleston" went to "Charlestown."

After the investigation the department changed "Charlestown," to "Charles Town," and "Charles Town', it must be.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS FAIR

Local Organization Will Conduct Such Three Nights Next Week.

At the rooms of the local lodge Knights of Pythias, First National Bank building in Oakland, the organization will conduct a fair on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday nights of next week, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the uses of the organization in fitting up the Knights of Pythias building which is now nearing completion.

Each night during the fair supper will be served by the wives and daughters of the members, a change of menu being contemplated for each evening. In addition to the supper fancy articles will be on sale and a fortune telling booth will be in charge of one of the prominent young ladies of the town.

A liberal patronage should be accorded the Knights.

INAUGURAL TO BE BRIEF.

Mr. Goldsborough Studying Problems Which he will Discuss.

Governor-elect Goldsborough, who has spent the last several days in this city and Philadelphia, returned to his home in Cambridge yesterday afternoon. He went over to Philadelphia Saturday to attend to some business of the Pennsylvania Railroad, of which he formerly was counsel and from which he resigned when he was nominated for Governor.

With the near approach of the legislative session the Governor-elect expects to remain close at home preparing his inaugural address and studying the problems which will come before the General Assembly. He will be inaugurated on Wednesday, January 10, one week after the assembling of the Legislature.

While he has not begun his inaugural address, he has said it will not be a lengthy document. He will do no more than outline some of the more important governmental problems as they appear to him and repeat his promises of giving the State a businesslike, economic administration.

Following the inaugural address the oath will be administered to him by Chief Judge Boyd, of the Court of Appeals. The Governor will then announce his Secretary of State, which position consensus of opinion gives to Robert P. Graham, probably Mr. Goldsborough's closest political friend.

The inauguration promises to be one of the most elaborate in years. Republicans throughout the State believe it is a fitting time for a demonstration and the attendance will probably exceed that at any previous inauguration. Marching clubs from nearly every county in the State expect to take part. Practically every party organization in the city will turn out.

Former Sheriff John J. Hanson, chairman of the City Committee, has been chosen chief marshal of the parade. He will secure some suitable drill hall, probably the Fourth Regiment Armory, where the organizations may practice evolutions. The details for the ceremony will be in the hands of State Chairman John B. Hanna, Collector of Internal Revenue.—Monday's Baltimore Sun.

O. H. S. Notes.

The O. H. S. has a second-hand organ for sale.

The committee, composed of Mr. Deffinbaugh, Prof. Sanner, Miss Arnold, Prof. Robinson and Miss Grant, have chosen from the four propositions (including the Steiff, Steger, Crown and Winter), the Winter piano. We hope to have it here by Friday.

Joseph Rathbun is still missed from the sophomore class on account of sickness.

We are glad to have Walter Falkenstein with us again.

The exercise will begin promptly at 1.15 p. m., Friday, December 22nd. Dr. Legge will address the Literary Society on his trip abroad. Patrons and friends of the High School are cordially invited to be present.

The following poem was dedicated to the O. H. S. by Prof. Bender. It will be recited at the literary exercises by Elizabeth Chance.

FESTAL DAY.

All hail this happy festal day,
For unto us a Son was born,
Whose Father's love, the sages say,
Still longs to save the world's forlorn.

'Twas in the city, Bethlehem,
The queenly virgin did give birth
To One who is the Prince of men,
The Son of God and Lord of earth.

From kingly blaze of majesty,
From royal courts of endless day,
He came to earth with us to be,
To live with us in mortal clay.

Glad joy and peace He thus did bring
To earth from all eternity;
For wise men heard the angels sing
The songs of blessed liberty.

He came to set His children free,
To aid each one to win the goal;
He came to help his children see
The worth of every human soul.

O Muse Divine bequeath to all
The gift of love to worship Him,
Who loves to save us when we fall,
Who crave to heal each broken limb.

O make each human heart o'er flow,
O loosen ev'ry tongue with praise
For Him who helps us all to grow,
In peace and love and righteous ways.

If body, mind and active soul
Unite to serve both man and God,
No fen, nor crag, nor stormy shoal
Can thwart the path in which we trod.

Decide today to serve this King,
Who gave His life that we might live;
No greater gift can any bring
Than cheerful service all can give.

CHRISTMAS GREETING.

This is a time of the mighty upheaval,
General frenzy and tragic dispair;
Christmas is here with its annual evil—
Bring forth your paesents and give up your share.

Money is tight and we need all we've gotten—
Presents come high and we've nothing to spare;
So, if you think that these verses are rotten—
That is the reason I'm peddling hot air

Everything free, I would willingly offer--
All kinds of pleasure, good wishes and such—
But when it comes to depleting my coffer,
Everyone knows that it's asking too much.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MR. DANIEL MOSSER.

After a brief illness from a malady that had been increasing for years, Mr. Daniel Mosser departed this life in the Home Sanatorium, Oakland, Maryland, December 10th, 1911. He was born about fifty-eight years ago at Accident, then a part of Allegany county, was a son of the late Christian Mosser, and is survived by two sons, three daughters, three brothers and three sisters.

Before obtaining the age of majority he moved with his parents from Accident to Swanton where the residue of his life was spent as a law-observing citizen and a useful member of the community growing up about him. His first wife, Miss Ann Barnthouse, the mother of his six children, died more than twenty years ago; his second wife was a daughter of Mr. Matthias Barker, was a victim of declining health and died within a few years after their marriage. From early manhood until late in life, Mr. Mosser was associated, in a variety of forms, with the lumber business and interest, but in more recent years confined his energies to the clearing and culture of his farm near Swanton.

Mr. Mosser was a man of generous heart and warm impulses, a ready friend to all of his fellows, responding cheerfully to calls of either duty or fidelity.

By an inscrutable disposition of providence a cloud was destined to gather over this man's life too deep for human penetration but for the lights falling through the rifts over the believer's way. Sunday afternoon, October 24th, 1890, a sweet, cloudless autumnal evening, his youngest child, Grover Cleveland Mosser, less than five years old, aimlessly wandered from its parents' home out into the mounnain wilds beyond the reach of affections' call or the effort of man to trace. The agony of grief and pending fate of the lost child form a picture too cruelly terrible for either reiteration or revival. The heart of every home was reached and every inmate was had for the search. Hundreds from Garrett and beyond the borders of Garrett flocked to the scene and joined in the anxious, heart straining search day and night, exploring every path and tangle possible to the little wanderer without finding a track or sign of the course he had taken. On the 24th day of April, 1891, six months to a day from the evening of departure, to a group of men passing by, a simple incident disclosed the body, thoroughly preserved lying in a glade, likely less than two hundred yards below the residence of Mr. Richard Custer. The harrowing oppression of this relentless strain wasted the frame and broke the heart of the mother. No one can say, no one can know; but the child may have been lost that the mother might be Found, for she died in the rejoicing declaration "my child is calling me to heaven." In the beat of all this dreadful temptest, Mr. Mosser stood as a strong oak bending without breaking in the sweep of the gale.

Tuesday, December the 12th, 1911, after impressive services conducted in the church by the Rev. Mr. Johnson of the United Brethren church, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Bernard of the Methodist church, a large concourse of friends and relatives followed the remains of this man whose life had been so strangely checkered to its final resting place on his farm, and the spot seems to be well chosen in a cemetery of but three—that child, that mother and that father.

RELLIM.

CLARENCE S. HARDESTY.

In the midst of life we are in death. How true this is was proven when Mr. Clarence S. Hardesty, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Hardesty, of Deer Park, left home for his work on Sunday, December 10, and in a few hours was dashed into eternity by being struck by a train or the B. & O. R. R. He was an estimable young man, being just a little over twenty-three years old and honest and well liked by everyone who know him. It is sad for the old to die and leave those who love them, but for a young man with all the promise of a useful life ahead of him it is doubly sad. Yet God in His wisdom knows best. He never makes a mistake. It was for some good cause he was taken away. When we are prepared to go to death it is no hardship to the one who suffers it whether it comes suddenly or not. Therefore be ye also ready, for ye know not in what hour your Lord doth come.

The young wife so quickly bereaved of the one who had promised to protect her through life has our deepest sympathy and prayers that as the years go by that she may understand that God smote her in love and that what has seemed to be so terrible was in reality a blessing. She may not understand now, but "When the mists shall roll in splendor from the beauty of the hills,

And the sunshine warm and tender fall in glory on the rills"

she will understand. May God also comfort the bereaved father and mother and relatives and lead them in the paths of light until they stand in his presence.

Davis Steel Ranges.

The popularity of the DAVIS STEEL RANGE is constantly increasing. During the last twelve months the firm has placed one hundred Ranges, mostly to home trade, and are now putting it on the market, through the general stove dealers, shipping direct from the factory.

Their patent grate and liners have proven to be beyond question the most durable made. During the past five years, they have not furnished $5 worth of repairs, and some of the stoves have had hard use.

Mr. C. S. Davis, the patentee, has added some more new and valuable improvements, in connection with those they already have, using an over draught to the firebox, through round holes, that are placed in front of the liners, near the top, thus forming what you might term a hotblast firebox, that takes less fuel, burns up the gases, has a much better combustion, and adds materially to the life of the firebox.

This led to further experiments, and it was found that ventilated lids over the firebox could be used. By making the lids full of round holes, thus adding a downward draught to the fire, surrounding the firebox with cold air draught, from all four sides, enabling the user to always see the condition of the fire, without taking the lids off, and to cook on top of the ventilated lids instead of over the fire, with the lids off. The improvement is not only a novelty but practical.

Drawings have already been made by the patentee's attorneys for these new features, and practical demonstrations can be seen at any time, at the Davis Hardware Store of a full line of Ranges, with all the late improvements, that they are offering at prices from $28.50 to $45.00, according to size, style and finish.

The Davis combination Gas and Coal Range has been completed, and for simplicity of construction, completeness, convenience and durability is in a class by itself.

The two hole Gas Hot Plate of this Range can be attached to any of the Davis Coal Ranges when so desired.

Schools to Close.

The public schools throughout the county will close Friday afternoon for the holidays.

Each Christmas witnesses some advance in peace, good-will and joy, for, whatever may be said to the contrary, the world is steadily improving. Nations are drawn into close association with each other as they come under the influence of Christian civilization. They may still be armed to the teeth, but they do not fly at each others throats so readily as they did in former days. A few diplomats sitting together and amicably arranging arbitration treaties now take the place of generals and armies. And the work, when it is done, leaves no sad memories of slaughtered men, wasted countries, broken hearts and untold misery.

SYNOPSIS.

Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. The dance leads to heavy gambling.

CHAPTER I.—Continued.

"I still got that hunch." Kearns fingered his cards a long time. "And I'll play it, but you've got to know how I stand. There's my steamer, the Bella—worth twenty thousand if she's worth an ounce. There's Sixty-Mile with five thousand in stock on the shelves. And you know I got a sawmill coming in. It's at Linderman now, and the scow is building. Am I good?"

"Dig in; you're sure good," was Daylight's answer. "And while we're about it, I may mention casual that I got twenty thousand in Mac's safe, there, and there's twenty thousand more in the ground on Moosehide. You know the ground, Campbell. Is they that-all in the dirt?"

"There sure is, Daylight."

"How much does it cost now?" Kearns asked.

"Two thousand to see."

"We'll sure hump you if you-all come in," Daylight warned him.

"It's an almighty good hunch," Kearns said, adding his slip to the growing heap. "I can feel her crawlin' up and down my back."

"I ain't got a hunch, but I got a tolerable good hand," Campbell announced, as he slid in his slip; "but it's not a raising hand."

"Mine is," Daylight paused and wrote. "I see that thousand and raise her the same old thousand."

The Virgin, standing behind him, then did what a man's best friend was not privileged to do. Reaching over Daylight's shoulder, she picked up his hand and read it, at the same time shielding the faces of the cards close to his chest. What she saw were three queens and a pair of eights, but nobody guessed what she saw. Every player's eyes were on her face as she scanned the cards, but no sign did she give. She laid the hand face down again on the table and slowly the lingering eyes withdrew from her, having learned nothing.

MacDonald smiled benevolently. "I see you, Daylight, and I hump this time for two thousand. How's that hunch, Jack?"

"Still a-crawling, Mac. You got me now, but that hunch is a rip-snorter persuadin' sort of a critter, and it's my plain duty to ride it. I call for three thousand. And I got another hunch; Daylight's going to call, too."

"He sure is," Daylight agreed, after Campbell had thrown up his hand. "He knows when he's up against it, and he plays accordin'. I see that two thousand, and then I'll see the draw."

In a dead silence, save for the low voices of the three players, the draw was made. Thirty-four thousand dollars were already in the pot, and the play possibly not half over. To the Virgin's amazement, Daylight held up his three queens, discarding his eights and calling for two cards. And this time not even she dared look at what he had drawn. She knew her limit of control. Nor did he look. The two new cards lay face down on the table where they had been dealt to him.

"Got enough," was the reply.

"You can draw if you want to, you know," Kearns warned him.

"Nope; this'll do me."

Kearns himself drew two cards, but did not look at them. Still Harnish let his cards lie.

"I never bet in the teeth of a pat hand," he said slowly, looking at the saloon keeper. "You-all start her rolling, Mac."

MacDonald counted his cards carefully, to make doubly sure it was not a foul hand, wrote a sum on a paper slip, and slid it into the pot, with the simple utterance:

"Five thousand."

Kearns, with every eye upon him, looked at his two-card draw, counted the other three to dispel any doubt of holding more than five cards, and wrote on a betting slip.

"I see you, Mac," he said, "and I raise her a little thousand just so as to keep Daylight out."

The concentrated gaze shifted to Daylight. He likewise examined his draw and counted his five cards.

"I see that six thousand, and I raise her five thousand . . . just to try and keep you out, Jack."

"And I raise you five thousand just to lend a hand at keeping Jack out," MacDonald said in turn.

His voice was slightly husky and strained, and a nervous twitch in the corner of his mouth followed speech.

Kearns was pale, and those who looked on noted that his hand trembled as he wrote his slip. But his voice was unchanged.

"I lift her along for five thousand," he said.

Daylight was now in the center. The kerosene lamps above flung high lights from the rash of sweat on his forehead. The bronze of his cheeks was darkened by the accession of blood. His black eyes glittered and his nostrils were distended and eager. They were large nostrils, tokening his descent from savage ancestors who had survived by virtue of deep lungs and generous air-passages. Yet, unlike MacDonald, his voice was firm and customary, and, unlike Kearns his hand did not tremble when he wrote.

"I call, for ten thousand," he said. "Not that I'm afraid of you-all, Mac. It's that hunch of Jack's."

"I hump his hunch for five thousand just the same," said MacDonald. "I had the best hand before the draw, and I still guess I got it."

"Mebbe this is a case where a hunch after the draw is better'n the hunch before," Kearns remarked; wherefore duty says, 'Lift her, Jack, lift her,' and so I lift her another five thousaid."

Daylight leaned back in his chair and gazed up at the kerosene lamps while he computed aloud:

"I was in nine thousand before the draw, and I saw and raised eleven thousand—that makes thirty. I'm only good for ten more." He leaned forward and looked at Kearns. "So I call er five thousand."

"You can raise if you want," Kearns answered. "Your dogs are good for five thousaid in this game."

"Nary dawg. You-all can win my dust and dirt, but nary one of my dawgs. I just call."

The saloon keeper finally spoke:

"If anybody else wins, they'll have to take a mortgage on the Tivoli."

The two other players nodded.

"So I call, too."
